Despite the complaint of delays which we have heard from the hon. Member for Upper Bann, my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State and his predecessor have managed to maintain a steady programme of legislation for Northern Ireland, running at an average of about 20 Orders in Council a year. As those orders are the equivalent of Parliamentary Bills, that is a pretty good record.

We are not complacent about legislation for Northern Ireland. We recognise that the present legislative system is not perfect. To make the point again for the best emphasis that I can manage, we want that unsatisfactory situation to end as soon as possible. But it is up to the hon. Gentleman's colleagues and friends and members of the political institutions of Northern Ireland to get together and agree upon a different and better way forward.

When they can so agree collectively upon a way forward for the better government of Northern Ireland, but at any rate governed by people with a direct representational interest there and much more local knowledge than we can ever have however hard we might work at it, the convenient way to return that power to whatever assembly, body—call it what one will—that is set up for Northern Ireland would be with a body of coherent and non-contradictory legislation. That is why we use the process whereby we build upon the corpus of legislation that existed before we had, perforce, to take it away through direct rule.

That is our wish and that is why, while acknowledging that the local elections have yet to be concluded, my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland will be working as hard as he can in the coming months to get people of good will together to decide how we can put an end to the anomaly. We are not satisfied with the system, but, for the reasons I have given, it is desirable and necessary to continue in this less than perfect way. If one were to follow the hon. Gentleman's suggestion and try to legislate here under the British system, we would be creating anomalies, differences and variations which would then have to be put right.

Northern Ireland must have a coherent and consecutive corpus of law so that, if and when the day comes, which the hon. Gentleman says that he wishes for, when he will take some part in his own assembly in his own part of the United Kingdom—[Interruption.] He would, hopefully, want an assembly in his part of the United Kingdom with directly elected representatives, and he will want that to work. One reason why we keep this less than perfect system with the affirmative and negative resolutions is that no Government of any party have acknowledged or want to acknowledge that that day cannot come. Until it comes, we are compelled to retain the present system.

Mr. Trimble: The argument that the Minister has elaborated during the past few minutes is a bad one., There is no separate Northern Ireland statute book. Over the years, Northern Ireland has been legislated for by five different Parliaments. Before the Northern Ireland Parliament was created in 1920, this House enacted a separate corpus of legislation for Northern Ireland. There is no need to keep the Order in Council procedure to achieve that. Enacting legislation in the proper way will not change the corpus of Northern Ireland legislation in the way that the Minister says.

Mr. Mates: The hon. Gentleman is right in saying that there is no separate statute book, but, since the days of the Act that he mentioned, there is a consecutive logical body of law which is not contradictory and which does not have the thousands of anomalies that would arise if we transferred the British legislation straight across. The same applies to Scotland. There is a different body of law there. It is maintained sometimes by Bill and sometimes by order, and sometimes, for perfectly good reasons, Scotland does not follow England and Wales. Those are decisions that we have to take.

As I have explained, it is desirable and necessary to legislate separately for Northern Ireland on those matters which it is hoped to return to the control of new political institutions in due course, not least because this facilitates the preservation of a separate body of powers for any such new institutions.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at twenty-eight minutes past Ten o'clock.

Orders of the Day

Sexual Offences Bill

Not amended (in the Standing Committee), considered.

Clause 1

ABOLITION OF PRESUMPTION OF SEXUAL INCAPACITY

9.34 am

Mr. Harry Cohen (Leyton): I beg to move amendment No. 1, in page 1, line 6, leave out "(whether natural or unnatural)".

I congratulate the hon. Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes) on successfully steering the Bill through Second Reading and Committee. Indeed, it jumped the queue for private Members' Bills and, after today's debate, it may be considered in the other place. The Bill has not been considered as closely as it should have been; it has slipped through and there is scope for closer scrutiny of it.

The Bill's intention is correct. In law, children under 10 are incapable of committing a crime and, under common law, youngsters under 14 are incapable of sexual intercourse. In reality, that clearly is not true. Girls under 14 give birth and we heard recently about an assault by a 13-year-old on a teacher; more frequently we hear about children sexually assaulting other children. The Bill rightly recognises that such offences can occur and that the common law should apply to them.

The short title of the Bill is significant. It proposes to

"Abolish the presumption of criminal law that a boy under the age of 14 is incapable of sexual intercourse."

That refers to sexual intercourse, yet clause 1 refers to

"The presumption of criminal law that a boy under the age of 14 is incapable of sexual intercourse (whether natural or unnatural)".

The words "natural or unnatural" are the subject of my amendment and the hon. Member for Harlow owes the House an explanation. The words must be considered in the context of sexual intercourse—penetration. The assumption must be that heterosexual sex is natural, and gay sex—homosexual sex—is unnatural.

Mr. Jerry Hayes (Harlow) indicated dissent.

Mr. Cohen: The hon. Gentleman shakes his head, but he owes the House an explanation. The clause applies only to sexual intercourse. It is insulting to the millions of homosexuals who practise gay sex to have that practice described as "unnatural". Millions of people around the world will find it insulting because "natural" and "unnatural" are the wrong terms to use; they are much too wide. When I suggested that the hon. Gentleman was using the term "unnatural" to describe homosexual sex, he shook his head. Perhaps he can list what he means by the terms "natural" and "unnatural", especially "unnatural" if he does not mean it to be applied to gay sex. The House could then consider each of the hon. Gentleman's suggestions in turn. As the Bill stands, the term "unnatural" has too wide a scope.

I hesitate to say that it is a habit of the Conservatives, but it is part of their political approach that they tend to do it more——

Lady Olga Maitland (Sutton and Cheam): Do what?

Mr. Cohen: They regard things as "natural" or "unnatural". I am talking about the terms, not whether they practise gay sex more, although that is perhaps what the hon. Lady thought. It is part of their political approach to use the terms "natural" and "unnatural", but such use is inappropriate.

Such usage allows a generous leap to be made: from talking about unnatural practices, which presumably means unnatural intercourse, one is soon talking about their being practised by unnatural people. That involves only a short leap, and there is a danger that judges could interpret the Bill in that way.

Males could be considered the more aggressive gender, in an historical context and perhaps also today in view of current crimes. There is and has been a great deal of rape, but is it to be considered natural because men carry it out? That is a dangerous argument. We legislate against rape not because it is unnatural but because it is socially unacceptable behaviour and we want to protect women from it. The use of the terms "natural" and "unnatural" is wrong in this context because they could be used to argue that such aggressive behaviour is natural. The hon. Gentleman is confusing the terms with acceptable and unacceptable behaviour, and that is my main beef with him. He should remove from clause 1 the four words in brackets.

We should remember that the Bill is about children. As the House will know, experts believe that the great majority of children go through a phase of homosexual behaviour of one form or another. It is usually an experimental or mild form, and the children often grow up heterosexual.

Mr. Piers Merchant (Beckenham): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Cohen: I shall in a moment. However, it is wrong that children should be branded as practising unnatural behaviour.

Mr. Merchant: A number of things that the hon. Gentleman has said have puzzled me, and I am not sure that I have followed the drift of his argument. I cannot let him get away with his last assertion. Recent studies have shown that the proportion of men who have been involved in homosexual activity is very small. Some of the latest figures suggest that that applies to between only 1 and 5 per cent., so how on earth can the hon. Gentleman say that the majority of people have been involved in homosexual activity?

Mr. Cohen: Different experts have different views. Studies have shown that children go through a homosexual phase, but I said that it was a mild form and part of experimenting with sexuality generally.

9.45 am

Lady Olga Maitland: Could the hon. Gentleman provide evidence that the majority of young people indulge in homosexual activity? What are the sources and cases that he can cite to support such a sweeping statement?

Mr. Cohen: I do not think that I said it was the majority, but I leave it to the experts to argue about that. The hon. Lady is coming close to saying that children do not experiment with sexuality, but they do. Any schoolteacher or anyone who works with children will tell her that children experiment with different forms of sexuality. One of my objections to the Bill is that they would be branded as unnatural if they did not conform to the hon. Gentleman's idea.

Lady Olga Maitland: Has the hon. Gentleman had any meetings or discussions with teachers on this issue?

Mr. Cohen: I have met teachers to discuss all sorts of issues. Many teachers have told me that they favour sex education in schools precisely because of children's experimentation. As I have said many time before, I am shocked that some Conservatives Members often block sex education for dogmatic reasons. If they had their way and if sex education in schools were stopped, there would be no information at all.

Mr. Nigel Evans (Ribble Valley): Has the hon. Gentleman seen the new draft circular on sex education issued by the Department for Education? If he had, he would not have made that statement.

Mr. Cohen: That circular was issued only after considerable pressure had been applied. Before the recess, I made a speech in the House, adding to that pressure. The circular was greeted with howls of protest, not from Labour Members but from the Conservative lobby opposed to sex education. The Conservatives' objections were quoted in the press, so the hon. Gentleman should be talking to his colleagues.

Lady Olga Maitland: Does the hon. Gentleman agree that the advice being proferred by the Government became controversial only when a Minister was asked on "The World at One" whether the Government would consider making condoms available in schools? It had nothing to do with the advice in the circular.

Madam Deputy Speaker (Dame Janet Fookes): Order. Before the debate continues, I must point out that we are debating an amendment, not a wider issue, which this threatens to become.

Mr. Cohen: I have no desire to make it a wider issue. As I am always helpful to Conservative Members, I have been trying to respond to their points.

Mr. James Couchman (Gillingham): I do not seek to challenge your advice, Madam Deputy Speaker——

Madam Deputy Speaker: I am glad to hear it.

Mr. Couchman: I am always obedient in these matters. I seek your advice, Madam Deputy Speaker. The Bill was given a Second Reading on the nod and there was only 20 minutes of debate in Committee. A number of us have considerable worries about the Bill. Is it your preferred option that we should reserve the expression of those worries for a lengthy Third Reading debate or will you be fairly tolerant with our casting our comments reasonably widely during our debate on the two groups of amendments?

Madam Deputy Speaker: I am concerned only with relevance. How long that may take is not for me to judge.

Mr. Cohen: I always try to abide by your rulings, Madam Deputy Speaker. I do not seek to prolong the debate and I am trying to keep to the amendment. The intervention by the hon. Member for Sutton and Cheam (Lady Olga Maitland) may have extended the debate a little, but my initial comments related purely to the amendment and to my wish to remove the words "whether natural or unnatural". Again, I call on the hon. Member for Harlow to say exactly what he means by those words. I believe that he has confused those terms with the concept of socially acceptable or socially unacceptable behaviour. That is what worries me most. I am worried about how judges or others will interpret the terms when dealing with children. Children may be branded as practising unnatural behaviour and I do not believe that that is right. I shall say more about the other implications when I speak to anmendment No. 2.

I am the promoter of a similar Bill, the Sexual Offences (Amendment) Bill, which is far more extensive than this Bill. It deals especially with the issue of rape. My Bill would make male rape a specific criminal offence for the first time. It would do that simply by changing the definition of the victim from "woman" to "person" and it would thus allow men to be considered in law to be the victims of rape.

In this Bill, we are talking about young boys, for example, practising what the hon. Member for Harlow calls "unnatural" acts. Despite his shaking his head earlier, my great suspicion is that he is really referring to homosexual acts. The Bill, as its short title shows, is about sexual intercourse. It will be interesting to hear him describe to what other unnatural acts the Bill refers. Boys, like men, may be involved in male rape. Perhaps that is one of the offences to which the hon. Gentleman is referring.

Male rape is not a specific crime at present and I believe that it should be. There is an assumption that only women can be raped, which simply is not true. Men and young boys could well become the victims of rape. The police record the number of offences of indecent assault against men, and those numbers have increased. In London, they have doubled over the past 10 years. It is a serious problem which should be addressed. The Metropolitan police to whom I have spoken believe that more than nine out of 10 cases are not reported because the victims fear that they may be criminalised, that they may be branded homosexual, or that the police will take no action because the offence of male rape does not exist. It is necessary to make male rape a crime. That gap in the law remains under this Bill.

This is the age of bringing legislation to bear on sexual offences, such as child abuse, so legislation on male rape should be introduced. The mere fact that the subject is brought out into the open—this is part of what the hon. Member for Harlow is attempting to do by recognising that such offences can be committed between the ages of 10 and 14—means that there will be more openness about reporting such offences and that action can then be taken. I shall ask the hon. Gentleman more questions on that when I speak to amendment No. 2. I hope that there will be more openness about male rape as well. I believe that the hon. Gentleman is wrong in using the words "natural or unnatural". I shall be most interested to hear what he has to say about that. I still believe that those words should be removed from the Bill.

Lady Olga Maitland: I warmly congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes) on having the imagination and alertness to recognise that there has been a serious anomaly on the issue. An attempt to put the anomalies right is long overdue. To date, it has been deemed physically impossible for a child under the age of 14 to commit an act of rape. Instead, the charge has been sexual assault.

The hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) seeks to withdraw the words "whether natural or unnatural". He seemed to say that some believe that only natural sexual intercourse—in other words, between a boy and a girl—is acceptable and that it is unfair to suggest that sexual intercourse between two boys or two men is unnatural. We are really saying that sexual activity by force by a young boy against another person, whether a boy or a girl, should be included in the Bill. The Bill is not an attempt to be positively unfair to people who have indulged in homosexual activity.

It is important to say that we are not going down the route of homosexual bashing. There is nothing like that whatever. It is extremely important to point out that we are not trying to put homosexuals into a separate category. However, we are well aware that clarification is needed in the Bill. It would be iniquitous to concentrate only on heterosexual sex by force, without taking into account homosexual sex or other practices that may later be elucidated.

Mr. Cohen: Is the hon. Lady saying that homosexual sex is unnatural in terms of the Bill?

Lady Olga Maitland: Yes, I am saying that homosexual activity is unnatural. My reason for saying that is simple. The vast majority of human beings on this earth are heterosexual with only a very small minority of people who are born with a natural instinct for homosexual activity. That does not make it the norm, and I am talking about the norm.

Mr. Cohen: So is the hon. Lady saying that hon. Members, including Conservative Members, who practise homosexual activities, are practising unnatural activities?

10 am

Lady Olga Maitland: Yes. As far as I am concerned, it does not matter who is or is not indulging in such activities; I think that they are unnatural. I do not want to go in for name calling or identifying of the individuals concerned. We are simply reflecting on the state of natural human beings today. It is important to clarify in the Bill exactly what we mean by rape and to make it clear that we are referring to all the different circumstances.

The unnatural element causes concern not least because, as a result of the tremendous amount of gay publicity on the television and in the press, young children are getting the idea that homosexuality is something with which they should experiment. I find that very worrying. It is worrying, too, that some teachers in some schools believe that they need to promote homosexual activity and heterosexual activity as being of equal value. Given that that belief seems to be on the increase, it is all the more important that we should clarify in the Bill the fact that unnatural sex is included.

The hon. Member for Leyton seems to be suggesting that we are being unfairly hostile to unnatural sex. Should not we consider for a moment the victims of sexual assault —particularly assault that involves unnatural sex? The victim could be an adult, but is more likely to be another child, who may be emotionally and physically crippled for life as a result of the experience. A case in my constituency comes back to me with appalling clarity. A thoroughly normal, decent family could not understand why their little boy aged five had been unable to control his bowels for a number of years. The mother eventually noticed physical marks on the child's body, particularly around his anus, and managed, through careful questioning and by seeking advice and counselling, to discover that that child had been repeatedly raped by another boy over a period of years.

It is tremendously important that the child who perpetrated that offence—a school kid of about 13—should be brought to court under the new law and made responsible for his behaviour. At the moment, that child is no doubt running wild in a playground; he may be catching other children, taking them into cars and doing them appalling damage. The mental and physical effects are felt not only by the child who is the victim but by the family which makes it all the more tragic. Therefore, it is essential that we make it absolutely clear that unnatural behaviour, by which we mean homosexual behaviour, is included in the Bill.

I hope that the Bill will be given a fair wind. In a wider context, it is important that children should be educated about sexual responsibility and behaviour. Teachers must not positively encourage homosexual behaviour as if it were the accepted norm; in fact only a very small minority of people engage in it. It worries me that chidlren are encouraged in this way against their natural instincts.

Our whole case rests on the fact that it is possible for rape to be committed by a boy on another boy. That must be made clear in the Bill. I congratulate my hon. Friend on introducing the Bill.

Mr. Bowen Wells (Hertford and Stortford): The clause worries me considerably. It seems to me obvious that, if we pass the Bill, it makes little difference whether we include or omit the words "whether natural or unnatural". If they are left out, the clause will read:

> "The presumption of the criminal law that a boy under the age of fourteen is incapable of sexual intercourse is hereby abolished."

Presumably that will then mean all forms of sexual intercourse. The words "whether natural or unnatural" neither add anything to the Bill nor take anything away from it. Their excision would make no difference to the meaning of the Bill or to any other matter about which we need to be concerned this morning. I therefore support the amendment tabled by the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen). I do not see any need to mention what form of sexual intercourse is implied or intended and I do not think that we need discuss what is natural or unnatural sexual intercourse.

The Bill provides that boys under the age of 14 who commit sexual acts can be charged under the criminal law. I am not certain that that is wise. As the hon. Member for Leyton said, sexuality starts from birth. That is my experience and is the experience of all the professionals.

[Mr. Bowen Wells]

Sexuality is a gradually learnt matter about which we should be honest and straightforward and which should be discussed, especially at home. Incidentally, the form that sex education in schools takes needs to be examined carefully. Sex education should be treated very sensitively and ought to include teaching about the emotional content that should go with the whole experience of sexuality. The absence of any emotional content from such learning is a serious mistake.

It seems to me that we are not talking about rape. Most of the debate this morning has been about forced sexual intercourse, which is abhorrent at any age. In my view, however, the Bill would make it a criminal offence for any sexual intercourse to take place between children of whatever sex. I do not believe that the criminal law is the right way to treat such matters. I feel that we should adopt a much more sympathetic attitude to such activities among children—one which does not criminalise them and stigmatise them for life. We need counselling and thoughtful intervention and we need very carefully thought out procedures.

Mr. Jerry Hayes (Harlow): Before my hon. Friend proceeds any further along that line, I remind him that the Bill is all about rape; it is about penetrative sex. It does not deal with consensual sex between teenagers of whatever gender or orientation, which must always be a matter for the sympathetic discretion of the prosecuting authorities. There is no way that, in reasonable consensual circumstances, the prosecuting authorities will prosecute young men under the age of 21 for homosexuality or any other similar offence. The Bill is specifically about rape.

Mr. Wells: I am grateful for that explanation, and I hope that it will be noted carefully if the Bill reaches the statute book and if any action is taken in a court of law. I do not believe that that is what the Bill says. It may be what my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes) intends, but it is not what the Bill says.

Mr. Alun Michael (Cardiff, South and Penarth): I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for giving way because I believe that there is an air of puzzlement about the debate. The Bill does not force on us all the interpretations and ramifications in respect of the law that have been suggested. It simply ends a nonsense; it removes a legal myth.

The common-sense interpretation is that which is being placed on the Bill by my hon. Friend the Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) and that is why he moved his simple amendment. There is a certain amount of common sense and sympathy in relation to the removal of those words. However, we must consider what that will do to the way in which the Bill is interpreted in relation to other Acts, which may be unsatisfactory but which are already on the statute book.

It would be sensible if the House tried to ensure that we did not frustrate the intention, upon which we are all united, of ending this nonsense. I hope that we will not simply apply common sense because the law does not always work in a common-sense way, as I am sure the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells) would agree. We must be very careful to ensure that we do not do something that we do not intend to do in respect of the Bill.

Mr. Wells: I could not agree more with the hon. Gentleman. We must be very careful indeed about the ramifications. On the surface, this is a very sensible piece of proposed legislation. We all know that children are capable of penetrative sex, as my hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam (Lady Olga Maitland) described. Therefore, we should, in common sense, change the position.

However, what are the ramifications? There is a law which forbids sexual intercourse below the age of 16. Many hon. Members and members of the public believe that that age of consent should be lowered. However, if we combine that with this Bill, if sexual intercourse is entered into freely—and is not rape—it becomes a criminal offence for which both parties could be taken to a court of law.

Mr. Hayes: I hesitate to interrupt my hon. Friend and I am grateful to him for giving way to me again. The Bill is about the presumption of capacity. In other words, it does not matter whether the act of penetrative sex has taken place; the child is presumed in law, if he is under the age of 14, to be incapable of that act. I believe that that is manifest nonsense, and that is the anomaly and absurdity which the Bill seeks to redress.

Mr. Wells: It is, of course, absurd in common sense and human experience. However, it seems to me that the law has the effect of protecting boys under the age of 14 from being accused of a criminal offence for taking part in consensual sex between the sexes.

Mr. Hayes: I disagree with my hon. Friend because the law allows for a prosecution of a lesser offence of indecent assault. As was said in Committee, and has been said elsewhere, it is ridiculous that a young man under the age of 14 who has committed a physical act of rape cannot be charged with the offence of rape. He can be charged only with indecent assault. That does not reflect the gravity of the offence.

Mr. Wells: I am not even certain of that. Although I find abhorrent the whole concept of rape and any kind of force involved in the sexual act between any partners, none the less, the act of rape in those circumstances, and at the ages about which we are concerned, is something which I am not certain we should criminalise. Would we put someone who has committed that act in prison or in a place of restraint? Is that the kind of law that we want imposed on the children of this country? I honestly do not think that we should do that.

Lady Olga Maitland rose——

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. Before the hon. Member for Sutton and Cheam (Lady Olga Maitland) makes her intervention, may I point out that the debate is now broadening out once more. We must return to the amendment.

Lady Olga Maitland: It is important that I reply quickly to the point about whether the offence can be committed by these young people and whether it would be right and appropriate to lock them up. Children have committed rape. I visited a secure unit this week and saw a 14-year-old boy who had committed a rape, although he was obviously charged with sexual assault. He was in that secure unit because he needed psychological and psychiatric help. That was the best place for him to receive it.

10.15 am

Mr. Wells: I will return to the narrow point about the amendment after I have replied briefly to my hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam.

Of course, boys under the age of 14 are capable of rape: I know that that is the case. However, I question whether such sexual intercourse, natural or unnatural, should become a criminal offence. Is that the right way to deal with it?

Sexual intercourse, whether natural or unnatural, should not be included. All sexual intercourse, particularly if it is narrowly defined in respect of rape, should be included in the Bill. However, I am not sure whether criminalising it is the right way to treat such cases. There should be psychiatric treatment, counselling and restraint. However, it should not be criminal.

Mr. Merchant: I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes) on introducing the Bill, which will correct an anomaly in the present law which has clearly been seen to be having a major effect on society, the legal system and the maintenance of law and order.

I agreed with the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) when he said that on some occasions we must be blind to common sense so far as the law is concerned. As he represents an Opposition party, I am tempted to say that he perhaps experiences being blind to common sense rather frequently. However, when we consider definitions in law, it is clear that at times the use of phrases appears somewhat contradictory, simply because legalistic matters are phrased in rather anachronistic language.

I have been goaded into intervening in the debate by some of the remarks of the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen). I fear that the amendment, which I accept is well intentioned, might frustrate the intention of the Bill. I should hate to see that happen and that is why I want to answer some of his points.

The purpose of the Bill is clear. So long as its drafting is in harmony with the law as it is drafted in other areas in respect of these matters, we should be content with that and aim to support the greater objective of ensuring the Bill a safe passage.

The Bill deals with matters that have changed over the years. In that respect, I refer to the age of maturity and the capacity to rape which is linked with that. There is little doubt that the age of maturity has changed over the years for many reasons, primarily because of the healthier way in which our children are brought up these days. As a consequence, a law that may have been perfectly satisfactory some time ago, has now ceased to be so. Apparent anomalies are occurring which result in young men—which is what they are—performing acts that the laws says that they are unable to perform. Adjusting the law to enable prosecutions to take place when they clearly should take place is an important tidying-up measure which must be welcomed. Therefore, in a sense, the Bill aims to abolish an archaic presumption and must be phrased in the way in which the existing law is phrased when dealing with these matters. The phrase "natural or unnatural" falls into that set of definitions.

I was interested to hear the hon. Member for Leyton. He always deploys his arguments in a unique way, and I enjoy listening to them. I know that he was speaking from the heart on this matter and feels strongly about it. However, I still feel that he is missing the point. We must consider what the phrase "natural or unnatural" means. As I see it, it does not simply refer to heterosexual or homosexual sex: it refers to sexual acts that the law has seen over the centuries as either natural or unnatural. That does not necessarily put a subjective judgment of what is right or wrong on the practices that the phrase seeks to describe; it is merely a legalistic phrase which is well accepted in the law and appears in all sorts of other laws dealing with this subject. It is a form of archaic prose, but it is well understood and well defined in legalistic terms. That is significant in a law such as this, because the law must be precise.

When a law is being defined and interpreted in a host of different cases, those who are intepreting it must know precisely what the words mean. The words in the Bill are well defined in terms of the law. They should not be read as a common man or a man in the street might read them: they should be read through the eyes of lawyers—and that applies a totally different analysis and definition.

Mr. Wells: I am sure that my hon. Friend will agree that the law is a stranger to common sense. I wonder whether he could help the House by telling us where the phrase "natural or unnatural" occurs in other laws that deal with this subject.

Mr. Merchant: I cannot give my hon. Friend chapter and verse. All I can say is that the phrase "natural or unnatural" owes its origin in legalistic terms to the middle ages. It is present in a series of legal judgments and laws that were cast in the middle ages. Since then, the phrase has been well used in the law courts.

Mr. Hayes: The phrase comes from section 44 of the Sexual Offences Act 1956.

Mr. Merchant: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for filling in a gap in the knowledge of the law that has eluded me recently. I am sure that he will agree that the phrase does not exist solely in the Act. Nor was it invented solely in those terms.

I run the risk of moving too far away from my specific subject, which is that the phrase "natural or unnatural" should be interpreted from the legal point of view. The phrase is used in the courts and understood by lawyers, and it should not be intepreted—as my hon. Friend the Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells) was doing persuasively, but inaccurately, in this context—through the eyes of the ordinary man in the street. In other words, it is not meant to condem people as unnatural people, which is what he said. Nor is it meant to be used in a scientific sense, literally meaning what nature intended. Instead, it is used to describe different forms of activity in a shorthand legalistic phrase and in a way which is understood by lawyers and the courts.

I conclude—because I do not want to detain the House—by saying that the hon. Member for Leyton has allowed himself to become overexcited by clause 1 and has perhaps created an unnecessary debate. To omit the words "natural or unnatural" would leave the Bill more or less intact. However, we would run the risk of allowing it to run into difficulty in practical application because of the technical language used. If the hon. Gentleman is prepared to compromise and accept that the words will not be emblazoned on buildings outside and upset people in the street or cause people to change their behaviour, but are technical words to ensure that the Bill achieves its objective —an objective with which I am sure he would not disagree —they should be welcomed, and we should not make too much over three words.

Mr. Hayes: I thank my hon. Friend the Member for Beckenham (Mr. Merchant) for his common-sense approach to the matter—I wholeheartedly agree with him. I also thank my hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam (Lady Olga Maitland) who gave us a sensitive rendition of some of the difficulties. I am not sure whether I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells), but he is a dear and personal friend. I am grateful to him, and he can buy me a large drink later.

I pay tribute to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen). He is a tireless campaigner for human rights in all sorts of areas. I agree with much of what he said. The purpose of the legislation is to clear up an anomaly, an absurdity. The law must be 100 per cent. clear. The word "unnatural" is an anachronism which goes back to section 44 of the Sexual Offences Act 1956. It is not a word which I especially welcome in legislation. However, if it is not in the Bill, it makes nonsense of the legislation.

My hon. Friend the Minister will listen most carefully to what has been said today. If he chooses at some stage in later legislation to have a careful look at section 44, I should be the first to welcome it. Hon. Members should not think for a moment that I am homophobic. I sit on the Committee chaired by my right hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Sir J. Wheeler) which specifically examines discriminatory laws and suggests to the Government how such laws can be changed, so this is not an attack on the gay community, and should not be seen as such.

Mr. Wells: I wonder whether my hon. Friend could explain his arguments. He is saying that he needs the words "natural and unnatural" in the Bill to make it consonant or work with other legislation on this subject. If, as my hon. Friend the Member for Beckenham (Mr. Merchant) said, that is archaic and comes from the middle ages, or presumably from Shakespearean language, why should we continue to use these archaic legal jargons in shorthand? Why should we not be straightforward in our legislation and make it abundantly clear to the ordinary people in the street? We should not have wretched lawyers, who are paid immense fees, interpreting the law and therefore making it so much more expensive. Let us be straightforward. Let us not have "natural and unnatural" in the Bill.

Mr. Hayes: As usual, my hon. Friend is absolutely right: let us be straightforward. This is not the legislation in which we can change the anachronism. The difficulty is the interpretation by judges in other places. Judges will look at section 44 of the Sexual Offences Act 1956 for the definition of "penetrative sex". If my hon. Friend wants that straightforwardness, the 1956 Act should be changed, not the Bill. We need clarity in the law. I entirely agree with the hon. Member for Leyton when he said that this is not the time and the place to get the clarity that we want.

I did not want before lunch to get into other areas of unnatural sex, but the hon. Gentleman rightly wanted a further definition. Of course, the definition spreads much wider than anal intercourse: it also involves animals and bestiality. Perhaps there are all sorts of changes that my hon. Friend the Minister may wish to examine at another time—this is not the time and the place to discuss them —whereby there can be clear definitions of "anal intercourse", "vaginal intercourse" and "intercourse with an animal". I submit that this is not the time and the place.

I ask the hon. Member for Leyton to listen carefully to what has been said today. The House is not unsympathetic to the argument put by the hon. Gentleman, who talked a lot of common sense; perhaps it is time for a review. I ask him to remember that the Bill is designed to clear up an anomaly, an absurdity, in the law. We are talking about penetrative sex and, despite what my hon. Friend the Member for Hertford and Stortford said, we are not talking about offences that would criminalise people, because those offences have been criminalised already. We are talking about an offence that properly reflects the gravity of the act. I ask the hon. Member for Leyton to withdraw his amendment.

10.30 am

Mr. Michael: It is clear that the amendment would improve the language of the Bill so that ordinary people could understand it better, but it would damage it by retaining the assumption of incapacity in relation to such things as bestiality and other forms of intercourse. The problem is that the Bill clears up one anomaly in the law —it disposes of one piece of nonsense—while leaving plenty of other anomalies and anachronisms to be tackled by the House at a later stage.

It is dangerous for the House to try to do too much, particularly under a private Member's Bill. To delete the three words "natural or unnatural" from the Bill would not do what my hon. Friend the Member for Leyton sensibly seeks to achieve. If a new definition replaced those words, it might meet my hon. Friend's aim, but that in itself would pose a danger, because new words are always open to interpretation by the courts. In any event, that alternative is not available to us. Perhaps that can be considered in another place at the appropriate time. If we introduced a new and wider definition, we might fail to achieve what the House intended.

For that reason, I encourage my hon. Friend, whose argument was taken seriously by hon. Members on both sides of the House, not to frustrate the intention of this simple piece of legislation by pressing his amendment.

The Minister of State, Home Office (Mr. Michael Jack): I endorse the wise advice from the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen).

My hon. Friend the Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes) gave a correct interpretation of the way in which the Bill is drafted when he referred to section 44 of the Sexual Offences Act 1956. All pieces of legislation borrow from previous legislation to ensure consistency. The Bill has done the same in order that the legal world is in no doubt, according to current definitions, as to its exact intent.

My hon. Friend the Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells) spoke at length about the problem of definition. All of us who are not lawyers understand his argument about the need for clarity. The abolition of the presumption that young men under 14 are incapable of intercourse, however, was considered as part of the final report of the Criminal Law Revision Committee, which reported in 1984 on this matter.

Although that committee felt that the issue of presumption was a key part of its recommendations, the question of definition did not form part of its substantive decision to recommend that the abolition of presumption should be subject to a parallel change. My hon. Friend the Member for Harlow has followed the committee's recommendations carefully when drafting the Bill. As a result, I urge the hon. Member for Leyton to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. Wells: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for his explanation of the curious wording in the Bill. Does he agree that accepting recommendations from the Criminal Law Revision Committee is a hazardous business, especially when we consider the effect of the amendments introduced under the Criminal Justice Act 1991 in magistrates courts and others? It is unwise simply to accept recommendations from such a committee. I urge my hon. Friend to reconsider his acceptance of its recommendations.

Mr. Jack: I shall not trespass into issues connected with the Criminal Justice Act 1991, much as many hon. Members may want me to do so. No one disagreed with the recommendations of that particular report, which were widely considered. That committee would be the first to admit that not all its recommendations meet with such approval. With that in mind, I urge the hon. Member for Leyton, as other hon. Members have done, to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. Cohen: I note what has been said, but I have great sympathy with the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells) who said that we should legislate clearly and mean what we say and say what we mean. We should amend section 44 of the Sexual Offences Act 1956.

I note what my hon. Friend the Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) said about the possibility of this matter being considered in another place. I beg to ask leave to withdraw the amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Mr. Cohen: I beg to move amendment No. 2, in page 1, leave out lines 9 and 10 and insert—

'(2) This Act shall come into force on such date as the Secretary of State may by order made by statutory instrument appoint.'.

Madam Deputy Speaker: With this it will be convenient to discuss the following amendments: No. 3 in page 1, clause 2, leave out lines 9 and 10.

No. 4, in page 1, clause 2, leave out line 11.

Mr. Cohen: The amendment would give the Home Office time to consider the implications of the Bill and whether any follow-up measures are necessary.

The hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells) was right to ask whether the criminal law was the right means to deal with this matter and spoke about the need for counselling. We should remember that we are dealing with children between the ages of 10 and 14 and that counselling is needed for the victim and the perpetrator. The Home Office should consider such implications rather than just let the Bill go through.

We must consider whether the Bill will tilt power more towards the police as opposed to youth agencies, social services and social workers. Is the Bill more about punishment than reform and help? Branding young people as criminals has a disproportionate effect on them, as we know from the high rate of suicide among young people in prison. Such a label will affect children in later life. There is a lot of hysteria about youth crime but we should not be caught up in it. We should consider the matter seriously.

The Bill will come into force two months after its enactment, but time should be given to consider its implications and definitions. We must consider whether other changes can sensibly be made to this part of the law.

Lady Olga Maitland: Once the Bill is enacted, it should come into force right away. I do not believe that there is any necessity to wait two months. The public will expect us to get on with it. Why should young offenders be allowed to get away with such awful crimes? They are awful and serious crimes. Why should the perpetrators be allowed to get away with them for another two months?

There is growing public awareness of the scale of the crimes among young people. Parliament would open itself to ridicule if it were not seen to deal with the problem straight away. If it were seen to hesitate, it could make the public wonder how serious Parliament was about the issue. A difficult position could arise. What would happen if there were a horrible attack within the two months period which received saturation press coverage—such as the tragic case of little James Bulger? Would not Parliament look stupid if it were crippled by its own Act and could not take action immediately?

There is much concern about tackling the issues in the public domain. There is a feeling that young people are too precocious and believe that they can get away with their actions because society has created a climate in which all forms of violent sex are permitted. The Bill is an excellent way for the Government to be seen to take direct action and respond immediately.

The Bill is not an attempt to be hostile; we are not trying to pick on naughty or mischievous children. There is no danger of such children being brought to court by mistake. We must ensure that the prosecution has to prove that the accused boy clearly understands that what he did was seriously wrong. There is no excuse for any sexual offence. Such offences are not caused by material deprivation; tragically, the perpetrators of such crimes seem to come from broken homes where there has been a moral breakdown rather than a material breakdown. Society would now support the idea of taking a stiffer approach.

Mr. Wells: Can my hon. Friend give any evidence to support her assertion that such activity is particularly prevalent among children who come from broken homes? I believe that it takes place at all levels of society and is carried out by those from all sorts of homes.

Lady Olga Maitland: Yes, the activity happens at all levels of society, but there is evidence—I cannot cite examples now as I do not have the sources to hand—to show that those from broken homes, where there are no benchmarks of social and sexual behaviour and a sort of "anything goes" attitude, display a prevalence for a violent approach to sex because the children do not receive parental guidance. Tragically, the perpetrators of violent sex are often young people who have themselves been sexually abused.

Mr. Merchant: I can assist my hon. Friend by assuring her that all the recent studies on sexual abuse of children have shown that it is much more prevalent when the parents have been abused. That fact cross feeds into sexual offences. There is a clear, identifiable current running through the cases. I am not denying that it happens elsewhere, but the majority of cases display those characteristics. I hope that my hon. Friend agrees that the Bill will help to identify those involved in the problem at an earlier age, which must be in the interests of all those concerned—victims and offenders.

Lady Olga Maitland rose——

Madam Deputy Speaker: Before the hon. Lady continues, I should remind her that this is not a Third Reading debate. We are considering specific amendments, and the discussion must relate to them more closely.

10.45 am

Lady Olga Maitland: I thank you, Madam Deputy Speaker, for that guidance. The comments made by my hon. Friend the Member for Beckenham (Mr. Merchant) are appropriate because we are trying to analyse why it is crucial to legislate now. My hon. Friend rightly said that it was important to analyse why the cases occur. I totally support his view that the children who have been abused often have parents who have been abused. I remember another tragic case that came before me in which the mother had been abused and her parents had been abused. It was a family of abuse in which a culture of violence had grown up which the children took on.

It is important that the Bill should be given a swift passage, not merely through its parliamentary procedure, but into law. The cases that have come to light are worrying. In 1989, 287 boys were cautioned for indecent assault on females—rape, which means penetrative sex. Proceedings went ahead in another 37 cases; 25 of the defendants were found guilty.

Earlier in the debate there was discussion about indecent assault on males—homosexual acts. The related figures are that in 1989 proceedings went ahead in three cases and all the defendants were found guilty. Some 29 males were cautioned. I agree with the school of thought that such offences are not on the same scale as those involving heterosexual sex, but they must be taken into account.

I am not straying wide of the mark, Madam Deputy Speaker, but trying to emphasise the urgency of the matter. The figures rose in 1990. There were 47 proceedings involving sexual assaults—which we should now call rape—on females, and 26 of the defendants were found guilty. However, a much higher number were cautioned: 245. There were four proceedings which went ahead involving males assaulting males, and two defendants were found guilty. It is important to note that there was a considerable increase in the number of those cautioned, which rose to 44.

The latest figures for 1991 show the urgency of the issue. In 1991, 46 young men faced proceedings for indecent assault on females—rape—of which 23 were found guilty; and, overall, 225 were cautioned. There were three proceedings which went ahead involving indecent assaults on males—male rape—and two defendants were found guilty. There were 43 cautions. Therefore, the figures are going up, not down. We cannot afford to allow any time to elapse.

When we consider some of the cases that have come to light, we realise how urgent the matter is. In 1990, Sir William Shelton, a former very respected Member of the House, introduced a private Member's Bill which included a clause to abolish the presumption, but the Bill was talked out at its Report stage because hon. Members opposed another clause referring to kerb crawling. That was a pity, because important issues were at stake.

In the Second Reading debate on the Bill, the then Home Office Minister, now the Secretary of State for Education, made some observations. He pointed out the importance of realising the serious nature of what is going on, citing the case of a four-year-old victim who was handicapped and epileptic—raped by a boy next door aged 13. Another case concerned a victim who was only five; and in another, the victim, aged 10, was gang raped while visiting friends. Some 13-year-old boys dragged her upstairs and raped her. Finally, there was the sickening case of a multiple attack on a married women in her late 20s, a mother of three, by schoolboy rapists, all of whom were under 14 years old. And let us not forget the recent case of the schoolteacher who was violently attacked by a schoolboy.

For all those reasons, I do not think that there is any time to waste.

Mr. Anthony Coombs (Wyre Forest): I hear what my hon. Friend says, but she tends to miss the point about what is missing from the Bill. If this Bill were passed, many of the 225 cases of indecent assault on females dealt with in 1991-92 would have been re-categorised in the courts as rape, and no additional penalties would have been available as a result. I would expect that none of the 46 people who were proceeded against in the courts as a result of those acts of rape would have been given a custodial sentence—and most people in Britain would find that horrendous.

Lady Olga Maitland: I could not agree more with my hon. Friend. Unfortunately, the courts dealing with children in these cases often pass the responsibility for them back to the social services and local authorities. The latter can decide whether to put a child into a children's home or whether to recommend that the child goes to a secure unit. Local authorities should make far greater use of secure units, the more so since I know that they have enormous facilities in those units. That would help the child, who is clearly the victim of his own illness, and society, because people would then know that something was being done.

Mr. Nigel Evans: We are talking about rape, which is an horrendous act. Does my hon. Friend agree that, when the legislation covering juvenile offences comes before this Chamber, it should take account of children aged 14 and below who commit rape and who may therefore be properly punished? As has been pointed out, the law does not allow for that at present.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. We must be careful; we are going wide of the amendments, which relate mainly to the timing of the operation.

Lady Olga Maitland: The timing of the operation is what my hon. Friend is talking about—hence the urgency of his remarks. He is quite right to say that much more attention should be given to the sentences that children serve.

I believe that it is urgent that we implement this measure. Society will support it; indeed, society believes that we have been too lax for too long. Now is the time to put that right.

Mr. Wells: The more I hear about the Bill, the less I like it. It is clear to me that we need time for reflection before it is put into effect. In particular, we need to think about the Bill's ramifications and its effect on other laws relating to juvenile sentencing of the children who, if the Bill is passed, will be accused of criminal acts and then "punished" for them. That is a serious thing to do to children.

The point that I have been trying to make has not yet been answered. In my layman's reading of the Bill, it seems to apply to all sexual offences, not just to rape. Lawyers may be able to interpret it as applying only to rape, but it says that it is about sexual offences: to a layman, that means all sexual offences. I am sure that lawyers, using medieval and arcane arguments, will be able to claim that the Bill covers only rape, even though that is not what it says. If they say that, I shall have to accept it. The fact remains, however, that none of the horrific cases or the increase in the number of such cases adduced by my hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam (Lady Olga Maitland) would have been affected by the enactment of the Bill. The only result will be the criminalisation of under-age sex, and there will be no proper provision for the children involved and no attempt to correct their behaviour so that they can grow into well-balanced adults who are unlikely to undertake such activities again. The Home Office will have to think these matters through carefully and sensitively.

In recent years, the Home Office has all too often taken precipitate action on recommendations made to it by the great and the good. We have not benefited from that, and at times the law has been made to look an ass.

Mr. Couchman: I share my hon. Friend's concern that we should not take precipitate action on the Bill or enact it without due care and attention. We have indeed passed some dreadful laws on the spur of the moment, such as those affecting dangerous dogs and football supporters, among others. I am, however, worried about my hon. Friend's thinking about whether it is right to punish people under 14 years of age. My hon. Friend the Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes) has said time and again that the Bill is about the crime of rape—penetrative sex—not about minor experimentation. It is about serious crime, and serious crime must be seen to be punished.

One of the great weaknesses of the Bill—I hope to say more about this in a lengthy contribution on Third Reading—is that it provides no more deterrence or punishment than current law already provides for.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. Before the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells) continues, I must caution the House that we are getting off the point again. This group of amendments concerns when the Act shall come into force, but the arguments that I hear are more about whether we should pass the Bill at all.

Mr. Wells: My argument is that we should be careful about implementing the Bill within two months of enactment. I agree with the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen), who wants some time to elapse in which Ministers can reflect and take advice before implementation, to make sure that the Bill has no unexpected side effects on other laws or other ways of treating people who will be considered to offend under the Act.

Mr Hayes: My hon. Friend has asked a question, and although I am a member of the Bar and have practised as such for many years, I will give him an answer in simple, laymen's terms. Crime is like baking a cake; before we can make a cake one has to have the necessary ingredients. The ingredients for the crime of rape are that there has to be sexual intercourse. The definition of sexual intercourse is full penetrative sex. The Bill therefore tidies up the anomaly surrounding one of the ingredients of the offence —sexual intercourse. Without the one, the other cannot exist.

Mr. Wells: All hon. Members are capable of reading clause 1 which states:

> "The presumption of criminal law that a boy under the age of fourteen is incapable of sexual intercourse (whether natural or unnatural) is hereby abolished."

Sexual intercourse is not rape; it is an enjoyable affair between two consenting people, usually male and female. If it were rape, we should be guilty of it every hour of the day and night. [Interruption.] That is what the Bill says and the lawyers who abound among us have not refuted that.

I am trying to speak exactly in line with the amendment which I commend to the House because it gives time for reflection. This is over-hasty legislation which we shall regret. My hon. Friend the Member for Gillingham (Mr. Couchman) spoke about punishment and the intent of the Bill. Punishment for sexual offences, especially those involving young people, deserves careful investigation and thought. If offenders are placed in social services homes, their predilection to engage in violent sex or sex of all kinds will be encouraged.

Criminalising such activities by the young would enhance and reinforce their attraction. The House must decide what to do with such people so that they will grow into well-balanced, non-violent people who will make a constructive contribution to the life of the country.

Mr. Michael: There was some disgraceful trivialisation in parts of the speech by the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells). The Bill is so simple and contains such common-sense improvements that I am surprised that we are taking so long over it. I am tempted to the unworthy thought that the sudden interest by Conservative Members in the minutiae of the likely effect of the Bill might have something to do with their opposition to the Medicines Information Bill, which seeks to protect ordinary people and end secrecy in the pharmaceutical industry about the development and sale of drugs. That Bill should be debated this morning.

Mr. Couchman: On a point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. Is it in order for the hon. Gentleman to impugn the integrity of Conservative Members who are interested in an important if brief Bill? It is the very brevity of the Bill which worries some of us.

Madam Deputy Speaker: It would be unduly sensitive to pay too much attention to such remarks. I hope that hon. Members will keep to the point.

Mr. Michael: I think that the hon. Gentleman doth protest too much. I have said all that needs to be said on the Bill and I note the embarrassment of Conservative Members.

The hon. Member for Sutton and Cheam (Lady Olga Maitland) called for a sense of urgency. I agree, because it is wrong that the anomaly in the law was not put right by the Government years ago. Now that we have the opportunity to put it right, thanks to the hon. Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes), we should take it seriously and make sure that we get the legislation right.

We should not rush. I am opposed to retrospective legislation and have opposed it when it has been introduced by the Government. That bad practice is contained in one of the amendments in the group, and we should not go down that road. The issues raised by my hon. Friend the Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) are important. There is a need for counselling and preventive work and we must recognise the serious problems and tackle the type of cases about which the hon. Member for Sutton and Cheam spoke. However, the problems are not triggered by the Bill; nor is the need for counselling and prevention, because that exists now. The problem is that the task is given to voluntary organisations in the social work sector and statutory bodies which are stretched past sensible limits, bearing in mind the seriousness of the issues.

My hon. Friend the Member for Makerfield (Mr. McCartney), who is with me on the Front Bench this morning, and other colleagues in Labour's health and social services team are very concerned about these issues, which we take seriously. I hope that the Minister will acknowledge the nature of the problem that my hon. Friend the Member for Leyton has highlighted. I also hope that the Minister will undertake to speak to his right hon. Friends in the Health Department and in Departments dealing with social services and local government to try to ensure an improvement in the help and counselling that are available for victims and offenders, so that they may be prevented from further ruining their lives and creating more victims.

We should not try to do too much with the Bill and I hope that there is no suggestion of delaying its implementation until all the facilities are in place, because I suspect that we would have to wait rather longer than we would be happy about. I ask my hon. Friend the Member for Leyton not to press his amendment because it would place in the hands of the Minister the power to delay the implementation of the legislation. That is what makes me uneasy about the amendment.

Mr. Nigel Evans: I have never been accused of being overly sensitive, but the accusation by the hon. Member for Cardiff South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) that hon. Members are debating this issue only because they wish to delay another Bill is scandalous. We are debating the Bill because we are deeply interested in it.

It has been said that the Bill is over-hasty, but that cannot be the case, because a similar Bill was introduced in 1990 and was talked out by the hon. Member for Brent East (Mr. Livingstone). I agree that the legislation is important and, as my hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam (Lady Olga Maitland) said, it should be introduced as soon as possible. If there needs to be a delay of two months to ensure that everything is in its place and that the legislation is properly enacted, so be it, but there should be as little delay as possible.

No doubt other Bills will need to follow this one. As soon as it is enacted, we should look carefully at the Bill on juvenile offences that has been mentioned by my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary. He has said that he wishes to introduce such a Bill as soon as parliamentary time allows. I hope that Opposition Members will ensure that time is made available so that that Bill can be debated as soon as possible.

Mr. Michael: The hon. Gentleman should not be so naive as to think that a statement by the Home Secretary that he wishes to bring Bills to the House quickly is as simple as meets the eye. There is a Criminal Justice Bill before the House this Session and there was one two years ago and they both missed all sorts of important matters that should have been considered by the House. A wish to present a Bill is not enough. The hon. Gentleman should not be so naive as to think that we have missed the fact that the Bill that we are considering took 20 minutes in Committee and so far has been debated here for one hour and 38 minutes.

Mr. Evans: I am neither naive nor sensitive. I look forward to the support of Opposition Members when a juvenile offences Bill comes before the House. It seems that we are considered guilty whatever we do. If we do not debate legislation, we are said to be over-hasty and failing to give it due consideration. If we do debate it, we are accused of being ponderous and attempting to talk the Bill out.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. There is a third point —the offence of being irrelevant.

Mr. Evans: I am not sure, Madam Deputy Speaker, who you are accusing of being irrelevant. If it is me, I stand before you guilty on that count.

As soon as the Bill can be enacted, the better—but I hope that there will be all-party support for ensuring that the right legislation is put on the statute book, so that those found guilty of rape—which is deemed an extremely serious offence in this country—are dealt with properly.

Mr. Hayes: I have known the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) far too long to be the slightest bit upset by him. As one of the few people—apart from you, Madam Deputy Speaker—who regularly sees the hon. Gentleman with hardly any clothes on, nothing surprises me. In case there is any misunderstanding, I shall explain that that happens in the gymnasium.

In case my hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam (Lady Olga Maitland) has not decided to withdraw her amendment, perhaps I may persuade her to do so. It is a general principle that a statute—particularly one dealing with criminal offences—affects only factual situations arising during the period of its operation. My hon. Friend's amendment goes against that principle by allowing the statute to be retrospective.

The fact that the Bill would not be retrospective does not mean that young boys who commit sexual offences covered by it would not be brought before the courts—although it is true that most of the offences of which they could be convicted would be indecent assault. I am not persuaded that it would be in the best interests of justice to do as my hon. Friend suggests, and I ask her to withdraw her amendment at the appropriate time.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. An amendment that has not been moved cannot be withdrawn. Only one amendment is moved at a time.

Mr. Hayes: I sympathise with the amendments of my hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam and of the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen). The hon. Gentleman is saying, "Hang on for a moment. We do not want to rush things. There are many other matters to be considered. Sentencing is not being dealt with at this stage and other legislation must be taken into account." My hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam is saying, "This is a very serious offence and those guilty of it should be dealt with straight away." I understand both points of view, but the matter must be put into perspective.

The offences in question are most serious. Figures for the five years from 1987 to 1991 show that nearly 215 boys aged between 10 and 13 were prosecuted for indecent assault on a female, and 1,260 were cautioned. Over the same period, 21 offenders were proceeded against for an indecent assault on a male and 187 were cautioned. In some of those cases—one cannot say precisely how many—there will have been penetration, and a charge of indecent assault would have been viewed by the victims as something of a euphemism.

Mr. Wells: On a point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. Will you clarify which amendment is under consideration? My understanding is that we are debating only amendment No. 2, in the name of the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen), which states:

"This Act shall come into force on such date as the Secretary of State may by order made by statutory instrument appoint."

Is that correct?

Madam Deputy Speaker: What the hon. Gentleman says is correct but not complete. Two other amendments which have a slightly different import are under consideration.

11.15 am

Mr. Hayes: I am dealing with all the amendments in the most even-handed way that I can. As you said, Madam Deputy Speaker, the three amendments are grouped.

My hon. Friends the Members for Sutton and Cheam and for Wyre Forest (Mr. Coombs) argue that the offence must be placed on the statute book as quickly as possible because something must be done. Something is being done. It is not as though the young people who commit such offences cannot be dealt with by the police and the courts—they can. The argument behind the Bill is that those offenders are being dealt with in an absurd fashion—that the crime of which they are convicted does not reflect the gravity of the actual offence.

I ask my hon. Friends to remember also that the police and the courts are under a tremendous burden in dealing with the legislation that the House pumps out like a sausage machine with great regularity. As Opposition Members pointed out, some of it is not as good and accurate as we would like. It would be only right and proper to give the authorities two months to understand precisely the purpose of the legislation. That is not a great length of time—particularly as the young people concerned, although mercifully there will not be many of them, must be dealt with by the police.

I acknowledge also the point made by the hon. Member for Leyton, which was similar to that of my hon. Friend the Member for Wyre Forest. The Bill does not address sentencing because we must wait for my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary to bring other legislation before the House. It would be wrong to delay clear and simple legislation such as the Bill on account of the sentencing aspect, when we know that will be appropriately dealt with at the correct time.

Mr. Anthony Coombs: We hope so.

Mr. Hayes: We all hope that will be so, and it will be for hon. Members on both sides of the House to rectify many of the mistakes for which we must all share responsibility. After all, we voted for the legislation.

Mr. Wells: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for allowing me to intervene during the middle of his peroration. He has not yet answered my point as to why he claims that the Bill refers only to rape and not to any other form of sexual intercourse.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. It would not be appropriate to deal with that point under this set of amendments.

Mr. Hayes: I am guided by you in these matters, Madam Deputy Speaker. I should love to debate that point with my hon. Friend. Given the number of interventions he made, perhaps he owes me a very large lunch today, and we could discuss the matter then.

I ask the hon. Member for Leyton to consider withdrawing his amendment in the interests of speed.

Mr. Cohen: I intend to withdraw my amendment, but I shall briefly make a couple of points. The hon. Members for Sutton and Cheam (Lady Olga Maitland) and for Ribble Valley (Mr. Evans) attacked my hon. Friend the Member for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone) for talking out a Bill in the last Parliament, but that Bill addressed a completely different issue. It sought to deal with kerb-crawling and to create more offences of prostitution, which my hon. Friend opposed. It did not concern itself with children, as does the Bill now before us.

I share many of the concerns expressed by the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells), who made several genuine points. The hon. Member for Sutton and Cheam also made a good point when she said that children who abuse were often abused themselves, as were their parents. That makes the case for counselling and help, yet the hon. Lady did not argue that point. She spoke only of locking up young offenders in secure units. More attention should be given to providing counselling and other help.

Lady Olga Maitland: Of course children who come from families with a history of abuse and who themselves commit offences of abuse against others need counselling, but where children are accused of rape—we are trying to define that—they should receive the appropriate sentence. At that age, I hope that they will also receive counselling.

Mr. Cohen: I have made my point. The point has also been made that it will not be sufficient just to pass the Bill. Implications will automatically flow from it. The Minister cannot just wash his hands of it and say that after it is passed he will not have to worry about any of the implications. Having made my point, however, I beg to ask leave to withdraw the amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Order for Third Reading read.

11.20 am

Mr. Hayes: I beg to move, That the Bill be now read the Third time.

The hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) suggested, from a sedentary position, that these proceedings are a filibuster. May I say both to him and to the hon. Member for Durham, North (Mr. Radice), who has introduced some very important legislation which I sincerely hope will be considered by the House today, that when the Sexual Offences Bill came before the House on Second Reading it went through on the nod, simply because of lack of time. Therefore, it is important to have a full debate now. This is not a trivial piece of legislation. It deals with juvenile crime.

Mr. Giles Radice (Durham, North): I do not, of course, accuse the hon. Gentleman of anything, but he appears to have something of a guilty conscience. As far as I know, he broadly supports my Bill—but perhaps he wants virtue, though not just yet. It is true that there was no Second Reading debate, but I understand that in Committee the proceedings were so controversial that they went through in 20 minutes.

Mr. Hayes: The difficulty is that those who serve on Committees are not always willing participants, whereas those who come along on Friday mornings—when many Members believe that they should be with their families or their constituents—feel strongly that they should have the right to be heard.

Mr. Michael: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Hayes: Yes, but then I must press on.

Mr. Michael: I am sure that the hon. Gentleman wishes to press on, but I should like to clear him of any guilt relating to this matter. His contributions to the debate this morning have been very restrained, despite the fact that some of his hon. Friends have sought to widen the debate way beyond the limits of the Bill. However, the Second Reading went through on the nod and the Committee stage took 20 minutes. The Bill has had its Report stage this morning, and all of a sudden, when we arrived at Third Reading, a large number of hon. Members wandered into the Chamber and jumped up, thus indicating that they wanted to speak. That looks to me like a filibuster and an attempt to talk out the Bill that my hon. Friend the Member for Durham, North (Mr. Radice) has introduced in an effort to protect the British public. That is a disgrace.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. I have made the point before to the hon. Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes) that we must stick to the point. If hon. Members want to speak on Third Reading, they are entitled to do so, but I suggest that that is exactly what they do.

Mr. Harry Greenway (Ealing, North): On a point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. I think that I am the only person who has come late to the debate. [HON. MEMBERS: "No."] Whether I am or not, I have strong reasons for being late. I am very interested in the Bill and wish to speak on Third Reading. It is not right for hon. Members to be pressurised in this way and to be denied their entitlement to speak on Third Reading. I am glad to note, Madam Deputy Speaker, that you are protecting us.

Mr. Hayes: I am grateful to you, Madam Speaker, for your ruling. I am delighted to say that the Bill has the full support of the Opposition Front Bench, as well as the support of the Liberal Democrats.

Ms Liz Lynne (Rochdale): The hon. Gentleman says that the Bill has the full support of the official Opposition and the Liberal Democrats. I agree. Therefore, I cannot understand why it is taking so long.

Mr. Hayes: If the hon. Lady had been here longer, she might understand. She has been here for only about 10 minutes.

Ms Lynne: I understand that the Committee stage took 20 minutes and that there has been no opposition to the Bill whatsoever. Therefore, I reiterate my point: I do not understand why it is taking so long.

Mr. Hayes: Perhaps the prolonged absence of the hon. Lady and the fact that she had nothing to say was because she was convinced by the arguments.

It may help if I deal with the policy background. The Bill implements a recommendation of the Criminal Law Revision Committee in its 1984 report on sexual offences, that the presumption of incapacity in law of boys between the ages of 10 and 13 should be abolished. That recommendation was included in a private Member's Bill in 1990 on sexual offences which received all-round support.

The offences covered include all crimes that involve an offender's capacity to penetrate the vagina or anus, rape, buggery, or attempts to commit these offences, unlawful sexual intercourse with a girl under 13 or 16, unlawful sexual intercourse with a person suffering from a mental disorder or defect, or any other sexual offence involving penetration. May I point out to my hon. Friend the Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells) that we are not criminalising consensual sex between teenagers, whether it be homosexual sex or heterosexual sex, or sex with animals.

Earlier I gave the figures for the past five years. Between 1987 and 1991 they show that nearly 215 boys, aged between 10 and 13, were prosecuted for indecent assault on females and that 1,260 were cautioned. Over the same period, 21 were proceeded against for indecent assault on males, and 187 were cautioned. In some of those cases, though we cannot say precisely how many, there will have been penetration. A charge of indecent assault will have seemed to the victims to have been quite outrageous. These offences cause real distress to the victims. That distress may be compounded if they then find that their attackers cannot be convicted of the right offence. That adds insult to injury.

Some hon. Members may ask what is the point of being convicted of the right offence if those convicted are not then subjected to custody. That point was made properly by my hon. Friend the Member for Wyre Forest (Mr. Coombs).

Mr. Michael: On a point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. Is it in order for briefing meetings for the filibuster to take place within the Chamber?

Madam Deputy Speaker: The Chair has no knowledge of those matters.

Mr. Hayes: Some people may ask what is the point of young people being convicted of the right offence if they are not then subjected to custody. My hon. Friend the Member for Wyre Forest has made it clear, as have many of us on this side of the House, that we await with great interest what my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary presents to us on the Floor of the House at some future time.

Section 53 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933, which gives courts powers to order the long-term detention of juveniles convicted of grave crimes, applies, in the case of those under 14, to the offences of murder and manslaughter, something which I hope will interest the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) and my hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam (Lady Olga Maitland). Intensive community-based supervision has proved to be an effective way of responding to children of this age who commit serious offences. When removal from home is necessary, local authorities have powers under the Children Act 1989 to take care proceedings. When children in the care of local authorities need to be contained, a placement can be made in secure accommodation, provided that the criteria under the Children Act are met.

I understand that my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary is working on proposals for a new sentence to provide education and training in a secure setting for juveniles who persistently offend. That will be welcomed not just in the House but throughout the country. I understand that my right hon. and learned Friend is also considering the adequacy of the scope of detention under section 53.

Some people may ask whether this legislation will penalise children unfairly. I believe that there is absolutely no risk of naughty or mischievous children being brought erroneously before the courts. The prosecution will have to prove that the accused understood that what he did was seriously wrong.

There is no need for the Bill to extend to Scotland since the common law has never recognised a presumption of incapacity, and Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State.

The Bill is simple, straightforward, clear and absolutely necessary. It is necessary for the young women who have been raped, taunted and have gone to hell and back only to find their attackers facing the ridiculous charge of indecent assault when they know that a wicked offence of rape has taken place. I commend the Bill to the House.

11.30 am

Lady Olga Maitland: I warmly congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes) on introducing the Bill—it certainly is not before time.

It is insulting to be accused by the Opposition of filibustering because I have had a long-standing interest in the subject. I was not invited to be a member of the Standing Committee, but I wish that I had been. If I had, I would have made my speech then.

I am very concerned. I am a mother of three children and have brought them up to understand good sexual matters.

Mr. Ian McCartney (Makerfield): I take what the hon. Lady is saying with a pinch of salt. She had a choice of being a member of the Standing Committee that considered the Medicines Information Bill or the one that considered the Sexual Offences Bill, in which she says she is interested. She chose to be a member of the Committee that considered the Medicines Information Bill, which she attempted unsuccessfully to filibuster. She has turned up this morning——

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. That is not relevant to what we are debating.

Lady Olga Maitland: I trust that the hon. Gentleman will withdraw his remarks about me. I will stick to the main point because I am concerned about this matter.

Children need to be taught sexual manners. The tragedy of today is that they have been polluted by television, the press and society's attitude of take it, grab it and have it at any price.

Mr. Harry Greenway: My hon. Friend is making an important point, but it must be placed in the context of education. I have dealt with these matters over many years, and I do not think that it is easy to teach children sexual manners. They should be taught that sex should take place in a loving relationship.

Lady Olga Maitland: I thank my hon. Friend. I was coming to that point.

I have consistently said for a long time that sexual manners are a moral responsibility. The Bill addresses an extremely serious offence and children who commit it should not think they can get away with it because they will be charged with the minor offence of sexual assault. Young people who forcefully commit penetrative sexual offences should understand that society will not tolerate it.

We should also be paying much greater attention to the victims. As my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow said, those victims have been through the personal agony of rape—that is what it is—and to have it dismissed as a seemingly more minor offence makes the agony worse. Victims are often young people—sometimes younger than their assailant. They and their families need a tremendous amount of counselling and support. Everyone should understand that rape is rape and that it cannot be described as another offence such as sexual assault.

Mr. Anthony Coombs: I do not want to detain the House long because, despite what Opposition Front-Bench spokesmen have said, I am interested in the Bill and have some sympathy with it, but there are important matters to be discussed.

My attitude is somewhat equivocal. I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes) on introducing the Bill, which is a sensible measure and should have been on the statute book long ago, but it is primarily, though not totally, a cosmetic measure and will not do anything to right the wrongs by ensuring adequate punishment and counselling for those who are guilty of heinous crimes.

As long ago as 1984, the Criminal Law Revision Committee said that a Bill was necessary. Sir William Shelton introduced a Bill, which, sadly, was talked out by an Opposition Member. Speaking on the Second Reading of that Bill, the then Home Office Minister, the present Secretary of State for Education, said:

"the law is adding to the injury of a vicious rape or a brutal act of sexual assault the insult that it did not happen."—[Official Report, 11 May 1990; Vol. 167, c. 608.]

That is why the Bill is so important. If the Government feel that the penalty for rape should be life imprisonment —the penalty has increased under this Government—the Bill should reflect that, especially as much of the case law on the capacity of a young person to commit rape comes from the 19th century. The latest case that I have been able to find is 1921. With greater nutrition, the sexual activity of children under 14 has greatly increased; hence the need for the Bill.

I understand that if a woman is raped by somebody under 14, she does not benefit from the same anonymity as if it were categorised as rape. Women will now benefit from that anonymity, which must be a step forward. The Bill will remove the anomaly whereby somebody under 14 can be convicted of aiding and abetting rape, but cannot be guilty of the full offence.

I appreciate hon. Members' concern for young people who commit this kind of appalling crime, but, as my hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam (Lady Olga Maitland) said, let us not forget the victims. Irrespective of whether a rapist is under 14 or not, the psychological trauma for women will be quite enormous and therefore the punishment should fit the crime.

Sadly, the Bill allows the conviction to fit the crime but says nothing about the punishment. I understand my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow wishing to await the Home Secretary's deliberations—possibly redeliberations—but the punishment regime for young offenders is inadequate. The Bill should have addressed that, but we may have an opportunity to discuss the matter in 10 days' time in an Adjournment debate on juvenile crime that I have been able to secure.

If the Bill is enacted, the court will have to be convinced that anyone who is convicted, first, committed the act, secondly, knew that what they were doing was wrong and, thirdly, had the mental maturity to realise the consequences of their action. We are not talking only about people who may have been too immature to appreciate the consequences of such an appalling crime but about people who should be punished because they knew perfectly well, as an adult would, what the consequences would be.

I agree with my hon. Friend the Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls) who said in Committee:

"For too long, the idea that containment is a necessary part of a custodial sentence has been put to one side."—[Official Report, Standing Committee F, 17 February 1993; c. 4.]

We have talked too often about rehabilitation and talked too little about retribution and the deterrence of potential offenders. I understand what my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes) said about section 53 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 and the Children Act 1989 in terms of the custodial sentence available for those under 14 years of age who commit the appalling crimes that we are now discussing, but I believe that, in the main, the regime of punishment for the under-14s is feeble.

My hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam mentioned the figures for such crimes. In England and Wales, of 757 instances of indecent assault on a female by males under the age of 14—admittedly not all of which were cases of rape—only five offenders were restrained in custody, although some may have received supervision orders. Despite the psychological damage that they had caused, only five offenders were restrained to prevent them from repeating their offence and in order to protect women.

The problem has been significantly exacerbated by the Criminal Justice Act 1991 which effectively abolished detention in youth offender institutions for people under 15. That was a massively retrograde step and one which I hope the Home Secretary will very soon put right. I shall not delay the House by outlining what I saw when I recently visited my local youth attendance centre, which was used in five cases in 1991 to deal with people who had indecently assaulted females, but I believe that the menu of punishments available for juveniles is not good enough in terms of counselling or rigorous enough in terms of punishment, deterrence or society's retribution for the appalling crimes of which many of these youngsters are found guilty.

It is small wonder that, in relation to the same Criminal Justice Act, the Home Affairs Select Committee recently said:

"The age limitations by the Criminal Justice Act 1991 on the use of secure accommodation should be the subject of research to determine the risks borne by the public by the apparent inability to control the activities of the hard-core persistent juvenile offenders under the age of 15."

I hope that when the Home Secretary publishes his proposals for secure accommodation for young offenders, he will not confine them to persistent offenders but will also deal with young people who may not have persistently offended but who have nevertheless been found guilty of crimes such as rape which most of us deplore.

It is crucial that we deal with the type of situation reported in The Guardian on 3 January last year. An Old Bailey judge ordered a 14-year-old boy who had raped a girl of the same age to be detained for 34 months. The judge said that the case

"draws attention to the fact that legislation currently not only fetters but sometimes prevents juvenile courts from depriving young people of their liberty" in cases involving such heinous crime.

I know that I am talking about what is not in the Bill rather than what is in the Bill, but if we did not deal with these issues we should be talking about only a part of what is a difficult problem. I give a cautious half welcome to this half measure and look forward with great interest to the proposals to be made by the Home Secretary and his colleagues, which I hope will be better in terms of juvenile punishment.

Mr. Coachman: I am glad to have caught your eye, Madam Deputy Speaker, during the Third Reading debate. I am slightly affronted by some of the comments made by members of Labour's Front Bench——

Mr. McCartney: He is paid by Pfizer.

Mr. Couchman: It is unusual for an hon. Member who is on his feet to raise a point of order, but I wish to draw attention to the insinuation of the hon. Member for Makerfield (Mr. McCartney). It is quite deplorable and does not help us to make progress to the very important Bill on which I wish to speak at length after we have debated this Bill.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. I did not hear what I gather must have been a sedentary observation, but hon. Members know my views on sedentary observations. They will also know my views on matters which are not germane to the matter under discussion. I want to hear no more of it from anyone.

Mr. McCartney rose——

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. Sit down. I said that I wanted to hear no more.

Mr. Couchman: I do indeed wish to speak on the Medicines Information Bill which follows and I have tabled several important amendments to it. I have taken an interest in that Bill right from the word go, and I regret that it does not command a complete morning's debate for its Report and Third Reading because it deserves that. I am affronted by the insinuation that has been made.

It has been pointed out that the Sexual Offences Bill received its Second Reading on the nod—I think that was the description. I feel obliged to say that that is no doubt because it was second, third or even fourth on the Order Paper on that day. If it had not received a Second Reading on the nod, it would not have received a Second Reading at all because time would have run out and there would have been no opportunity to discuss it. That is regrettable, because I acknowledge that the speech that I am about to make is a Second Reading speech. I would have opposed the Bill on Second Reading had I had the opportunity to do so.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. Unfortunately, time has moved on, and the hon. Gentleman must make a Third Reading speech.

Mr. Couchman: I take your point, Madam Deputy Speaker, but I have contained myself during the wide-ranging discussion on the two groups of amendments.

As has been said exhaustively, the purpose of the Bill is to abolish the presumption in the current criminal law that a boy under 14 is incapable of sexual intercourse defined as penetration, whether natural or unnatural. It is presumed in common law that a boy aged between 10 and 13 is physically incapable of an offence that involves penetration and cannot therefore be charged with rape, but only with the less serious crime of indecent assault.

The Bill would amend the law to allow a boy between the ages of 10 and 13 to be charged with the appropriate offence if he commits any unlawful sexual act involving penetration. It seeks only to change the definition of the offence under which a 10 to 13-year-old juvenile male can be charged. It does not seek to make any provision for punishment of the new offence, and that is one of its great weaknesses. Although it may be seen as providing greater equity and justice in law for the victims—we have heard a great deal about that from my hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam (Lady Olga Maitland) and others—it does not provide any greater deterrents. I am especially worried by some of the comments made by my hon. Friend the Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells). He seemed to underestimate the seriousness of the offences that we have to consider.

There will be no distinction in the punishment available between the existing crime of indecent assault and the new crime of rape by juveniles. There was no debate on Second Reading and only 20 minutes' discussion in Committee. No amendments were moved in Committee and there were only three speakers, including the Minister. I regret that the Bill has had rather less discussion and consideration than it merits. It is a major step in terms of seeking to criminalise, as my hon. Friend the Member for Hertford and Stortford put it, certain offences committed by 10 to 13-year-olds.

I am especially concerned that the Bill is deficient in two major respects. It does not seek to define the exact nature of the new crime in terms that can be proven in court. It fails to provide new punitive measures for the crime that would deter potential offenders and treat adequately those convicted.

Definition is at the heart of the Bill. Numerous examples are available to show that sexual offences are very difficult to prove, as has been mentioned by my hon. Friends the Members for Wyre Forest (Mr. Coombs) and for Sutton and Cheam. "Rape: from recording to conviction", the Home Office research and planning unit paper No. 71, gave the results of a three-month study in 1985 which concluded that cases of rape or attempted rape recorded by the police have only a one in four chance of resulting in a conviction. According to the study, only between one tenth and one quarter of women suffering rape report the crime to the police.

The university of North London has conducted more recent research which suggests that the conviction rate has fallen below the 1985 average, despite changes in the criminal justice system. Of 114 cases of rape or attempted rape reported to north London police stations, only 15 reached the Crown court and only four resulted in prison terms. A further 11 cases were sent to court as indecent assault charges. As one of the researchers concluded: "corroboration is very often difficult in rape cases."

It is worth mentioning again the timely example of the recent case of a Southwark school teacher who was allegedly raped by a 13-year-old while a 14-year-old held her down. The teaching unions were reported as saying that they believed that this was the first reported case of a suspected rape by a pupil on a teacher in a British school. It now appears highly likely that the case will not be pursued because there is insufficient forensic evidence to support the claim by the victim.

Mr. Harry Greenway: I draw my hon. Friend's attention to the fact that the Bill may assist in dealing with this problem: many young lady teachers are intimidated, sexually and in other ways, by boys under the age of 14. It is vital that those teachers are given better support and a better defence, and the Bill will begin to do that. Does my hon. Friend agree?

Mr. Couchman: I agree entirely. I am certainly not against the principle of the Bill. I am concerned that the Bill does not provide the right answer to the problem that my hon. Friend highlights. The Southwark example shows just how difficult it would be to prove a case against 10 to 13-year-olds who have previously been deemed incapable in law of rape or similar offences. It also calls into question the claim that simply changing the definition of such offences would comfort or compensate the victim by providing greater equity under the law.

My second reservation concerns penalties, treatment and deterrents.

Mr. Barry Porter (Wirral, South): I have been trying hard to follow my hon. Friend's argument. As I understand it, he is saying that a new crime has been invented. That is not the case under the Bill. The crime —rape—remains the same. If the presumption about boys of 10 to 14 is abolished, people who could not otherwise be charged can be charged. No new crime is involved.

The reason I came into the Chamber today is an unusual one for a Member of Parliament. I came to listen to the arguments being deployed by my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes), who has now left the Chamber. It would help if people were not accused of using Friday mornings to get rid of later Bills——

Mr. McCartney: The hon. Gentleman does it regularly.

Mr. Porter: I seek your protection, Madam Deputy Speaker, from such sedentary interventions. I——

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. I have made it plain that I deplore seated interventions. However, if the hon. Gentleman had followed my other precept, that interventions should be short, he would already have sat down.

Mr. Porter: I take the point, Madam Deputy Speaker. I shall act in accord with your wishes, although what is short is a matter of subjectivity.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. It is a matter for me.

Mr. Couchman: That was such a long intervention that I am not entirely sure what the point made by my hon. Friend the Member for Wirral, South (Mr. Porter) was. I suspect that it was to do with whether we have invented a new crime. My hon. Friend said that he came into the Chamber to listen. If he had been here from the beginning of the debate, as I have been, he would have heard a great deal of argument about the definition of rape and about the definition of sexual offences covered by the Bill. I shall try to make progress more swiftly. I hope that the matter will become clear to him.

Mr. Barry Porter: Will my hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Couchman: I must resist on this occasion.

The Bill makes no provision for the treatment and punishment of offenders under the proposed new category of offence. It will not deter juveniles from committing such offences simply by changing the definition. Under existing legislation, indecent assault is the strongest charge that can be brought against a juvenile under 14, yet even that is not recognised as a grave crime for punitive purposes. The promoter of the Bill, my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes), acknowledged as much in Committee. He said:

"Section 53 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 gives the courts the power to order the long-term detention of juveniles convicted of grave crimes."—[Official Report, Standing Committee F, 17 February 1993; c. 4.]

My hon. Friend has confirmed that point only this morning. The same problem applies to those under 14 who are charged with murder or with manslaughter, and no one doubts the severity or gravity of those crimes. Hon. Members do not underestimate the gravity of the crime of rape. That is what we are talking about and that is what the Bill is about.

We should look to the judiciary for comment. In an article in The Times on 9 March, Justice Cohen, a designated rape judge, said in reference to the Bill:

"It is to be hoped that it will soon become law because a change is long overdue and that consideration will be given to review the powers of the courts to deal adequately with young offenders charged with this offence."

The treatment is inadequate and no remedies are set out in the Bill. It seeks merely to abolish the presumption that a 10 to 13-year-old is incapable of the offence.

Judge Cohen then said:

"The new government proposals to set up service training centres for young offenders between the ages of 12-15 will not apply to young rapists unless they are persistent offenders."

If a young 13-year-old commits one rape, he is unlikely to come into the category in which the Government's proposals will hold sway. What will happen to youngsters between the ages of 10 and 12? They will not be covered by the proposed service training centres.

The judge concluded:

"There is still no adequate way of dealing with young rapists, especially those under 15. It may be that the time has arrived to rethink our policy of dealing with young sex offenders in order both to help and to punish the offender himself and to deter him and others from offending in this way."

No one disagrees that a change in the law is overdue and should be made soon. However, it would be extremely premature to create a new category of juvenile offences before we have even found adequate ways in which to treat existing categories of offenders.

Furthermore, a definitional change without the necessary provisions for treatment and punishment could undermine the whole purpose of the Bill and provide yet more evidence for the cynics who regard the law as an ass. It would also place judges in an impossible position in sentencing such juvenile offenders.

The whole purpose of the sentencing to which I have referred would be to deter. By itself, the name given to an offence is not a deterrent to those who might commit it. The fear of detection, coupled with the severity of the punishment, is much more likely to deter. The gravity of the charge of rape, for example, does not appear to have acted as any deterrent against adults committing such a crime. There is, however, abundant evidence of the deterrent effect on the victim and the police of the disparity between the crime and the punishment.

In a recent celebrated case, a 15-year-old boy—I accept that he would not be covered by the Bill—raped a fellow pupil for not giving him a birthday kiss. The judge decided that the boy should be placed under a three-year supervision order and should pay £500 to his——

Mr. Michael: On a point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. As has been said several times, we are on Third Reading, but we seem to be hearing about issues that have nothing to do with the Bill and are even now hearing about a case involving someone outside the age range dealt with in the Bill. We have been told several times that Conservative Members are not filibustering, but there is a temptation to think that that is what is happening.

Madam Deputy Speaker: I have been listening with attention and I agree that the debate is becoming rather wide, even for a Third Reading debate. I hope that the hon. Member for Gillingham (Mr. Couchman) will bear that in mind in his further remarks.

Mr. Couchman: I have nearly finished, Madam Deputy Speaker. It is worth mentioning that, although the case of the 15-year-old is outside the scope of the Bill, that boy was only a little older than the children that we are considering criminalising under the Bill. I am talking about deterrence, and it is beyond peradventure that the deterrent effect of the sentence passed on that 15-year-old was insufficient. I am glad to say that the case has been reviewed and that a more severe sentence has been imposed. The lack of adequate penalties for such crimes will certainly not assist in deterring potential criminals, but it will certainly deter victims from plucking up the courage to report such crimes and will also deter the police from encouraging the victims to prosecute.

If it is true that young people are more impressionable and can be influenced at an early age, the deterrent factor becomes critical. In dealing with juvenile crime, which the Bill seeks to do, there can be no benefit in altering the legal terminology—which distinction even the courts have difficulty in understanding, let alone a 10-year-old—yet making absolutely no distinction in terms of the severity of the sentence.

No one doubts that the purpose of the Bill should be supported. However, it is both premature and defective in several major respects. First, it seeks to redefine the category of sexual offences which can be committed by boys under 14 without providing measures to deal with these new offences. Secondly, the practical definition of such offences is even more difficult to apply with 10 to 13-year-olds than in dealing with current categories of juvenile offenders. Thirdly, the Bill does not provide any measures to deter or treat those who commit the new category of offences.

The Bill is premature and could be damaging in its present form, providing theory without substance. In my estimation, the Bill has had inadequate time for debate both on Second Reading and in Committee. If it achieves its Third Reading in a few minutes' time, it will go to the other place, where perhaps a judicial mind will be brought to bear on it. It may return to the House for the final day on private Members' Bills on 2 July in a rather better form than the form in which it will leave this place today.

Mr. Nigel Evans: I am grateful for the opportunity to speak on Third Reading and to congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes) on introducing the Bill. The profile of law and order has certainly been raised recently. Only last week I attended a public meeting on the subject in one of the smaller villages in my constituency which was attended by more than 120 people. I was presented with a petition carrying more than 1,000 signatures—a great number for a local petition. Public awareness has been heightened and I know that many members of the public will wish the House to do something about the anomaly that we have been discussing.

The Bill is important to the morale of the public, the police, those who work in the courts and the victims, whose interests it is extremely important to remember. I do not believe that the victims of rape care how old the perpetrator is. Why should they? We need to talk a little more and care a little more about the victims of crime such as rape, and that is what we are doing today. Their lives have been destroyed at the hands of vicious and callous individuals.

In many cases, those who commit the sickest of crimes know exactly what they are doing and must be held entirely responsible for their actions. There can be no mitigating factors. That is why I welcome the Bill, which will rectify the anomaly in the legal system whereby those under the age of 14 are considered incapable of intercourse and therefore incapable of rape. The hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) called it a legal myth, and that is exactly what it is. Young people under the age of 14 are very capable of achieving intercourse. The BMA's figures suggest that 2·5 per cent. of youngsters aged 12 or even younger have had a sexual encounter. It is important to remember that.

We cannot draw a line in the sand and state specifically when a person is old enough to achieve penetration. It varies widely from individual to individual. Therefore, in cases of rape, the crime should be judged on the facts: did it happen or did it not happen—was the victim raped or was the victim not raped? The age of the assailant should have no bearing on the issue. How can we tell the victim of rape that those responsible for the crime cannot be tried for the crime that they committed, only for a lesser offence? Have the victims not suffered enough already? Are we to deny them even more of their dignity?

On Second Reading of the Sexual Offences Bill in 1990, the then Minister of State, Home Office, said:

> "Any hon. Member who has received, as we have received in the Home Office, letters from the parents of a violated child who has gone through the most awful physical pain and, as hon. Members have said, who may suffer persistent mental trauma for many years, will know the pain and the consternation that they feel".—[Official Report, 16 February 1990; Vol. 167, c. 608.]

We must pay regard to that.

What kind of message are we sending to those who believe that the law lacks common sense by denying that a 12 or 13-year-old can commit rape? Not acknowledging the seriousness of the crime is tantamount to condoning it. Those responsible may be free to live their lives never understanding the true ramifications of their ghastly crime. Society can no longer afford to set that example. Rape is rape. It is not sexual assault but the most vicious form of degradation known to mankind.

I contacted the Lancashire constabulary to find out how many cases had occurred in my area. The constabulary's figures showed that, in 1992, there were 25 cases of sexual offences committed by males ages 14 or under, two at the age of nine, two at the age of 11, five at the age of 12 and four at the age of 13. Those statistics are extremely important. As my hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam (Lady Olga Maitland) has already said, the national figures in relation to the sexual offences about which we are concerned today and which we are trying to correct are quite ghastly.

I have several reflections on how we can give the crime the full recognition in the eyes of the law that it deserves. As my hon. Friends the Members for Wyre Forest (Mr. Coombs), for Sutton and Cheam and for Gillingham (Mr. Couchman) have said, we are simply considering the conviction and not the punishment that must follow the conviction. I hope that hon. Members will regard the Bill as a paving measure along the road to something which must follow—punishment for those convicted of rape.

[Mr. Nigel Evans]

Under our current legal system, someone under the age of 14 convicted of any crime other than murder cannot be dealt with effectively by the courts. When the Bill reaches the statute book, as I sincerely hope it will, it will still not enable the courts to award harsher punishments than are available now for the lesser offence of sexual assault.

I was comforted by the comments of my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow about counselling and how the social services can take some offenders into care and secure accommodation. That must be right. However, I look forward to the day when we have legislation to allow the courts to punish properly those who are convicted of rape, irrespective of age. That must be absolutely right.

At the moment, section 53 does not allow the courts to do that and that must be changed as soon as possible. I am aware that the House is clogged with legislation at the moment, but time must be found soon to allow the House to discuss that important legislation which needs to come before the House.

There are wider issues involved in the debate. There is no doubt that the youth of today are maturing faster than at any time in the past. That has been brought about by social pressures and expectations which perhaps did not exist 40 or 50 years ago. Therefore, the Bill must not be seen in splendid isolation.

There must be far more parental guidance in future. I have great reservations about the break-up of the moral fabric of many households. I am concerned about the fact that there are far more family break-ups and more single parents today. However, that does not absolve parents from their responsibility to their children. They should give them as much guidance as possible in all manner of things.

Like my hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam, I recognise the impact of television in the home. Television is all pervasive. When we switch it on, we can see all manner of things at all times, particularly now that we have satellite television. I am delighted that the Government have acted against Red Hot Television and that they have been successful so far.

We must also bear in mind that videos are available in the home. They also have an impact on people of all ages. Part of the problem is that, in houses where there is no moral guidance for youngsters of 10, 11 or 12 years of age, they can switch on a television set and can see shocking pictures. If moral guidance from parents is lacking, what is a 10, 11 or 12-year-old to make of what he or she sees on the television? Action must be taken quickly to ensure that we clean up many of the programmes which are transmitted.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman is pushing his luck. May we now return to the substance of the Bill?

Mr. Evans: We are saying that people under the age of 14 are capable of rape, and I have been referring to the moral guidance that such people require. I have dealt with the home and I am extremely grateful for the latitude that you have shown, Madam Deputy Speaker.

I believe that it is important that those who are capable of committing the act of rape should receive guidance in the form of sex education in schools. I was therefore delighted to learn that the new draft circular has been published and sent to schools pointing out that sex education should be taught with a moral framework in relation to family guidance. My hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) made that point.

I believe that schools have a role to play to ensure that we do not send our youngsters on to the streets where they lack moral guidance from their families——

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. The same strictures apply now as applied a moment ago. If we are talking about the education system, surely the capacity to deal with the subject in hand is an important mark of educational attainment.

Mr. Evans: I am obviously guided by you, Madam Deputy Speaker.

In supporting the Bill, I welcome the fact that it will receive its Third Reading and will, I hope, reach the statute book very soon. My constituents are concerned about all forms of crime, whether it be crime to property or to persons. They want the courts to be given the power properly to convict someone between the ages of 10 and 14 who has committed rape for the crime that person has committed and not for a lesser offence. In the not-too-distant future, legislation will, I hope, be introduced to allow the courts to punish properly people who have been convicted of that terrible crime.

Mr. Harry Greenway: I will be brief——.

Mr. Michael: I should think so.

Mr. Greenway: I do not think that that kind of remark is called for. It does not help the House to address an extremely serious matter. I wonder whether the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) really cares about the issue at all. He seems to want to dismiss any discussion of the subject for whatever reason.

Mr. Michael: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Greenway: No, I will not. I do not believe that sedentary interventions of that kind are called for. However, you have given a ruling on that, Madam Deputy Speaker, and I will not pursue the matter.

I have been present in the Chamber throughout the Third Reading debate——

Mr. McCartney: The hon. Gentleman was not here earlier.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. I do not wish to reprimand the hon. Member for Makerfield (Mr. McCartney) unduly. However, I have already said that I deplore seated interventions. I do not expect to have any more, particularly from the Front Benches.

Mr. Greenway: Thank you, Madam Deputy Speaker. I explained why I was not present earlier. I will be speedy as I recognise the importance of the next Bill to come before the House. However, the Bill that we are considering now could not be more important at a time when there is serious violence, some of which is sexual, among young people.

I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes) on introducing the Bill. It is good that we have been able to discuss it this morning. It sets before the nation a very important issue.

I have a reservation which I want to mention, but on which I will not dwell. I believe that there is a chance that the Bill could lead to a lower age of consent than 16. If my right hon. Friend the Member for Harlow considers that, he might understand how I reach that conclusion. If he does not, I could discuss it with him some time.

I believe that lowering the age of consent would be regrettable. I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will bear that in mind as he considers the ramifications of the Bill when it becomes an Act. The criminal law for rape will be applied to those under 14 as a result of the Bill. My hon. Friend the Member for Harlow rightly said that, to be convicted, a boy will need to have understood that what he did was seriously wrong. It is sad that there are boys who do not understand that the sexual offence of rape is rape when they commit it. Of course, that is another matter. Any court or body that deals with such an individual will take careful account of the mental development of the child. That important matter is covered in the Bill.

The Bill will have a serious impact on schools, and that must be welcomed. That aspect has been mentioned and I will develop it. As my hon. Friend the Member for Ribble Valley (Mr. Evans) said, a large number of children of all ages, including young children, watch explicit sex on television and, as a result, feel moved to try it. Children are under peer pressure at school and feel that they need to succeed, and that may lead to boys being forceful with girls, or even young female teachers. There have been sexual assaults and worse on young teachers. Young children are driven to that by what they see on television and peer group pressure. We need to take careful account of that in law, because children below the age of 14 are affected.

Family doctors or doctors dealing with schools know that children are maturing much earlier. I heard only this week of an 11-year-old boy who is pronounced to have the physical maturity of a fully grown man, although he lacks the mental maturity of a man. He was described as having strong sexual impulses and urges. He has had to be disciplined at school for pulling up girls' skirts and attacking them physically in some way. There has been a danger of his doing more than simply pulling up dresses —he was seen to pull down a girl's pants. That is seriously bad behaviour. In the school involved, it was certainly thought that the boy was likely to be worked up to the point of wanting to have sexual intercourse with the girl involved, because it had happened on a number of occasions with the same girl. That girl will be more protected as a result of the Bill and its provisions, and that is extremely important.

It is more serious to say that boys aged 14 and under can have sexual passions for teachers, rather than simply for other girls. They can attack female teachers in the same way as the boy whom I described attacked a girl of his own age. The matter is becoming more serious in some schools in which discipline has declined. To the Government's credit, they are tackling that sort of indiscipline. The matter needs to be addressed, and my hon. Friend's Bill will help greatly.

The age of puberty is unquestionably coming down all the time—happily, in one sense, because children are better fed and have better welfare. They grow more quickly and they grow bigger and stronger. However, the mental maturity of children is not keeping pace with the more rapid physical maturity that I have described. That is a problem, because children under the age of 14 rarely have the maturity to control the strong sexual urges that I have described. They need to control those urges. That applies to children not only in schools but in youth clubs and elsewhere.

Children under the age of 14—I was about to use the word extraordinary, but it is not—have a big sense of adventure. I hope that hon. Members will not think that I am reducing a serious matter to banality when I use that term. For boys who talk together and get together, it can be a great adventure to seek to have sex with girls of the same age, or girls who are older or younger. In some circumstances, boys can aid and abet each other. That sense of adventure needs to be taken into account, because it is, by definition, an irresponsible attitude on the part of the boys involved.

At the same time, boys under 14 are vulnerable to the sort of peer group pressures that I have described. In all schools, they must be told about the implications of the Bill. The knowledge that they will be liable under criminal law—as they will be—will certainly be a counter-pressure to the adventures and a support to those who are vulnerable to giving way to pressure to behave irresponsibly. Children under 14 need to be protected from themselves. The Bill will assist in that process, and it must be welcomed.

Mr. Wells: I agree entirely with my hon. Friend the Member for Ribble Valley (Mr. Evans) when he described rape as the most vicious form of degradation known to mankind. It is second only to murder in the hierarchy of crimes of which mankind is capable. What is more, it leaves a damaged person—a girl or woman who must live with an appalling and vicious attack. Psychologically, it is difficult for them to recover from such attacks and enjoy normal sexual relations, as they are entitled to do.

Rape is an abhorrent crime about which we are all concerned. I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes) on sharing my concern about that appalling crime, even though it is committed by boys under the age of 14. For that reason, I congratulate him on introducing the Bill.

I sympathise with my hon. Friends the Members for Gillingham (Mr. Couchman) and for Wyre Forest (Mr. Coombs), in particular, and also with my hon. Friends the Members for Sutton and Cheam (Lady Olga Maitland), for Ribble Valley and for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) who said that the Bill will do nothing to address the increasing incidence of this crime. If my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow will forgive me, I believe that this is a case of fools rushing in where angels fear to tread.

The Bill deals with a crime with which it is difficult to come to terms socially and difficult to deal with in a court of law. It is also difficult to deal with in terms of the punishment given. How does one change such behaviour? Does one simply send a young boy to a detention centre, where he will learn about other forms of vicious crime and, in some cases, how to commit rape even more viciously?

My hon. Friend the Member for Gillingham referred to the celebrated case in Wales involving a 15 year-old boy, who was brought before the courts. The sentence he was given was thought to be inadequate and, on appeal, it was increased. What has been the effect on the victim and the boy of having that matter brought before the court in the first place, blazoning it acrosss the national press and then increasing the punishment meted out to that boy? It certainly increased the humiliation and degradation experienced by the girl.

We are totally incompetent in our attempts to deal with this matter either through the law or social services. That incompetence is even revealed in our understanding of how to stop such behaviour and the provision of proper treatment for it. That is why the Bill should not have been introduced separately from a proper review of the way in which society, the law and the corrective services deal with the offence.

My hon. Friends who are lawyers and my hon. Friend the Minister, who is advised by lawyers, tell me that the Bill deals only with the issue of rape. It gets over a hurdle, because, under current criminal law, we cannot accuse a 14-year-old boy or a younger one of rape, as he is considered incapable of sexual intercourse. That may be the narrow legal interpretation, but a problem arises because it is a criminal offence to have sexual intercourse below the age of 16. Under the current law as I understand it, one cannot bring a criminal charge against a boy below the age of 14 for having unlawful sex below the age of 16, because he is deemed incapable of having sexual intercourse. As a result of the Bill, that will no longer be so. A boy under the age of 14 could be brought before the courts for having unlawful sex below the age of 16 and even below the age of 14. That is my understanding of the Bill, but its other effects are probably hidden from the House as we rush it onto the statute book.

Mr. Hayes: It is currently against the law for people under the age of 16 to have sex. Until the Bill is passed, it is not presumed that a person under the age of 16 has the capacity for intercourse, full penetration. In the highly unlikely event of a prosecution being brought under the current law, a person under the age of 14, who has had full penetrative sex, being presumed incapable of that act under existing law, would be charged with indecent assault. I accept that such a situation is highly unlikely, but, in theory, that person would still be charged with a criminal offence. The Bill, therefore, does not criminalise anyone; it deals with the charge, nothing more.

Mr. Wells: As a layman, I am grateful for that explanation from my hon. Friend, who is learned because he is a lawyer. I am not sure whether that is the effect of the law, however, although I must accept his advice and that of the Minister that that is the case. I hope that it is; if it is not, it will result in many youngsters who participate in sexual activities being brought before the courts of this country. That is not the right way to deal with such matters, as I think that my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow agrees—[Interruption.]

I shall bring my remarks to a close as I can hear sedentary interruptions from the Opposition spokesmen and I do not wish to delay the House. The Bill should have been produced in the context of the problem of under-age rape and sexual offences, and provided for the sensible treatment of those who commit them to enable them to grow up as responsible humans who respect others and are capable of proper and enjoyable sex in a loving and affectionate relationship.

Mr. Jack: We have had an interesting and extensive debate on many of the issues covered by the Bill. I am pleased that the Bill has reached Third Reading in an unamended form, for which we should pay tribute to my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes). I congratulate my hon. Friend on introducing the Bill and steering it through its various stages through the House. Nothing in the House is ever easy or straightforward, as today's debate has clearly illustrated.

The Government fully support the Bill, which corrects a long-standing absurdity in the law. On a note of apology, I wish that the Government had had time in their legislative timetable to introduce the Bill, but, sadly, they were unable to do so. I am delighted that my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow used his time as a private Member to introduce the legislation. Although there have been some interesting criticisms of the Bill, the general thrust of today's debate has been in support of the measure.

It is worth recording how the Bill came to be introduced, and to address one or two of the issues raised in the debate. When the subject was raised in the context of a previous private Member's Bill, it was debated thoroughly, in the round, with a number of other issues relating to sexual offences. The hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, West (Mr. Randall), who led for the Opposition, said:

"Such a scandalous situation should not exist in modern law."—[Official Report, 16 February 1990; Vol. 167, c. 599.]

Those were wise and correct words, and have clearly influenced the proposition of my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow.

Both those views were supported by the Home Office Criminal Law Revision Committee, which considered the matter in considerable depth. It stated clearly:

"Under the present law . . . a boy under 14 cannot be convicted of . . . rape or any other offence of vaginal or anal intercourse because he is conclusively presumed at common law incapable of sexual intercourse. In paragraph 27 of our working paper we discussed the common law presumption and provisionally concluded that it should be abolished. All who commented on the issue agreed with us. Accordingly we now recommend that presumption be abolished."

That was a clear, unequivocal and ringing endorsement for the measures that lie at the centre of the unamended Bill.

If hon. Members have any doubt that the issue was not considered in considerable depth, they should look at paragraph 27 of the report, which states:

"If that recommendation"— to which I referred—

"was accepted, the prosecution would, of course, have to prove as in all cases involving defendants under 14 that the boy knew that he was doing wrong."

My hon. Friend the Member for Gillingham (Mr. Couchman) mentioned that issue. He was talking about differentials of proof in terms of adult crime where, at present, the alternative might be indecent assault. Clearly, with all criminal charges different levels of proof have to be achieved. Those levels are to protect those accused of crime who may have evidence to offer to the contrary. Now, the same different sorts of proof are introduced by this proposal.

Several hon. Members supporting the Bill talked about punishment and how these sexual crimes are dealt with. I repeat what I said in the Standing Committee: we understand these concerns. My hon. Friend the Member for Ribble Valley (Mr. Evans) spoke with passion about the seriousness and nastiness of rape—he was right to use such language. Equally, however, we have taken up the point made by other hon. Members and we are looking in the round at the scope and coverage of section 53 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933. We understand the anxieties about the restrictions that it imposes on the courts, particularly as to the uses of custody. These matters take time to consider, but we are looking carefully at them.

What are the alternatives? My hon. Friend the Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells) came near to teasing out some of the important issues that lie behind this subject. My hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam (Lady Olga Maitland) pertinently commented on the backgrounds from which young men accused of this nasty crime may come. She mentioned that they may themselves have been sexually or physically abused.

I should like to offer the House a reassurance. The fact that the Bill will enable a person to be charged with what he has actually done—raping someone—must mean a great deal to the victim of the offence. Under current law, the courts will be able to award a sentence of supervision, which is not an easy option. It goes to the very heart of offending behaviour. It matters not whether a person is dealt with in the community or by means of custody—the problem remains: we need to get to the reasons why he committed the act of rape, with which this measure deals. Supervision, day in day out—it can be as frequent as necessary—goes, as I say, to the heart of sexual behaviour. I have seen work in the probation service that shows what can be done to turn people away from offending behaviour.

Mr. Harry Greenway: Is my hon. Friend saying that the very fact that the boy concerned may be found guilty of an offence will have a dramatic effect on the behaviour of other boys? They must be educated to know that they can be brought to book if they commit sexual offences of the kind that the Bill would prohibit.

Mr. Jack: My hon. Friend underlines my point. A proper charge can now be brought for what someone has done, and it is a serious charge. The measure will also focus the minds of those who will be responsible for the punishment of the offender and, and even under existing law, that means that the right punishment can be devised for the crime. At least the victim, who must never be forgotten, will know that a person has been convicted of an offence. Indecent assault is a lesser charge—not the right charge for a crime as serious as rape.

Mr. Cohen: I hear what the Minister says about the Government supporting the Bill. Many hon. Members support it, too, but he must acknowledge that it deals with only one aspect of the law governing rape. That law needs reform right across the board, as the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells) has said. Have the Government any plans to examine all the laws covering rape, including the victim compensation aspects?

Mr. Jack: I do not want to trespass beyond the boundaries of what we are discussing today. The hon. Gentleman will know of my personal commitment to, and interest in, matters connected with domestic violence, which can include rape. There is much good work to be done on that. He will also know of recent Court of Appeal judgments that deal with rape in the context of marriage. Doubtless there is more work to be done, and I acknowledge the hon. Gentleman's point.

Before I was interrupted, I was about to pick up a point made by my hon. Friend the Member for Wyre Forest (Mr. Coombs). He spoke about psychological damage to victims. The word "psychological" was appropriate and fits the point that I made about the nature of the supervision order and what can be done about offending behaviour. My hon. Friend was right to mention that and I look forward to his wider comments on juvenile crime in his Adjournment debate.

I covered the issue raised by my hon. Friend the Member for Gillingham about differential evidence. What he said emphasises the importance of this narrow Bill. My hon. Friend the Member for Ribble Valley takes a special interest in these matters and I thank him for his contribution.

The Bill is narrowly drawn, but it is important. It deals with a serious crime and enables the proper charge to be brought. As my hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam said, the offence is not imaginary but real. People are presently committing rape and, if they are below the age of 14, they can be charged only with indecent assault. The Bill deals with that matter and I whole-heartedly endorse it.

Mr. Michael: I congratulate the hon. Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes) on doing what the Government should have done. In view of the wide nature of the debate, we should remind ourselves that the Bill simply abolishes the nonsensical presumption of the criminal law that a boy under the age of 14 cannot be capable of sexual intercourse. That is the simple issue and it is surprising that there has been such a wide-ranging debate.

The Minister was generous enough to acknowledge that the Government should have undertaken this measure. There was an opportunity to do that in this year's Criminal Justice Bill. Many issues contained in current private Member's Bills could have been dealt with in that Bill, thus saving the time of the House. The Bill is important and useful and it is no fault of its promoter, the hon. Member for Harlow, that in some ways the debate has been widened and misused. It must have been frustrating for the hon. Gentleman to have to reduce his contribution because, undoubtedly, he would have liked to expand on knowledge of the subject.

I say to the hon. Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway), or I would if he were still in the Chamber, that it may be in order but it harms the reputation of the House for hon. Members to wander in halfway through the morning and expect to be able to speak at length. Conservative Members widened the debate into all sorts of matters which, although important, are not germane to the Bill. I especially noted those hon. Members who sought to widen it into juvenile justice generally by using the typical Conservative approach, which is to talk tough, shout loudly and do nothing.

Crime figures published this week show that the Government have presided over an increase in crime of well over 120 per cent. In view of that, I am surprised at the cheek of Conservative Members in trying to widen the debate. However, there will be all-party support if they are serious and if next week they support such measures as the

[Mr. Michael]

Bail (Amendment) Bill and the Criminal Justice (Amendment) (No. 2) Bill, introduced by my hon. Friend the Member for Warwickshire, North (Mr. O'Brien).

If Conservative Members are serious, they will press the Government for a speed-up in the criminal justice system, especially in relation to young people, and for an increase in the resources for prevention and earlier intervention. We are paying a sort of crime tax for the Government's failure in those respects. I mention them because they have been raised in the debate, although they seem to fall outside the scope of the Bill. The debate contained about 30 minutes of illumination from each side, but otherwise swallowed time that the House could have used to debate the Medicines Information Bill. Hon. Members who have spoken at length will have to answer to their consciences and to the British people for perpetuating secrecy in the pharmaceutical industry. They know what they have done in denying protection to the British public in respect of drugs and medicines. They have done that with the collusion, if not the encouragement, of the Government Whips.

The Bill does not create perfection in law, but Labour has supported the Bill from the beginning because it puts right one specific anomaly in the law. We have not let it pass without thought, but have given the Bill the consideration that its serious subject matter deserves—although we have not sought to waste the time of the House, having recognised that the Bill encapsulates simple common sense, which I commend to the House.

Question put and agreed to.

Bill read the Third time, and passed.

Medicines Information Bill

As amended (in the Standing Committee), considered.

New Clause 3

RESTRICTIONS ON THE PROVISION OF INFORMATION

'.—(1) Where any information is made available to any person or organisation under this Act, that person or organisation must not disclose that information without the written consent of the licensing authority.

(2) A person who without reasonable excuse contravenes, or causes or allows the contravention of, subsection (1) above shall be guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 2 on the standard scale.

(3) Section 124 of the 1968 Act shall apply in relation to an offence under this section as it applies in relation to an offence under that Act.

(4) Where a person or organisation requests consent under subsection (1) above the licensing authority may—

(a) make a reasonable charge, not exceeding the cost of determining the request;

(b) give consent on such terms as the authority consider appropriate.'.—[Mr. Waterson.]

Brought up, and read the First time.

12.50 pm

Mr. Nigel Waterson (Eastbourne): I beg to move, That the clause be read a Second time.

Mr. James Couchman (Gillingham): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Before my hon. Friend begins his remarks, I want to declare my interest to the House as an adviser to a pharmaceutical company. Insinuating sedentary remarks have been made about that today. I make it clear to the House, particularly in respect of press reports that have appeared in recent days, that I advise Pfizer in Kent, which is a major pharmaceutical company. That is in the Register of Members' Interests. It has also been drawn to the attention of the House—and this, too, has appeared in the press—that I advise the Gin and Vodka Association of Great Britain, although that is not germane to this debate. I should like that declaration on record, so that no further sedentary insinuations will be made by members of the Labour Front Bench.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael Morris): I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Ian McCartney (Makerfield): Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. The matter to which the hon. Member for Gillingham (Mr. Couchman) referred was not only the subject of sedentary interventions but was raised officially during all stages of the Bill. I refer to the hon. Gentleman's involvement with a company that has objected to the Bill and lobbied against it, and his meetings with that company in respect of the Bill. We have raised serious objections about the hon. Gentleman's connections with the company, and his ability—as a paid adviser—to filibuster and try to destroy the Bill. It is not a question of impugning the hon. Gentleman's character—it is a fact that is the case.

Mr. Couchman rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Member for Gillingham (Mr. Couchman) declared his interest and used the appropriate method dictated by the House. The hon. Gentleman's declaration is now firmly on the record.

Mr. Waterson: New clause 3 and others, and amendments in my name, make a genuine attempt to improve the Bill. I have no formal interest to declare in these proceedings, but, in view of the ill-tempered and ill-advised interventions, sedentary and otherwise, made by Opposition Members, I will make two points clear. I am fortunate enough to have in my constituency the northern European headquarters of Rhone-Poulenc Rorer, which is one of the most successful and innovative of the pharmaceutical giants in this country. Also, as a lawyer myself, I have an interest in good law and good legislation. I do not want this or any other Bill to leave the House with loose ends or with provisions that would be difficult if not impossible to interpret or enforce.

Mr. Giles Radice (Durham, North): Will the hon. Gentleman tell the House who drafted his new clause?

Mr. Waterson: Although I received a little research assistance, the authorship of the new clause is mine and I am delighted to commend it to the House. If the hon. Gentleman believes that it does not have the intended effect, I shall be delighted to hear from him, but I will take any credit and any blame for the wording of new clasue 3 and of my other new clauses and amendments.

I hope that new clause 3 will command the agreement of right hon. and hon. Member in all parts of the House. I believe that it is accepted, including by the hon. Member for Durham, North (Mr. Radice), that, somewhere along the line, some restriction must be placed on the information to be supplied and the circumstances in which it is to be supplied. Any legitimate debate that there may be will be about where one is to draw the line—a point which I will develop at greater length later.

The new clause would make it an offence for people who had successfully applied for information under the Act to make copies of the information without the permission of the licensing authority. It also draws in the provisions of section 124 of the Medicines Act 1968, which takes account of offences involving corporate entities. The clause makes it possible for the licensing authority to charge for copies of information, whether the authority supplies that information directly or it is supplied by a third party.

Without such a clause, the licensing authority would find it harder to offset the cost of preparing the information. If the licensing authority receives less money than it should from applicants for information, that cost will ultimately fall on the pharmaceutical industry through licence fees. It wil be part of the leitmotiv of my comments on other amendments and new clauses that that is something which I wish to try to avoid, wherever possible.

I consider the new clause to be essential if we are to ensure that applicants for information can be charged a reasonable amount for copies from any source. It is a perfectly reasonable provision. It is not out of line with the usual approach in such a situation to books and magazines, for example, where copyright applies. Therefore, I have no hesitation in commending what I hope is an uncontroversial new clause to the House.

Question put and agreed to.

Clause read a Second time, and added to the Bill.

New clause 4

RESTRICTIONS ON THE PROVISION OF INFORMATION

'.—(1) Subject to subsection (4) below, no information shall be made available under this Act which would or might identify or lead to the identification of—

(a) any individual; or

(b) the place at which any test involving the administration of a medicinal product to an animal has been carried out.

(2) Subject to subsection (4) below, the licensing authority shall not make any information available under this Act if they consider that to do so would—

(a) involve the disclosure of a formula, process, device or invention of commercial value; or

(b) make it more difficult for the holder of a product licence in respect of a product to which the information relates to compete with other persons; or

(c) impair the ability of the licensing authority thereafter to obtain similar information;

but no information contained in or accompanying an application for a product licence shall be withheld on the ground that paragraph (a) or (b) above applies unless it is designated under subsection (3) below.

(3) An application for a product licence under section 16 of the 1968 Act shall designate the information contained in or accompanying the application to which, in the opinion of the applicant, subsection (2) (a) or (b) above applies.

(4) Nothing in this section shall prevent the making available under this Act of information which has been published in the United Kingdom.

(5) Where the licensing authority consider that this section requires them to refuse any request under this Act, they shall so inform the person making the request.'.—[Mr. Waterson.]

Brought up, and read the First time.

Mr. Waterson: I beg to move, That the clause be read a Second time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With this, it will be convenient to consider the following amendments: No. 21, in clause 1, page 1, line 6, at end insert—

'"animal" has the same meaning as in the 1968 Act;'.

No. 8, in clause 4, page 4, leave out lines 6 to 37.

Mr. Waterson: This is a more substantial proposed change to the Bill, and I shall speak at greater length on the intent and proposed effect of the new clause. I have moved the new clause because I am not happy about the proposed protection for commercial information and for individuals under clause 4, as drafted. My philosophy, as I have already said, is to keep any extra burden on the pharmaceutical industry to the minimum.

One of the first things that the new clause does is to prevent information from being revealed about any individual. That seems to me to be eminently fair and sensible. For some reason, the Bill, as drafted, allows individuals to be identified if they have given permission. I do not see why that is necessary. Information of the kind with which the Bill deals should not mean that individuals can be identified.

I see no point in people wandering throughout the country knocking on doors and demanding the signature of someone who might have taken part in a clinical trial, simply in order that their name can be made public. In both this and other contexts, the problem in this country is keeping people's names out of publication rather than inventing new ways of identifying them. My new clause will ensure that individuals are protected from identification.

As to the provision relating to experiments on animals, I hope that its reasoning is reasonably predictable. I refer to subsection (1)(b) which refers to "the place at which any test involving the administration of a medicinal product to an animal has been carried out."

In recent years, there have been examples of the activities of animal rights activists who have caused destruction to property, particularly to property where they believe that experiments on animals of a certain kind are being carried out. That is another reasonable safeguard to include in the Bill.

Mr. Radice: Has the hon. Gentleman had the opportunity to look at amendment No. 104 which, after consultation with the industry, deals with precisely the question that he has just raised?

Mr. Waterson: New clause 4 offers clearer protection of commercial information than the original clause. In a sense, the principle is already accepted in the Bill. I do not believe, with the greatest respect, that the hon. Member for Durham, North has placed sufficient importance on the need to protect commercial information. The original clause 4, which contained a requirement for all safety and efficacy information to be published, was evidence of that. The hon. Member was forced to withdraw the clause in the face of universal condemnation from the pharmaceutical industry.

Mr. Radice: That is a somewhat churlish way of putting it. I dropped the clause. I was not forced to do so; I offered to do it.

Mr. Waterson: I should not like to be thought of as being churlish, so I am happy to accept the hon. Gentleman's explanation.

There is no doubt that the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry is opposed to the underlying purpose of the Bill. It argues that it would lead to commercially valuable information being disclosed. It claims that companies will seek licences in Europe, not Britain, as the new Europewide licensing system comes in under the single market, thus denying the NHS access to approved medicine.

Ms Liz Lynne (Rochdale): The hon. Gentleman said that the British pharmaceutical industry opposed the Bill. As the hon. Member for Durham, North (Mr. Radice) has already said, discussions were held with the British pharmaceutical industry, after which clauses 4 and 5 were deleted. The hon. Member for Durham, North has already mentioned amendments Nos. 104 and 105, which propose the same as the new clause. Glaxo was telephoned this morning and asked whether it opposed the Bill. It said that its position had not changed. We were led to believe that, as long as we withdrew clauses 4 and 5, the British pharmaceutical industry would be happy with the Bill. The suggestion of the hon. Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Waterson) that the industry is totally opposed to the Bill is slightly misleading. The industry does not seem to know whether it is for or against the Bill: it says one thing to myself and the hon. Member for Durham, North and another to Ministers.

Mr. Waterson: I am grateful for that lengthy intervention. The point that I think I just made was that the association opposed the underlying principle of the Bill. I was careful to use the phrase, "underlying principle". There is nothing wrong in the association holding discussions on detail with Opposition Members, as it has throughout the passage of the Bill, as a damage-limitation exercise, but no Opposition Member is in a position to say that the pharmaceutical industry or the association favours the Bill, or at least the underlying principle. What the association has done quite properly —this is the way things are in the real world—is hold discussions with hon. Members, particularly the hon. Member for Durham, North, in which, no doubt, it attempted better to inform the hon. Gentleman and to persuade him of the damage of some of the Bill's provisions. In some of the discussions, its arguments prevailed, in others perhaps not.

Mr. Roger Knapman (Stroud): Has not the ABPI said that it is in favour, in general terms, of providing better information on medicines to doctors and patients—a view which we all share? In February, it said that the Bill is not needed because of the amount of information that is already available. It also said that the Bill presents a threat to the continued viability of the United Kingdom pharmaceutical industry. Surely that is the reality of the ABPI's approach, which is perfectly clear.

Mr. Waterson: My hon. Friend puts the point succinctly. The association has two basic answers to the hon. Member for Rochdale (Ms Lynne). The first is that a great deal of information is currently available from the industry about particular drugs. The second is what I call the level playing field problem, which I shall develop in much more detail in a moment. We are talking about multinational companies that operate worldwide, and especially Europewide. Their supreme difficulty with the Bill is that it may put them at a competitive disadvantage in this country.

Mr. Richard Spring (Bury St. Edmonds): One of the points that has come to light in my discussions with representatives of the pharmaceutical industry is the fact that there are negotiations for a European Communitywide licensing authority and until that comes about, pharmaceutical companies operating here believe that the move would be unilateral and to their disadvantage.

Mr. Waterson: I am grateful for my hon. Friend's intervention. I shall develop that issue later, but I now wish to continue what I was saying before the hon. Member for Rochdale intervened.

The association has argued that the Bill would be a "charter for foreign copyists" of drugs and for counterfeiters which, as we know, pose a threat to this industry and to many others.

Mr. Couchman: I did not intervene when my hon. Friend was moving new clause 3 which deals with the passing on of information. Even with the penalties prescribed under new clause 3, the passing on of information causes only a comparatively minor fear to companies if they have considerable commercial interest in getting hold of information that would be available under the Bill.

Mr. Waterson: I believe that during the second world war a poster appeared at times saying, "Loose talk costs lives". In this case, loose talk could cost jobs and money. In high-tech industries, and especially in the pharmaceutical industry, information is power and money, and many people have an interest in getting their hands on information and on formulas for new developments or prospects of new developments. Companies can rise or fall on the fortunes of a particular new product.

Mr. McCartney: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Waterson: No, I shall not give way now, because I must make some progress. I may allow the hon. Gentleman to intervene later.

I was trying to conclude my point that the industry itself has warned that future investment could go elsewhere in Europe, thus damaging job prospects in this country. As we know, Britain has a £1·2 billion trade surplus in pharmaceuticals.

The concerns of the pharceutical industry were noted in particular by the Under-Secretary of State for Health, my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, West (Mr. Sackville) on Second Reading. He said:

"The Government are committed to making more information available."

Despite some of the things that the hon. Member for Durham, North has said inside and outside the House, I believe that that basic principle still stands. The Minister continued:

"It must be acknowledged, however, that the pharmaceutical industry sends an enormous amount of commercially sensitive data to the licensing authority. This has been protected by the requirements of the Medicines Act and by the common law presumption that confidentiality would be maintained. Information on medicinal products is potentially highly sensitive commercially and there is a risk that without adequate safeguards the provision of public information could be seriously abused.

The pharmaceutical industry is concerned about the commercial sensitivity of the data that it provides and about the additional burden that the Bill could place on it and the extent to which it would be taking the United Kingdom out of line with other member states. This is a particular crucial issue at a time when new EC licensing systems are in the process of being agreed".—[Official Report, 15 January 1993; Vol. 216, c. 1225.]

Mr. McCartney: The hon. Gentleman says that the Bill would be a dangerous precedent for United Kingdom companies. Although Glaxo used the American Freedom of Information Act to obtain information about Smith Kline Beecham, one of the foremost companies in the world, that company has not been affected. The Medicines Control Agency and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Government's own bodies, have used the American Freedom of Information Act to look into companies such as Fisons. Pfizer, a company which the hon. Member for Gillingham (Mr. Couchman) is paid to represent here, has also used the legislation to seek information about Glaxo, a British company. No one suggests that Pfizer's action has led to a deterioration in Glaxo's financial or trading position either here or in the United States.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Waterstone.

Mr. Waterson: If I may say so, Mr. Deputy Speaker, it is Waterson, not Waterstone. Unfortunately, I am not the owner of a chain of bookshops. There we are, we cannot have everything in this life.

I am not here to defend the working of the United States Freedom of Information Act, although it is worth a debate in itself.

Mr. McCartney: Answer the question.

Mr. Waterson: I will answer the question. There are serious flaws in the Act's workings. It is primarily directed at information generated by Government agencies in the United States, so it does not assist the hon. Gentleman's argument. The examples the hon. Gentleman give show that there is a great hunger among commercial organisations in pharmaceuticals to get their hands on information about their competitors and rivals. That is the position I seek to address in the new clause.

Mr. Spring: Does my hon. Friend agree that in the United States, it is perfectly possible by Government order —by presidential decree—to prevent information from being made available by pharmaceutical industries to protect their commercial interests? That is exactly what happens in practice.

Mr. Waterson: I am grateful for that intervention.

Mr. Bowen Wells (Hertford and Stortford): Is not it true that under the United States Freedom of Information Act, the information required is, as my hon. Friend has said, information generated by Government agencies? The Act does not oblige the Government to make public details of medicinal products submitted by pharmaceutical companies. The Bill's proposals for British law are entirely different from the Freedom of Information Act in the United States.

Mr. Waterson: I am grateful for that intervention. On the basis that that is the correct position, it is an effective answer.

Ms Lynne: My information leads me to believe that the intervention by the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells) was entirely wrong. The United States legislation is very similar to the Bill.

Mr. Waterson: I hope that I shall be forgiven for pressing on. My hon. Friend the Minister may wish to arbitrate on the point later.

The pharmaceutical industry is important to this country and that is why we must get the Bill absolutely right—hence the debate today. It has been said more than once that there are 90,000 jobs in the United Kingdom that are dependent on the pharmaceutical industry. I have already mentioned Rhone-Poulenc Rorer which is the largest private employer in Eastbourne and very pleased we are to have it there. I mentioned the £1·2 billion trade surplus.

We all know the difficulties involved in developing new products. The pharmaceutical industry is a highly competitive, high-tech industry. It can take up to 12 years to develop, to finalise and to test the safety of a new drug, at a cost of up to £150 million. There are particular difficulties, in which I have been involved, if a patent lasts only for 20 years. That leaves a short time for the commercial exploitation of the product and a short time in which to recoup the enormous investment in research and development.

Some £550 million worth of capital investment was made by the industry in 1990. It has about £3 billion worth of exports, making it the second largest contributor to our balance of payments. About £1 billion is invested in research and development, which represents a staggering 10 per cent. of all British manufacturing investment in research and development as a whole. In short, the pharmaceuticals industry is a major British success story.

I have already referred to the European dimension, which was touched on by the Minister on Second Reading. Let me quote from the remarks of the hon. Member for Durham, North in Committee:

[Mr. Waterson]

"everybody accepts that there will be a European directive which will lay down rules for openness across the European Community . . . all its details have not yet been finalised."

The hon. Gentleman conceded that the Bill would be in advance of legislation in one or two other EC countries. He went on:

"Why not lead other EC countries on the issue of openness?"—[Official Report, Standing Committee C, 24 February 1993, c. 33.]

I do not believe that those quotations are in any sense out of context.

That is a legitimate and respectable point of view, but it is not the point of view which I take. I think that I am right in saying that, with the exception of Denmark, we would be the only EC country to take the bold step envisaged in the Bill unilaterally. The result would be that we would be out in front of our EC competitors, and perhaps the hon. Member for Durham, North still thinks that that is something to be applauded. I do not believe that it would be good news for the British pharmaceutical industry.

1.15 pm

Mr. Couchman: Does my hon. Friend agree that to saddle the British industry with a burden with which our European competitors are not saddled will prejudice Britain's chances as a site for the location of new manufacturing?

Mr. Radice: That is a total red herring.

Mr. Couchman: Perhaps you would protect me against sedentary interventions, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

That will predicate against British locations for new manufacturing operations by the pharmaceutical industry, and it is manufacturing which produces the trade balance surplus that is so important to us. There is at present a huge overcapacity of manufacturing capacity in Europe. There will be a rationalisation, and we should do nothing to prejudice our position.

Mr. Waterson: I could not agree more. Manufacturing not only produces the trade surplus; it also produces jobs in constituencies such as mine. My hon. Friend the Member for Gillingham (Mr. Couchman) is absolutely right to refer to the overall problem of overcapacity in Europe. Coupled with that, the companies involved are almost invariably true multinationals, which move backwards and forwards across frontiers with considerable ease. Some of them have plants all over Europe or even all over the world.

Mr. Radice: Exactly.

Mr. Waterson: The hon. Gentleman says, "Exactly." It seems that we start from the same premise but reach diametrically opposed conclusions. My conclusion is that, there is an ever-present danger that, if we do anything to rock the boat—to give other countries in Europe any kind of competitive edge in pharmaceuticals—the companies will vote with their feet or with their investment.

Mr. Spring: May I refer to one of myths surrounding this subject? Although there is a Freedom of Information Act in Denmark, its application is nothing like what is proposed in the Bill. The commercial sensitivity provisions are restrictive in Denmark to protect the pharmaceuticals industry there. It is not true that it is open season for information in Denmark, although—uniquely in the EC—that country has a Freedom of Information Act.

Mr. Waterson: Let me continue on the subject of the European dimension. The expression "a level playing field" is an overused Euro-analogy, but it has some relevance in this connection.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has gone to great lengths to negotiate an opt-out for this country on the social chapter. That means that companies in this and other sectors, like tourism which is also important for my constituency, will not be saddled with yet another layer of bureaucracy and associated costs. That will assist them to compete with other firms in the European Community. I should like to believe that this Government's initiative on deregulation has begun to infect all member states and that we are seeing a major turnround in the approach to bureaucracy and over-regulation.

I believe that the Bill would unilaterally impose a requirement on this country which would increase regulation and costs to industry. In some respects, it could negate the benefits of the opt-out on the social chapter for pharmaceutical companies.

The Government are in the business of maintaining and enhancing the competitive edge of British companies in Europe. That does not mean that we are not committed to the European ideal. However, we want to see our companies do well in terms of selling our products in the Community and also in terms of attracting inward investment from the Community and from further afield from countries such as Japan and the United States.

To return to what the pharmaceutical industry is saying now, I am sure that the hon. Member for Durham, North saw the letter to the British Medical Journal in March which states that there is no need for the Bill. Mr. John Griffin of the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry argued in the letter that it is the licensing agencies, and not the drug companies, which have been responsible for the secrecy surrounding licensing decisions. He said that EC directive 92/27/EEC, which is supported by the pharmaceutical industry,

"will require all European licensing agencies to provide . . . 'a summary basis of approval' on granting a licence for a new medicine."

At least one of my hon. Friends has said that a vast array of information is already available through the industry. The association claims that the objective of the hon. Member for Durham, North of providing more and better information to patients will be met by the publication by the industry next year of a compendium of user-friendly patient information leaflets covering more than 1,000 products.

Mr. Radice: Mr. Griffin wrote that letter before the Committee stage of the Bill. To that extent, it is out of date and he was kind enough to let me apologise for the fact that the letter in the BMJ took the unamended version of the Bill as its basis.

Mr. Waterson: I am grateful for that. I should have called Mr. Griffin "Dr. Griffin" and I apologise for that. I look forward to a letter in the BMJ from Dr. Griffin taking a diametrically different view of the Bill.

We are stepping into a very difficult area when we pass this kind of legislation. The high-tech development of intellectual property is a very delicate area. If the Bill is not absolutely right—and that is what we are here to ensure today—there will be a real danger that properly patented rights, in which a particular company may have invested millions of pounds, could be rendered worthless.

Subsection (2)(a) is the heart of the new clause. It refers to "the disclosure of a formula, process, device or invention of commercial value;".

That is the nub of the clause and it is an important issue. It is designed to protect information of sensitive commercial value because there is a perceived danger of abuse and commercial exploitation by competitors.

If the Bill were to reach the statute book in its present form, why should companies make product licence applications to the United Kingdom Medicines Control Agency? Who will bear the costs of the provisions in the Bill if not the pharmaceutical industry? Is it right to place extra burdens on a successful and competitive international business of this kind?

We badly need a good, constructive, on-going dialogue with the pharmaceutical industry. We have a major bone of contention as part of the Government's efforts to control the ever-escalating NHS drugs bill. We have a bone of contention in the shape of the proposed extension of the limited list. Of course, there are arguments on both sides, but it can have a crucial effect on employment in certain parts of the United Kingdom. Perhaps on another occasion I shall have more to say to my hon. Friend the Minister on that topic——

Mr. Couchman: I should have something to say as well.

Mr. Waterson: —despite the encouragement otherwise of my hon. Friend the Member for Gillingham.

I shall add some additional points of explanation, which I hope will be fairly obvious, with regard to the wording of the new clause. First, the Bill does not seem to appreciate the basic point that information submitted by companies to help with the licensing process does not belong to the Government. As I explained earlier, it is simply held by the Government on a privileged and confidential basis to help them to make good decisions —and the right decisions—about the licensing of medicines.

Precisely because it is company information, it is entirely right and appropriate that companies should be involved in the process of making it available to the public. Companies should retain some element of control over the dissemination of information, so in new clause 4 I place the onus on them to designate what information in the license applications is commercially sensitive. That reflects the procedure in the United States under the Freedom of Information Act where a presidential order requires agencies to ask companies to identify information that should not be released. I do not know whether the hon. Member for Makerfield (Mr. McCarthy) wishes to intervene to disagree with that.

Mr. McCartney: I shall make my own speech in my own time, thank you.

Mr. Waterson: I thought I would give the hon. Member the opportunity.

Mr. Radice: I shall say something about the Americans later.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Waterson: The clause also makes it clear that final decisions about what information should be disclosed will rest with Ministers. We should not create a whole new area of expenditure on legal costs by allowing interminable challenges and appeals in the courts. I say that as a lawyer. At the end of the day, we pay Ministers to make decisions. When companies have said what information should or should not be made public, it is entirely appropriate that the final decision should be taken by Ministers.

I have included a provision that information should not be protected if it has already been published in the United Kingdom. It would be ludicrous if the Bill prevented Ministers from disclosing information, even if it had been published in full in a national newspaper.

New clause 4 is a genuine attempt to improve the Bill and to make it more workable and more reasonable. Above all, it will protect the sort of unwanted and unintentional damage that could be done by the Bill. I commend the new clause to the House and hope that I have explained its intention.

Mr. Radice: Mr. Morris, Mr. Deputy Speaker—I apologise for calling you Mr. Morris; it is too much of the European Communities (Amendment) Bill. New clause 4 goes to the heart of the debate between the Government, those who support the Bill—they are in the majority, especially on a free vote—and the industry because it raises the issue of confidentiality and commercial secrets. They are legitimate concerns of the industry which we have been trying to meet and deal with throughout the passage of the Bill.

Let us look at new clause 4 against the background of our deletion of clauses 4 and 5 in Committee. Clause 4 is fairly tightly defined and excludes all legitimate areas of commercial secrets and, taking into account my amendments Nos. 104 and 105, the new clause is unnecessary.

The Bill has considerable all-party support—it was sponsored by hon. Members from all parties—and it could not have got through the Committee without the support of Conservative Members. There were certain moments in Committee when the only Conservative Member who voted against a specific amendment or clause was the Minister. It was rightly thought that I tried to meet most of the legitimate concerns expressed. I have studied the Division records and I know that the majority of Conservative Members came out in support for the Bill. I accept that the hon. Member for Beckenham (Mr. Merchant) may have abstained on most votes, but he gave us his support on one occasion. The hon. Member for Sutton and Cheam (Lady Olga Maitland) certainly gave the Bill valuable and useful support throughout the Committee. I wish to make it clear, therefore, that the Bill would not have reached the House today without the support of Conservative Members. It is an all-party Bill, with all-party support.

1.30 pm

I made it clear on Second Reading, which was unopposed, that I should be happy to talk to representatives of the industry about any of its concerns. Before and after the Committee stage, I met representatives of the British Pharma Group, the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry, Upjohns, Schwering and the National Office of Animal Health—NOAH. I have taken a constructive and responsible attitude throughout the passage of the Bill and I do not believe that anyone could pretend otherwise.

I know that the briefing that has been supplied by the Government to hon. Members, which I was fortunate to glance at, claims that the American Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association expressed its opposition to the Bill in a letter to the Secretary of State for Health, which is quoted in that briefing. That letter was written before the Committee stage and its attack was based on clauses 4 and 5, which have now been deleted. I do not want that argument to be used against the Bill in its present form.

Hon. Members should note that since the Committee stage a number of people have come out in support of the Bill, including Sir William Asscher, the distinguished former chairman of the Committee on the Safety of Medicines, which advises the licensing authority. NOAH, which speaks for the veterinary medicines industry, has also placed on record its support for the Bill, as amended.

It is true that the British Pharma Group has displayed considerable ambivalence to the Bill. It said that it could live with clauses 2 and 3 if the original clauses 4 and 5 were deleted. Now that that has happened, however, it is still doubtful about the Bill. It believes that we should wait for European legislation—it wants to be virtuous, but not yet, Lord. The same is probably true of the ABPI. It accepts that there must be legislation along the lines of the Bill, but not just yet. Why should those organisations be frightened of it?

There has been much talk about the United States. We were fortunate enough to have a representative of the Food and Drug Administration at a meeting yesterday in the House of Commons in support of the Bill. It was clear, first, that our model was the same as theirs. It was also clear that the American industry has gained considerable advances, not in finding out rivals' commercial secrets—an old canard—but in discovering factors such as adverse drug reactions and how the summary basis of approval should be approached. Such information is extremely useful. I am stating what the FDA representative said yesterday.

Lady Olga Maitland (Sutton and Cheam): The idea seems to be that, in the United States, the Freedom of Information Act is the great panacea for all problems and grants freedom to all. However, the United States Government can refuse to disclose information that would harm the privacy of an individual or the proprietary interests of a business. Such provision goes much wider than mere trade secrets. They can release information generated through Government agencies.

Mr. Radice: They release the summary basis of approval, which is the main aim of my Bill. In some respects, they reveal more than we do. They reveal the raw material of the adverse drug reactions, whereas we are merely suggesting that we should reveal a summary, and we have talked to the industry about that. Therefore, the American model is in advance of the model proposed in the Bill.

Mr. Spring: Surely the hon. Gentleman is aware that the FDA has a relationship with individual drug companies, and the onus is on the drug companies to decide what information they should supply and on what basis they should protect their own commercial interests. The onus is on the pharmaceutical companies to decide which information they regard as important for their own commercial survival. With respect, the hon. Gentleman is not accurately representing the relationship between the FDA and private pharmaceutical companies.

Mr. Radice: I do not think that the hon. Gentleman is aware of the tightly defined list, both with the FDA and in the Bill, of matters that can be revealed. It does not cover commercial interests, which are specifically excluded under clause 4. I suggest that one or two hon. Members may not be sufficiently familiar with the Bill. I do not blame them for that, as they were not present in Committee and may have been alerted to the contents of the Bill only recently.

Mr. Waterson: I was not a member of the Standing Committee that considered the Bill as I was engaged in discussing a major piece of legislation in another Standing Committee, but I have carefully read the Committee proceedings. That was not an arduous task as the Committee sat only twice and on each occasion rose well before 1 pm. Therefore, I feel that I know as much about the Committee stage as any of the members of the Committee.

Mr. Radice: I am glad that the hon. Member read our deliberations——

Mr. McCartney: There was agreement.

Mr. Radice: As my hon. Friend said, there was considerable agreement—with the exception of the Minister—in Committee, which was the good thing about it.

Mr. Wells: Will the hon. Gentleman tell the House exactly how many Conservative Members supported the Bill? As I understand the Bill, only one of our number supported it, and it seems to be slightly misleading to say that the Bill has all-party support.

Mr. Radice: As the hon. Gentleman knows, Standing Committees must have a Conservative majority. I had the support of the majority of the Conservatives on the Committee for the clauses that were amended—I did not have the Minister's support, however, or the support of the hon. Member for Beckenham who, as a Parliamentary Private Secretary, had to abstain. The hon. Members for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson) and for Holland with Boston (Sir R. Body) supported me. True, the hon. Member for Gillingham (Mr. Couchman) had a prior engagement in the United States. The hon. Member for Sutton and Cheam supported us. I was surprised that even the hon. Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall) started to support us towards the end—perhaps he has been told to. The hon. Members for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson) and for Havant (Mr. Willetts) supported us, too. It can be seen that I invited quite a lot of distinguished Conservative Members to serve on the Committee. The Bill's promoter does not, of course, do the selecting, but he has to suggest names. I suggested those names, with the results that I have described. I hope therefore that no one will say that the Bill does not have considerable support.

Mr. Piers Merchant (Beckenham): I do not want to pursue the point too far, but I feel that the hon. Gentleman is glossing over the degree of the differences between us. He is in danger of muddling two separate arguments—one about the principle, the other about the practical applications of the Bill. Although there is widespread support for and agreement with the principle and objective of the Bill, there have been many disagreements about certain aspects of the Bill—hence the amendments in Committee and on Report. To try to give the impression that everyone supports everything in the Bill is somewhat disingenuous.

Mr. Radice: I note the hon. Gentleman's comments, and I think that he will retain his position as a PPS having made them.

I do not want to be accused of filibustering on my own bill, so I conclude by dealing with two issues, before I turn to the Government's position. I have with me a letter written and signed this morning by Mr. Bangemann, who was asked by the chairman of the European Parliament's committee on the environment for a view on how the Bill fits in with European legislation. The letter states:

"I would like to confirm that under the existing Community directives, an assessment report written in view of granting a marketing authorition, and reasons for such decisions, may be disclosed by the competent national authority who established the report, provided it does not contain commercially confidential information.

Such a possibility of disclosure is not affected by the proposal to introduce a decentralised marketing authorisation system (amendment of directive 75/319. SYN 310).

Furthermore, it would be consistent with the Community's policy on transparency since there is already unanimous agreement in council on the proposed regulation for the centralised authorisation (SYN 300), which states, in its Article 12 &4:

'4. Upon request from any interested person, the Agency shall make available the evaluation report of the medicinal product by the Committee for proprietary medicinal products and the reasons for its opinion in favour granting authorization, after deletion of any information of a commercially confidential nature'."

The Bill is in line with what is happening in Europe.

The British industry, with no hard evidence for saying so, claims that in some curious way it will be labouring under a great disadvantage in Europe if we have an open licensing system in this country. That ignores the fact that under the decentralised system, before any product is licensed in this country, it will have to go through our own licensing processes. It is not just a question of accepting on the nod whatever comes from other licensing authorities in the European Community. For example, it is open to our licensing authority to challenge what has been licensed in another country, and we can also make public the basis on which licences have been granted in other countries. That is never said by those who use the European argument, so let us not hear so much of that argument. The Government say that they want to be at the heart of Europe, so it is about time that they took a lead on something in Europe. They could do that on this issue.

That brings me to the Government's position. One of the features of the debate has been the Government's change of heart. Before Second Reading, they said that they would give the Bill a fair wind. On Second Reading, the Minister said that he was in favour of the Bill's principle, that he was against unnecessary secrecy and that there were objections to section 118 of the Medicines Act 1968. However, in Committee I realised, as did all hon. Members, that there had been a change of heart. The Minister who is responsible for promoting open government, the right hon. Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave) had clearly lost the argument.

1.45 pm

The Department of Health is the sponsoring Department for the drugs industry, and it is also in charge of the nation's health and is responsible for looking after patients. There is a possible contradiction there because at times conflicts can arise. At any rate, that Department has other fish to fry, and they were mentioned in the debate. They are the issues of cost and the limited list.

It looks as though the Government, to get the industry's support, decided to change their position on my Bill and the idea of the licensing authority being more open. The 113 amendments are a clear attempt to wreck the Bill by talking it out. I therefore accuse the Government of double dealing over the Bill and of collusion with the industry. They are also reneging on their open government commitments. The Bill will be talked out at 2.30, but that will not be the end of the argument or the process. It will be the beginning.

Mr. Merchant: The hon. Member for Durham, North (Mr. Radice) played with my intervention a little, but I do not criticise him for doing that. However, my intervention was crucial to the debate on the Bill and the new clause. I drew a distinction between the Bill's principle and its practical application and the other effects that it might have on the pharmaceutical industry and elsewhere.

I have made it clear from the beginning that I strongly support the Bill's principle, but I have little doubt that the hon. Gentleman's final forecast will come to pass. In the fullness of time there will be legislation to alter section 118, which is clearly anachronistic and out of step with the Government's avowed intention to make information more freely available and to encourage open government. I have always been strongly wedded to both principles.

The scope, timing and detail of the Bill raise difficulties. I agree with some of what the hon. Member for Durham, North said, and I have some reservations about the new clause. It is difficult to achieve the right balance and work out exactly where the pharmaceutical industry stands. Since before Second Reading, despite playing an active role, I have received no indication of the industry's stand. Nor have I received an approach from a major pharmaceutical company based in my constituency. I find it slightly strange, but that is a matter for the company concerned. That does not help me in trying to ascertain the industry's position.

The pharmaceutical industry is important and beneficial to this country, so it is vital not to do anything that would harm it or restrict its competitiveness. I am sure that the hon. Member for Durham, North agrees.

Mr. Knapman: Would that the hon. Member for Durham, North (Mr. Radice) had adopted that view. He quoted my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State saying that the Government did not object to the principle of the Bill. It might have been fairer if the hon. Gentleman had quoted also the following comment by my hon. Friend the Minister. He said:

"These are difficult times for all manufacturers, and I am concerned that at a time when we are determined to reduce the burden that Government place upon industry, the Bill could increase them."

Although my hon. Friend accepted the principle, he made it perfectly clear that he had many objections on matters of detail.

Mr. Merchant: My hon. Friend emphasises the impact of the legislation on the pharmaceutical industry alongside other matters affecting it. My hon. Friend the Minister must bear the burden of those decisions. He had a difficult time doing so in Committee. On one occasion, when he seemed to be voting on his own, I felt sorry for him and therefore joined him on two occasions. The other reason, which is more important from the industry's point of view, was the Bill's impact on the industry at this time.

The industry is facing other regulations and the effects of national and European bureaucracy. The hon. Member for Durham, North seemed almost to be scoffing at the agreements that must be reached on the limited list. He seemed to suggest at least that that should not influence the Bill. Right hon. and hon. Members are practical men and realise that all aspects of Government policy will work together, have an impact on each other, and affect the industry. The industry should not be expected to bear too heavy a burden in one go at this time.

The burdens are many. They include controls on labelling and quality that are much more rigid than in most other industries. There is the impact of European legislation. My hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Waterson) said what would happen if the social chapter were adopted. I referred to the limited list. All are aspects of intervention in an industry that is and must remain competitive in world terms. It is important to take those factors into account, and I make no apology for doing so—and my hon. Friend the Minister should do the same.

Mr. Spring: I entirely endorse my hon. Friend's point about the principle of openness, which the Government and other right hon. and hon. Members would endorse in many areas. However, can one imagine the French Government allowing their pharmaceutical industry to be disadvantaged in any way? We are seeing the potential for an EEC-wide licensing authority. That will be the moment, on a pan-European basis, for greater openness. If it were to happen unilaterally, it would be costly and difficult for the pharmaceutical industry, employment, our trade balance, and other considerations that are so serious for the future of the industry and of employment in this country.

Mr. Merchant: The future of EEC regulation in this specific area should be added to my list. The negotiations and discussions that will have to be carried out in advance of the regulation coming into effect are crucial and should not be obscured by the House of Commons making decisions that will have a deleterious impact.

Mr. Knapman: I am not surprised that the hon. Member for Durham, North (Mr. Radice) is about the only hon. Member who cannot wait for Dr. Bangemann to bring forward proposals in this respect.

Mr. Merchant: I hope that the hon. Member for Durham, North does not have an unhealthy relationship with Dr. Bangemann.

Mr. Radice: It is not a question of having an unhealthy relationship with Dr. Bangemann. However, he is the Commissioner for the industries involved. He may be a figure of fun to some Conservative Members, but, if one is concerned about finding out what is going on in the European Community, it is only sensible to talk to his office and his department and then to talk to the European Parliament.

Mr. Merchant: Yes. I thought that that, in a sense, was what we were arguing about. I hasten to add that I was inferring only an unhealthy intellectual relationship with Dr. Bangemann. I agree entirely with the hon. Gentleman that it is sensible to discuss these matters with Dr. Bangeman, his office and others, but that, surely, is an argument for proceeding with some caution with the Bill. I do not want to overdo the point. I merely say that it is an element which we should take into account in our discussion of the Bill.

I am concerned about the reference in subsection (1) (b) to animal testing, a very contentious issue upon which I have strong feelings. It is a matter of great concern throughout the country. We have to be careful about being unduly restrictive regarding the amount of information that, rightly, should come into the public domain. In the vast majority of cases, the place at which testing is carried out will be known anyway. That information is widely disseminated and is reasonably easily found out by the pressure groups involved. I see nothing wrong in that.

Mr. Waterson: I appreciate the strength of my hon. Friend's views, but does he agree that revelation of the place where experiments or tests are carried out has nothing to do with the contents of this Bill? That may be a matter for another Bill, but it does not legitimately come within the scope of this Bill.

Mr. Merchant: That is precisely why I question this provision. I do not understand why it has been included in new clause 4.

Mr. Couchman: That point has been made consistently to me throughout the proceedings on the Bill. Both the location of establishments where animal testing takes place and, particularly, the names of the people involved in the testing are matters that the industry regards as being of the highest importance. My hon. Friend knows well the major centre in his constituency where animal testing takes place. I am aware of others where it takes place. The attentions of the animal liberationists have given rise to the most elaborate security precautions having to be introduced in places where research should take place in a more free and happy atmosphere.

Mr. Merchant: It is also a matter of concern to the general public. I am not talking specifically about individual pressure groups. Research involving animals is an important aspect of the law to be upheld. There have been recent examples of abuse where the law was slow to enforce and to correct what should not have happened in the first place. I therefore view with some concern anything that would hinder the flow of such information, although I accept that there must be some controls on freedom of information in this area, especially on patents, competition and other trade secrets. The provison should not extend as far the new clause proposes.

I do not want to take up much more time as I know that other hon. Members want to speak. I will conclude by referring to a point that was made about the French situation. My hon. Friend the Member for Bury St. Edmunds (Mr. Spring) rightly focused attention on France and asked whether the French Government would allow the pharmaceutical industry to fail to compete with other European countries. Of course the French Government would not allow that. They would do all that they could to protect and encourage their industry and would bend every regulation that they could. The British Government and our laws should do likewise.

The same can be said of the United States. The United States has a Freedom of Information Act and the free flow of information and open government are well advanced, which I entirely applaud, but the United States Government are never backward in coming forward when they deem it necessary to protect their own big industries against foreign competitors—and understandably so. We must keep that in our sights, because it is in the overwhelming interests of the British people, employees in the industry and the industry itself. Economic advantages flow from the industry successfully competing in the world, so we must advance under the Bill with the principal objective of making information as free as possible. I would not wish us to step down from that high objective, but we must realise that the pure principle must, to an extent, be limited by practice. We must, therefore, limit it by our best judgment of what is in the competitive interest of our pharmaceutical industry.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health (Mr. Tom Sackville): I have listened with much interest and have given the Bill quite a lot of thought in the past months. I have reached a conclusion. With so much being done in Europe on the issue, it would be unhelpful for the United Kingdom to find itself with legal obligations in advance of decisions in Europe.

Ms Lynne rose——

Mr. Sackville: I shall press on; we are fairly short of time.

I believe that we would run a serious risk of putting the United Kingdom at a grave competitive disadvantage vis-a-vis other licensing authorities in Europe if we were to introduce legislation at this stage. This is not only the Government's view; it is shared by the pharmaceutical industry, although I admit that the picture has been muddy at different times. The industry remains unhappy with the Bill and does not want legislation until the position in Europe has been clarified and until we all know what will have to be disclosed in the new centralised and decentralised procedures. That could take a great deal of time, and I shall explain the issue further.

The future systems, as they are known, will come into force about 18 months after a decision has been taken on the siting of the European medicines evaluation agency —the EMEA—which the Government are keen to see sited in the United Kingdom. The Commission believes that a decision on siting will be taken at the Heads of Government meeting in June in Copenhagen. If that occurs, the proposals will come into force on 1 January 1995. If not, the proposals will not come into force until a later date.

The proposals are currently before the European Parliament and provide for a new regulation and directives that will bind the EC together and provide for common procedures. The United Kingdom will be a signatory to those proposals, which will probably be adopted by the Council of Ministers towards the end of this year. The proposals envisage a centralised procedure——

Ms Lynne: Have the British Government been pressing for legislation in the European Parliament to introduce more open government in respect of medicinal information?

Mr. Sackville: Yes, and I shall deal with that issue later.

The proposals envisage a centralised procedure for handling innovative and biotechnology products and a decentralised procedure for other products. The essential feature of the centralised procedure is that applications will be made centrally to the EMEA and information supplied by companies will be entrusted to the EMEA and the Commission which will make the decision on whether a licence should be granted.

When member states are asked by the EMEA to assess a company's dossier, they will do so on behalf of the EMEA. In that respect, member states will be handling data for the EMEA. The subsequent making available of that information would be for the Commission to determine. That contrasts sharply with the position of member states currently and in the new decentralised procedures where licensing information will continue to be exchanged but in which each member state will remain responsible for determining the degree of confidentiality to be afforded various pieces of information.

At present, there is no agreement whatsoever among member states on what should be disclosed to the public in the decentralised procedures and only a vague reference to the making available of the "assessment report and the reasons for the CPMP's opinion, after deletion of any information of a commercially confidential nature" in the centralised procedure.

There are still many details of the operation of the centralised procedure to be worked out, and that is likely to take the whole of the period between now and 1995.

Mr. Radice: Are the Government pressing for a more effective open system at the European level? I do not agree that the centralised procedure is vague. Are the Government pressing for a common open system in the decentralised licensing system?

Mr. Sackville: Yes, and I shall deal with that in a moment. Questions such as the layout, the amount of detail and the nature of the confidential information to be deleted have yet to be determined. Officials from the Medicines Control Agency and the Veterinary Medicines Directorate will, of course, play a full part in the discussions and will do so on the basis of two clear principles. The first is that the definition of confidential information must be sufficient to protect the commercial interests of the United Kingdom pharmaceutical industry. The second, which is subject to the first, is that they must press our Community partners to agree arrangements that will make available the maximum amount of information in as clear and as lucid a form as possible. I think that that answers the interventions from the hon. Members for Rochdale (Ms Lynne) and for Durham, North (Mr. Radice).

Those arrangements would apply only to licences issued by the Commission under the centralised procedure. Under the decentralised procedure, member states will remain responsible in accordance with their own national arrangements for issuing licences and for making information available. Subject to further consultation with all interested parties, it will be the Government's intention to see how far national arrangements can be modelled on those agreed as suitable for the centralised procedure. We shall be urging other member states to do likewise.

I hope the House can see, therefore, that if the United Kingdom jumped the gun and had a requirement in law to produce information with which the industry was not content, it would be reasonable to expect companies to go somewhere else first to market their products. Companies will look at what each member state is required by its laws to publish and at which would expose the least amount of their commercial interests. They would then take a commercial decision on where to place the application in the first instance, knowing that under the new decentralised procedures, that would be a passport to obtaining a similar licence from any other member state in which they chose to apply.

Mr. Radice: Will the Minister give way?

Mr. Sackville: I will press on because I do not want to be accused of talking out the Bill. Companies would choose first to obtain a licence from the member state offering the most safeguards. From the United Kingdom perspective, that would not only divert important licensing work from here, but would severely risk reducing the United Kingdom's influence on the high scientific standards that we are concerned should be applied to all licence applications in Europe.

The Government want to be helpful. We propose, therefore, that we should take up the reins in Europe and drive the debate towards more openness. We should want to look at the practical issues involved before deciding what would be beneficial and what might be harmful, but I can assure the House that the Government will wish to be at the forefront of developments. Officials in the Medicines Control Agency and the Veterinary Medicines Directorate will pursue new initiatives in Europe. Not only will they initiate discussion leading to the disclosure of meaningful evaluation reports in the centralised procedure for which the Commission will be liable, but they will pursue with the other member states the possibilities for opening up more information to the public in the decentralised procedures without jeopardising legitimate commercial interests. In particular, they will consider the shape and content of an acceptable assessment report and will also consider how more information on adverse drug reactions can be made available in a meaningful way without raising unnecessary fears in the public. In doing so, we shall build on the Medicines Control Agency's most advanced system in Europe for reporting adverse reactions —ADROIT, the adverse drug reaction on-line information tracking system—and the Veterinary Medicines Directorate's suspected adverse reactions surveillance scheme.

On all those aspects, we shall want to discuss the details with industry and with consumer interests, taking account of what has happened in the United States and other parts of the world with freedom of information provisions about which there has been some discussion today.

I have mentioned our proposals for Europe, but, of course, we have not been inactive in the United Kingdom. In health as in other areas of government, we are working hard to improve public access to information. For the first time, the public now have the right to information about the performance and plans of their local hospitals and health services, and to attend annual meetings with senior hospital managers. In our patients charter for the NHS, we have introduced a new right for patients to be given detailed information on local health services, including quality standards and maximum waiting times. For the first time, patients and their doctors have access to information that empowers them to decide where they can secure appropriate treatment most promptly. We have also created a new right for patients to receive prompt and full answers to complaints about NHS services. By increasing openess in this way, we shall maintain and build on the confidence of the public in the excellent service that the NHS provides.

With medicines, as with other aspects of health, we are continuing to increase the amount of information available to the public. For example, the "British Pharmacopoeia", which gives very detailed information about the specification, safety and quality of medicinal products, has been available publicly for some years. The Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry publishes a compendium of data sheets. The Medicines Control Agency has been making available to doctors and pharmacists an increasing number of summaries of drug reaction data. Additionally, we have always been concerned that labels, leaflets and promotional material should be presented so that they are understandable and accurate, and do not mislead the public. That was our position even before the appearance of the recent EC directives on these issues.

Where there are problems with licensed medicines, details of the problems and the outcome of analyses and investigations are published by the Medicines Control Agency three or four times a year in the publication "Current Problems". This is made available to doctors, dentists, coroners and a range of other interested parties, including "Social Audit"—one of the sponsors of the hon. Member for Durham, North (Mr. Radice). That publication is in the public domain and there is no reason why members of the public should not see it. I hope that I have shown that our commitment to more openness in government is being matched by real increases in the availability of information about medicines to the public.

What is more, it is our intention to continue to increase the amount of publicly available information about medicines. We have begun to discuss with the pharmaceutical industry a new voluntary code of practice to increase the amount of information that they give the public. That approach is consistent with our determination to ensure that companies in the United Kingdom are not weighed down by too many regulations and can compete on equal terms with foreign companies. Nevertheless, the House should rest assured that, where public safety is at risk, we will not rely on a voluntary code but will use our existing powers to inform the public of the dangers.

Mr. McCartney: The Minister suggested some months ago that he would give the Bill a fair wind. In Committee, however, and today especially, it has been wrecked on rocks put in its way by Conservative Back Benchers. Conservative Members have tabled spurious amendments and mounted spurious campaigns. Behind the scenes, they have deliberately tried to block measures to promote the Bill. We have witnessed scurrilous attempts by the industry and its supporters in the House to undermine a Bill which would allow doctors and patients information that is available to doctors and patients in other nations—information about the safety of medicines, practical information about the way in which prescribing relates to specific patients and information relating to the efficacy of particular drugs.

Is it not interesting to reflect that if this debate were taking place in the United States, the Minister and his civil servants could give information about drugs that were produced in this country without being prosecuted, whereas in this country it is a criminal offence for a civil servant, a Minister or an hon. Member to place the same information in the public domain?

We have heard nothing about the victims. There has been no word about the consumer—the patient. We have received plenty of information about the interests of big business and the big pharmaceutical companies, which want to ensure that the British public are kept in the dark about some of their products. That same industry hypocritically——

Lady Olga Maitland: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. McCartney: I will give way to the hon. Lady at some point.

Mr. Waterson: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. McCartney: No. I will not.

Mr. Waterson: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. On mature reflection, I think that my remarks are more appropriate to a point of order than to an intervention. The hon. Member for Makerfield (Mr. McCartney) has used the word "spurious" and the word "scurrilous", both in connection with a proposal that I tabled in the best possible faith, and I believe that he should be required to withdraw. As I have explained, I have no particular axe to grind; I merely want the legislation to be done properly. That is my only interest in giving up a Friday in my delightful constituency.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House will have heard what the hon. Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Waterson) said, but I am afraid that the words that have been used so far are parliamentary words.

Mr. McCartney: We have parliamentary words that can be used to protect our constituents from the scurrilous and scandalous activities surrounding the progress of this Bill and other Bills through the House.

It is interesting to note the companies that are involved in trying to ensure that the Bill does not reach the statute book: Glaxo; Boots; the company of the hon. Member for Gillingham (Mr. Couchman), Pfizer; ICI; Wellcome; Ciba Geigy——

Mr. Couchman: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. It is true that I advise Pfizer and it is true that I have discussed the Bill with that company. But not one word of written information has come from it to brief me, nor has one word in any of the amendments that I have tabled in Committee or on Report come from it. I take the most extreme exception to the imputation that the hon. Member for Makerfield (Mr. McCartney) makes. It is quite wrong and he should withdraw what he has just said.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Gentleman has placed his position on the record. The hon. Member for Makerfield (Mr. McCartney) referred to the hon. Gentleman's company. I imagine that that was a slip of the tongue.

Mr. McCartney: It was not a slip of the tongue. It was a reference to the Register of Members' Interests. I have no problems with what I said. The hon. Gentleman obviously has a problem to explain to his constituents.

The position is that Ciba Geigy, Smith Kline Beecham, Boots Pharmaceuticals, Fisons Pharmaceuticals, Lilley Research, the Government's own Medicines Control Agency and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food are using legislation in the United States to seek information, but that information is being denied to the public today.

Why should that happen? Why have not the hon. Member for Gillingham and those who support his views said anything about the victims? More than 100 medicines have had their licences withdrawn or suspended since 1979. They include Opren, which was withdrawn in 1982, and the tranquilliser Halcion, which it seems some people are trying to get back on to the market. However, nothing has been said about the victims of those drugs. There has been no explanation or apology.

In the face of that, hon. Members are trying to ensure that the Bill does not reach the statute book today. The Bill would, for the first time, put people in Britain, doctors and the industry on the same footing as people in the United States. Why is the British industry and its colleagues overseas so opposed to this minimal measure? Why should the industry undermine its own credibility by ensuring that the Bill does not reach the statute book today?

The Minister said that there will be measures in Europe. However, as usual with this Government, the Minister used that information not as a positive attempt to support the Bill, but as a negative reason to oppose it. The Minister was right to say that there will be a system of centralisation in Europe. However, that will be a two-tier system—centralised and decentralised. The Bill is about the decentralised part of the system.

If we are to accept the centralised part, as the Minister indicated, it is our responsibility to pass the Bill. It would be the basis for a decentralised system under the centralised arrangements which the Minister has already said that he supports. From his own mouth, the Minister has condemned his own position.

The reason for that is clear and simple. On the Conservative Back Benches there is the naked interest of the pharmaceutical companies. On the Front Bench there is a Minister who is prepared to talk tough about the way in which drug companies are ripping us off in the national health service in respect of contract prices. The Government talk tough and they do tough things to patients. They would rather increase prescription charges and deny information to patients than have an adequate arrangement about the way in which drugs are charged in relation to the national health service.

This is a clear and simple naked trade-off between the Department and the industry. The Minister will go easy on the Bill in the hope that, in the negotiations over contract prices, the drugs industry will go easy in terms of the profits that it wants to make from the national health service. That is the plain fact of the matter.

[Mr. McCartney]

The debates in Committee and on the Floor of the House today have done the House a disservice in respect of the way in which Conservative Members and their industry interests have nakedly attempted to ensure that the Bill does not reach the statute book. I suggest that they should look to their consciences and consider the victims. Those accidents would not have happened if the information had been in the public domain in the first place.

Ms Lynne: Does the hon. Gentleman agree that it is disgraceful that Conservative Members have denied us time to debate the Bill properly by filibustering in the debate on the Sexual Offences Bill? They should be ashamed of themselves. They should look to their consciences and answer to their constituents for their disgraceful behaviour.

Mr. McCartney: The hon. Lady is right. The action was deliberate. It is interesting to note that some of the Conservative Members who took part in the debate on the earlier Bill have been most vociferous in their opposition to this Bill or, at least, were rather negative about ensuring that it reaches the statute book.

The hon. Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Waterson), who moved the new clause from a constituency interest, represents one of the large drug companies.

Mr. Waterson: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. McCartney: I promised to give way to the hon. Gentleman and I will keep that promise. I am not sure when I will give way to him—I might do that at [illegible] and a half minutes past—but I will give way.

The new clause is largely a wrecking amendment. The hon. Member for Eastbourne used arguments that were rejected on Second Reading. However, he was not in the Chamber then. Today, he used arguments that were made in Committee and rejected. He referred to proposals that have been raised in the general discussions between the parties—but he did not participate in them.

One is left with the clear conclusion that the hon. Gentleman has been wheeled in—as other Conservative Members have been wheeled in—to ensure that the Bill does not get the fair wind that the Secretary of State and the Minister promised. It is on the back of the interests of our constituents. He has raised issues, but there has been no evidence whatever to substantiate the points made.

Mr. Waterson: I must stress, not for the first time, that I do not speak as a representative of, or consultant to, a company, or any sort of spokesman for any sort of company. The hon. Gentleman said that I represented a company in my constituency. The only entity that I represent in this and other debates is my constituency and constituents. I have taken a view of what is best for them and the country as a whole.

Mr. McCartney: I accept what the hon. Gentleman says. Perhaps he will reflect on the promises that he and other Conservative Members made about secrets and open government not simply at the general election but in the patients charter. The Minister is supposedly responsible for the publication of the patients charter which says that patients have the right to "a clear explanation of any treatment proposed, including any risks".

Is that not what the Bill is about?

Lady Olga Maitland: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. McCartney: No, I will not give way. The Under-Secretary of State for Health participated in the production of the Government's White Paper, "The Health of the Nation", which says that the Government are responsible for "providing reliable information on which individuals can base their decisions on matters which affect their health" and that

"people need information to help make the right choices".

The Government also aim to encourage better prescribing. Is that not what the Bill is about? Does it give effect to those principles?

Not one Conservative Member has shown any support for the proposals. The Minister did not mention them. All we got was a litany of excuses, half-baked ideas, untruths and squalid interventions about the industry itself. We did not hear anything about the right of consumers—who spend a great deal of money, either as taxpayers through the national health service or as consumers, in buying a variety of brands over the counter—to have information about the products that they purchase.

Mr. Radice: I agree with my hon. Friend. Would not we take more seriously the Government's position—which they have apparently proposed in the last gasp—that they would press for a more open licensing system in Europe if at least they said that they would accept the principles of the Bill and use them to press the matter? They have not said that and, therefore, we cannot take what they have said seriously.

Mr. McCartney: The Minister avoided saying anything about the Bill. He talked about the citizens charter—about how people can telephone their local manager or local district general hospital trust number and have a word once a year. He said that people could have more information about the waiting lists—instead of waiting for two years, people may have to wait for 12 or 18 months. We heard nothing about the detail of the Bill or why he opposes it. He gave us no alternative to it, although he has had months to put forward an alternative. He could have tabled amendments in Committee but did not do so.

Lady Olga Maitland: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. McCartney: I will not give way to the hon. Lady because she simply wants to filibuster in the last three minutes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Lady must resume her seat when the hon. Gentleman does not give way.

Mr. McCartney: The only hon. Member to whom I will give way is the Minister.

Mr. Sackville rose——

Mr. McCartney: The Minister is enthusiastic. Will he give a commitment that he will have further discussions with the sponsors of the Bill and openly with the Department about making proposals in line with what he said to ensure that we can incorporate in those Government proposals the aspects that Labour Members in Committee wanted to see in place? If the Bill is talked out, will the Minister ensure that there is a way forward?

Mr. Knapman: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. A headline in The Guardian today states, "Tories to talk out drug secrecy bill". Frankly, some of us would not mind that, bearing in mind that we do not agree wholly with the Bill. Do you agree, however, that if I am lucky enough to catch your eye at 2.29 pm, I should not be accused on the morrow by The Guardian of talking the Bill out?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is not for the Chair to rule on what is written in The Guardian.

Mr. McCartney: The accusation is accurate because Conservative Members tabled more than 100 amendments to the Bill and spoke at length on the Sexual Offences Bill to ensure that this Bill was not subject to a proper debate.

In the final minute of the debate, will the Minister clearly state whether he will agree to talks to ensure that the Bill is able to reach the statute book?

Metal Recycling

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. David Davis.]

2.32 pm

Mr. Paul Marland (Gloucestershire, West): The Government have put recycling high on the environmental agenda. A duty of care and several studies have been undertaken to create the framework for that to be delivered. Last July, a draft directive on packaging and the packaging of waste was published by the European Commission which set some demanding targets. Those developments show how seriously the issue of recycling is now taken, because it is an important way in which we can conserve our environment.

I am delighted that my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment is to reply to the debate, because he has always taken a positive interest in this issue. I remember when he and I served on the Standing Committee on the initial Environmental Protection Bill when we moved several amendments designed to help the metal recycling industry.

Now the agenda is being set to increase our recycling rates in the United Kingdom so we must consider practical ways of achieving that end. I shall focus on that objective by referring directly to the experiences of one of the champions of recycling in the United Kingdom—the steel industry, and its associated metals reclamation industry.

Although political attention to the subject is fairly recent, it is important to remember that the metals industry has been recycling huge quantities of steel and other metals for many years. Indeed, recycling is a routine part of the steel-making process. Steel is truly the most recycled metal in the world, and the scale is impressive. About 300 million tonnes of steel are recycled every year —40 per cent. of world production. That represents a saving of 90 million tonnes of coal and 200 million tonnes of iron ore. That colossal contribution to preserving the environment is a great credit to the scrap metal industry, which is rarely set alongside the sandals and safari jackets of the television environmentalists, but its contribution to saving the environment is much greater. I have always believed that farmers and scrap metal dealers were the original environmentalists.

In this country, as much as 82 per cent. of the steel available for recycling is recycled into new products, using electronic arc furnaces, whose feedstock is nearly 100 per cent. recycled metal. A rapidly increasing proportion of the recycled steel is made up of steel cans. At present, three out of four cans are steel, and each one of us uses on average about 200 steel cans every year. They include drinks cans, paint cans, food cans, pet food cans, sardine tins, shoe polish cans and aerosol cans. British Steel Tinplate has successfully driven forward steel can recycling in the United Kingdom, together with an independent company, AMG Resources, which has gained a reputation as a world leader in the operation of the technology that not only recovers the steel from the can, but separates and recaptures the tin coating.

Last year, steel can recycling broke all records, and 1·5 billion cans were recycled. I mention that positive achievement by the steel industry because I am disturbed by the misconceptions that people have about recycling and their prejudices about the environmental impact of different packaging materials. I urge my hon. Friend the Minister to consider that fact in future policy formulation and execution.

People rightly exercise their consumer choice in supermarkets and grocery stores to select what they perceive to be green products and packages. However, studies within the steel industry show that consumers know very little about the real environmental profile of packaging materials. The steel industry welcomes political developments. The proposed European Community directive on packaging and packaging waste should induce dramatic increases in recycling rates and raise the steel industry's profile in relation to its well-established reclamation facilities and excellent recycling record.

The steel industry has made great strides in that sphere. Since 1968, the standard soft drinks can has become 55 per cent. lighter. An energy saving of 39 per cent. has been achieved on the amount of energy used to make a standard steel soft drinks can since 1977. If all the cans in the United Kingdom market were made from steel, the energy saving would be the equivalent of the electric lighting needs of every United Kingdom household for a fortnight—an incredible statistic. The resource-saving process has culminated in the development project, "The Ultimate Steel Can". Its objective is to reduce the weight, energy and materials consumption of the construction of steel cans by a further 30 per cent., and should be encouraged.

A misconception that seems to prevail is that returnable packages are always better for the environment than recycling. Return trippage rates need to be high to represent an environmental benefit, and often such rates are not achieved.

Secondly, returnable containers use greater quantities of energy and materials to meet the demands of strength required for repeat journeys, for cleaning, sterilisation and resealing. This is wasteful, complicated and time consuming. Returnable packages are bulky, and sometimes heavy and costly to transport.

The teeth of the EC directive are in its targets for recovery and recycling. Within 10 years from adoption of the directive, 90 per cent. of packaging output should be removed from the waste stream for recovery, 60 per cent. of it from recycling. Alternative methods of recuperation are allowed to make up the remaining 30 per cent. If we transpose the objectives to individual packaging materials, some difficulties emerge. Incineration for energy recovery, composting or chemical breakdown are the alternative recovery methods, none of which is applicable to steel. It seems that the target for steel can recycling is 90 per cent. by the year 2005 for the United Kingdom, so this eminently recyclable material, whose industry is making essential qualitative improvements, could be given the toughest targets. I urge my hon. Friend to ensure that recycling targets are logical and appropriately distributed among the material sectors.

The directive does not help by assessing recovery methods and their relative merits. An important assumption, however, is that packaging waste is recovered for recycling direct from the consumer, presumably by means of bottle and can banks or kerb-side collection schemes.

Steel, of course, is attractive to magnets, and there is a range of systems that use simple magnetism to pluck out steel cans in immense numbers, with great ease, directly from the waste stream. In the United Kingdom, 27 enlightened local authorities operate magnetic extraction facilities, recovering as much as 80 per cent. of the steel cans from local domestic refuse—about 5 million steel cans every working day.

Steel cans recovered by magnetic extraction generate a revenue for the operator. One local authority in the north of England has saved as much as £150,000 on its waste disposal costs using magnetic extraction facilities and selling the cans recovered.

If we want to meet the recycling targets, it is essential that we use the most efficient, reliable and economical methods to recover recyclable material. That principle should be expressed in the directive and should be at the forefront of Ministers' minds in the execution of policy in the United Kingdom. The rapporteur of the EC environment committee has proposed this to the drafters in the form of an amendment to the directive. I stress that it is important that the Government consider this new development and support it.

A key advantage of magnetic extraction is its compatability with other forms of recycling—energy recovery, refuse-derived fuel and composting facilities. The association of materials recovery plant, such as magnetic extraction works, with other recuperation plant can dramatically increase potential recovery—we could call it double recycling. I ask my hon. Friend to assess this, with the objective of meeting the highest possible targets with the maximum possible economy, efficiency and environmental care.

Not surprisingly, the Government have seen the woolly areas in the directive and have identified a role to "provide a framework" for a national integrated waste management policy. Some economic initiatives have already been introduced. Supplementary credit approvals have been made available to local authorities, but these do not look as attractive for efficient bulk recovery facilities, which demand high initial outlay, as cheap, inefficient and low-yielding collection schemes, which may prove costly to operate in the long run.

Similarly, that a local authority should be obliged to allocate to itself a recycling credit for operating a magnetic extractor is not good sense. But ensuring that local authorities feed the revenue from recovered steel back into the expansion of recycling facilities is a sound proposition. Furthermore, recycling credits are very much at the discretion of local authorities. If a national recovery scheme, such as Save-a-Can, is truly to help by diverting recyclables from landfill, recycling credits need to be available systematically, consistently, reliably and equitably.

Despite the important role of the scrap industry and the real environmental achievements of the steel reclamation industry, they are faced with a multitude of regulations. Despite the good intentions behind them, these regulations could lead to the closing of many properly operated scrap recovery businesses and, ironically, that would have a seriously harmful effect on the environment.

The Government have understood the difficulties of the duty of care and its associated regulations, and they are to be congratulated on holding back the tide, since 1 April 1982, so as properly to review the practical detail of the proposals.

I shall quickly describe three of the many problems that the steel reclamation industry could face when the new regulations come into force. It is presently intended to introduce subsistence charges for waste management licences that are required for all metal reclamation operations. It is estimated that fewer than 30 per cent. of potential licensees will be licensed by the time the regulations are introduced.

Successful applicants will face high charges of between £850 and £2,500 per annum for licences and those not yet licensed could have to wait up to five years to have their applications fully processed. In present trading conditions, those who are licensed can ill afford to give their competitors such a start. Scrapyards have been given an extension of the period of grace beyond 1 June this year, and that is widely appreciated.

Those who have not applied for licences by the time that they are introduced will technically be in breach of the law, as will their suppliers. The regulations make it an offence for organisations to send controlled waste, which is how the law ludicrously describes ferrous and non-ferrous scrap, to unlicensed operations. It will not be possible to enforce that law without bringing many reclamation and recycling businesses to a halt or even diverting recyclable materials to landfill sites.

The duty of care could have a negative effect on the nationwide consumer can bank scheme operated by British Steel. That scheme of consumer collection banks has expanded from 200 such banks to nearly 1,000 Save-a-Can banks in two and a half years. That is not only an important contribution to the number of steel cans that can be recycled, but an important point of contact between the recycling industry and the consumer.

It is still unclear whether every can bank site and every agent who helps to service them will be faced with similar obstacles of excessive bureaucracy. Furthermore, the administration of the intricate detail of recording the returns of every can bank, some of which are no bigger than a postbox, may be a serious distraction for Save-a-Can from its primary objective of providing facilities throughout the United Kingdom.

As the Minister knows, the scrap metal industry is not averse to licensing in itself, but it should be introduced in a controlled fashion, and I recommend that he should recognise and highlight the difference between reclamation, recycling and waste disposal.

The steel reclamation and recycling industry employs about 20,000 people in the United Kingdom and is a leading example of resourcefulness and personal endeavour. The industry is a foundation of our industrial base. We continue to produce high-tech steels for worldwide markets. It is essential that the true strengths —strategic, economic and environmental—be upheld in the face of imported and other materials, which displace work in the United Kingdom and which, on analysis, have been shown not to be as environmentally friendly as steel.

While the steel reclamation and recycling industry approves of the principle of the environmental regulations, I urge my hon. Friend the Minister to introduce them sensibly and logically, as I believe he is trying to do, so that the industry can continue to recover recyclable material and to meet environmental objectives in a healthy, commercial environment.

The decision of the Department of the Environment to scrap the idea of a register of contaminated land was widely appreciated, because it would have had a devastating effect not only on the waste and recycling industries but on a wide spectrum of business throughout the United Kingdom. By that action, my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State and his Department have demonstrated that they not only listen to industry but also hear what it has to say—and there is a tremendous difference between the two. That is a clear demonstration of my right hon. and learned Friend's attitude. He is there to help and not to hinder, and for that I applaud him.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment (Mr. Robin Squire): I welcome this chance to return to a subject on which my hon. Friend the Member for Gloucestershire, West (Mr. Marland) and I spent many happy hours during the passage of the Bill that led to the Environmental Protection Act 1990. My hon. Friend has long experience of these issues, and has built up a formidable reputation on the subject. I echo his praise for the steel industry's record on recycling. I also support what our scrap metal industry is doing to help relieve the pressures on our natural resources. As my hon. Friend said, scrap merchants were sorting and reusing metals long before most of us had given much thought to recycling.

The importance of industry's role cannot be overstated. Many people are now calling for more emphasis to be placed on recycling. But it is only because industry has developed the technology to use recycled materials that their views can be put into practice. All companies, whether or not they are part of the "recycling industry", have a part to play. They should be considering whether their goods are recyclable or could be made more easily so. And they should be exploring the scope for using more recycled products as raw materials on the production line. That is essential if there are to be growing markets for the materials that people take to can and bottle banks or put out for separate collection. It also makes good commercial sense because environmental issues increasingly influence what people buy.

The Government have launched funds for industries that are developing new processes or technology to make recycling easier. We have had a considerable number of recycling-related applications for those funds. The Government have also set up an Advisory Committee on Business and the Environment, which consists of chairmen and senior directors of British industries. The committee has a working group on recycling, which has been examining measures that both industry and the Government can take to achieve increased recycling.

Of course, as my hon. Friend has said, recycling should not be viewed in isolation. He rightly pointed to the value of saving resources in the production process. Moreover, recycling is not always the best environmental or economic option. For instance, it is usually better to avoid waste in the first place than to recycle it once it has been produced. And, although I understand my hon. Friend's apprehensions about the value of returnable containers in some cases, reusing a product can sometimes make sense—carrier bags and milk bottles are obvious examples.

I am pleased that the steel industry has welcomed the recent political developments in the EC and in the United Kingdom. The proposed EC packaging directive, which my hon. Friend mentioned, is still at the early stages and we therefore welcome comments on the proposals from all interested parties. Perhaps I should set out our domestic policies on packaging and explain the background to the proposed directive and our preliminary view of it.

We are committed to reducing the environmental impact of packaging. Our policy on packaging waste is part of an overall approach to solid waste—minimise waste wherever practicable; reuse or recycle it where it is generated; and dispose of the remaining waste safely. The recycling of packaging waste will be an important element in meeting our target of recycling 25 per cent. of household waste by the end of the decade. We are discussing with the packaging industry how it might take on its share of responsibility for packaging waste.

The proposal for a directive arises in part from concern that the unilateral measures being taken by various member states may restrict trade or distort competition, and in part from a desire to establish high environmental standards in the management of packaging waste. The proposal would require all such waste to be collected with a view to recovery. In this context, "recovery" means materials recycling, composting and energy recovery. My hon. Friend referred to the targets being proposed—90 per cent. of all packaging waste to be recovered and 60 per cent. of each material to be recycled. All packaging would have to meet certain essential requirements, including constraints on the presence of heavy metals, and marked in order to make recovery and recycling easier. A wide range of data would be collected to monitor the achievement of the objectives of the directive and to provide the basis for further initiatives.

We have welcomed the proposal for a harmonised approach to reducing the impact of packaging waste. Negotiation of the proposed directive has recently begun and it will be essential to ensure that potential problems for trade and competition are resolved in the context of realistic and achievable targets. The targets and other policy measures must be established with due regard to the scientific evidence and without losing sight of the potential economic impact. The data requirements, in particular, may impose a burden and must therefore be proportionate to the need to ensure compliance with the directive.

Officials have been in touch with a large number of interested organisations and we shall continue to consult on the proposal. We welcome views on the proposal and suggestions for improvement, which we will take into account, along with the results of work that we have commissioned on the targets and the cost of compliance.

Local authorities have a key role to play in achieving the Government's recycling target, because they have responsibility for collecting and disposing of household waste. That is why the Government placed a requirement on waste collection authorities to draw up recycling plans, under section 49 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. The Government also accept that local authorities need financial assistance in working towards the target.

This year, we allocated £15 million for supplementary credit approvals to support 307 recycling schemes being planned by 161 authorities. Supplementary credit approvals allow local authorities to borrow for specific types of capital investment, beyond the limit set by their basic credit level. The £15 million is in addition to the £25 million we allocated in 1991-92 and 1992-93. This year's allocations cover a wide range of proposals from home composting projects to mini recycling centres.

Local authorities are now more involved in recycling than ever before. This £15 million continues our programme of support which is very important in helping authorities to implement their recycling strategies.

Now that the majority of waste collection authorities have prepared their recycling plans, many are keen to start implementing them. Many waste disposal authorities are also eager to do more. So it is no surprise that the demand for supplementary credit approvals for recycling is higher than ever. Under the environmental partnership scheme, the aim is to maximise investment in recycling by combining SCAs with authorities' own capital receipts and private sector contributions.

My hon. Friend expressed some disappointment that there is no duty for local authorities to pay recycling credits to recycling industries. We have some sympathy with that point of view. When we introduced the recycling credits legislation, we hoped to place such a duty on authorities, but we discovered that there were practical difficulties about doing so. For instance, a local authority might, quite reasonably, not wish to pay credits on a recycling collection scheme that was directly competing for material with another scheme already established in the area. So we accepted that there should be a power rather than a duty.

However, we took a power in the Environmental Protection Act to change that power into a duty. If we could be satisfied that the practical problems could be overcome, we would be prepared to use that power. However, this may be academic in a few years' time because of our review of local government organisation. Where there are unitary local authorities, recycling credits are considerably less significant. Recycling credits are designed to put local authorities in a position to assess the costs of disposing of waste and the costs of recycling it and choose the less expensive option. Unitary authorities are already in that position. I can assure my hon. Friend that, as disposal costs rise, recycling credits will also rise. That is because the recycling credit is set at a level equivalent to the avoided disposal costs due to the recycling.

I have a lot of sympathy with the industry's concern that it should not be hampered by excessive regulation. The Government are no friends of regulation for the sake of it. Any new regulation on the environment has to justify itself to Ministers, and we are also launching a deregulatory review of existing controls, including those on waste. We are more than happy to consider cases that do not need to be toughly regulated.

My hon. Friend has led delegations to Ministers, and officials have held quite long and careful discussions about the regulation of the metal recovery industries with the British Secondary Metals Association and the British Scrap Federation. I hope that he will concede that the Government have been patient listeners to the scrap industry, even if we do not always give the industry everything for which it asks.

The scrap metal industry has, I know, two quite distinct complaints: first, that a recyclable material should not be defined in law as "waste" and, secondly, that the handling of such materials should not be subject to the same legal controls as wastes.

The first question is not the important one. We can all argue about the proper meaning of words. What matters is the effect of our interpretation on how the law is applied. The real issue is how the activities of the industry should be regulated. I believe that there is a need to regulate the movement and treatment of scrap. In the interests of the industry itself, we want to ensure that scrap that is capable of being recycled and which is claimed to be going to recycling, really does go for recycling, that it goes to properly run recycling enterprises and that the operations are conducted in a sound environmental manner. Whether we call it waste or not, scrap includes some substances that can cause nasty problems if they are dumped or wrongly dealt with. It is in the interests of the scrap industry to ensure that they are not. The simple mention of the word "recycling" cannot automatically justify the removal of all controls. That is why many scrap operations are subject to waste licensing, why scrap has to be carried by registered waste carriers and why scrap will be subject to the duty of care.

My hon. Friend mentioned the industry's specific concerns about the new waste management licensing system under the Environmental Protection Act 1990. As he will be aware, my hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside announced yesterday a further delay in the introduction of waste management licensing. We very much regret the delay, which is caused by the complex interaction between domestic and EC legislation on waste, something we are determined to sort out properly before introducing the new system, but which is taking longer than we expected to resolve.

As it happens, that postponement is not the result of representations by the scrap or any other industry. Nevertheless, it gives the scrap metal industry a further breathing space in which to prepare for the new licensing system.

We are well aware of the issues that were mentioned by my hon. Friend, who highlighted three in particular: the new system of charging for licences, the position of unlicensed operators, and the effect on save-a-can schemes.

The new system of charges is part of the Government's polluter-pays principle. If we are to have any environmental laws, someone must run them, and someone must meet the administrative costs of running them. In the Government's view, it is the operator who should meet those costs, not the taxpayer. That is all the charging scheme is—a cost-recovery charge for a local authority's costs in issuing licences, inspecting sites and so on. Those charges will be set by the Secretary of State at what we judge to be a fair level and approved by the Treasury as being no more and no less than based on recovery cost.

I doubt whether many scrap operators do not now know that they need a waste licence—it has been a legal requirement for a number of years. They really should have applied for a licence by now, even if their local authority has not yet reached a decision on their application. We have held back the application of the duty of care to scrap metal for more than a year to give people time to apply for a licence. The whole point of the duty of care is to make it illegal to consign waste to an unauthorised person. It would be unfair on those respectable operators who have applied for licences to wait any longer.

I shall write to my hon. Friend about can banks.

Everyone has a part to play in meeting the Government's target of recycling 25 per cent. of household waste by the year 2000. The Government are undertaking a wide programme of measures to promote recycling, where it would appear to be a realistic option, and I am sure that all interested parties will continue to respond to the challenge.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at one minute past Three o'clock.

DEFENCE

Iraq Captives

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he has given to the provisions of interim compensation payments to those service personnel who were held captive by the Iraqi Government after the invasion of Kuwait; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It has been the policy of successive Governments that payments should not be made from public funds to claimants against a foreign Government in anticipation of the payment of compensation from that Government.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has about the provision of interim compensation payments to foreign service personnel who were held captive by the Iraqi Government after the invasion of Kuwait; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I am not aware of any foreign Government who have made interim compensation payments.

PRIME MINISTER

Honours System

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister how many individuals have written to him since his statement of 8 March proposing themselves as recipients of honours.

The Prime Minister: Over 1,600 names have been put forward to the honours nominations unit since I made my statement to the House on changes to the honours system. Based on a check of a sample of the nominations, it is likely that about a dozen are self-nominations.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister how many staff were employed at No. 10 Downing street to administer the honours system in 1992: and what increase in their number is planned.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 15 April 1993]: The honours section in 10 Downing street consisted of six staff in 1992. Numbers will be kept under review in the normal way to reflect changes in the work load.

Sir John Cuckney

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Prime Minister what Government tasks are currently carried out by Sir John Cuckney.

The Prime Minister: Sir John Cuckney is currently chairman of the Maxwell Pensioners Trust and adviser to the Department of Social Security's Maxwell pensions unit. Both appointments were made by the Secretary of State for Social Security. In addition, Sir John serves as a trustee of the Royal Air Force museum, an appointment made by the Secretary of State for Defence.

Pakistan

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister when he next plans to visit Pakistan.

The Prime Minister: I am keen to take up an invitation from the Pakistan Prime Minister to visit Pakistan, and will do so when time permits.

Political Parties (Donations)

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Prime Minister if he will introduce legislation to prevent the use of bank loans from offshore tax havens to political parties in the United Kingdom.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to him on 18 March, at column 357.

BCCI

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister how many letters he has received concerning compensation for the victims of BCCI.

The Prime Minister: I have received numerous representations.

Royal Bank of Scotland

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Prime Minister what Government Departments hold bank accounts with the Royal Bank of Scotland; and which of those accounts are at Drummonds branch.

The Prime Minister: No central records are maintained showing which Departments use which banks. Government Departments may use the services of clearing banks without reference to the Treasury when the arrangements offer good value for money.

India

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions he has had with the Indian High Commissioner following the bomb blasts in Bombay in March.

The Prime Minister: I expressed my personal sympathy to the Indian high commissioner as soon as I heard of the explosions and loss of life in Bombay, and also sent messages to the Indian Prime Minister and the Governor of Bombay conveying condolences and offering practical help.

Local Authorities (Private Capital)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to lift restrictions governing the use of private capital by local authorities, laid down in the Local Government and Housing Act 1989.

The Prime Minister: We have no such plans. However, it is already open to local authorities to enter into partnerships with the private sector and draw upon private finance.

Mr. Salman Rushdie

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister when he now expects to meet Mr. Salman Rushdie.

The Prime Minister: I expect to meet Mr. Rushdie shortly.

EDUCATION

English Tests

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if it remains his policy to conduct English tests for 14-year-olds following decisions by teachers about boycotts.

Mr. Forth: Yes. The English tests for 14-year-olds to be conducted this summer are the product of three years of trials in schools, involving hundreds of teachers and thousands of pupils. It is the statutory duty of head teachers to implement them, and the professional and contractual duty of teachers to carry them out.

Bangladeshi Population

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps have been taken since 1986 to improve educational standards and opportunities for the Bangladeshi population in Britain.

Mr. Forth: Successive educational reforms since 1986, including the Education Bill now before Parliament, have been designed to raise standards and improve opportunities for all pupils, whatever their ethnic or cultural background. As they take effect, Bangladeshi pupils are sharing in the benefit. Grants paid to local authorities under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 are supporting projects designed to meet the particular educational needs of Bangladeshi pupils, including English language support.

Bengali may now be studied in schools in fulfilment of the national curriculum requirement that all pupils aged 11 to 16 must study a modern foreign language. Funding has been provided through GEST—grants for education support and training—for three projects specifically for Bangladeshi pupils. Bangladeshi community groups are also benefiting from the ethnic minority grant introduced in April 1992 to give ethnic minorities equal access to training and enterprise opportunities.

WALES

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those local authorities in Wales which have no local plan.

Mr. David Hunt: The following local planning authorities have no adopted local plans.

Alyn and Deeside District Council
Carmarthen District Council
Ceredigion District Council
Glyndwr District Council
Montgomeryshire District Council
Neath Borough Council
Preseli Pembrokeshire District Council
Rhuddlan Borough Council
South Pembrokeshire District Council
Taff-Ely Borough Council

SCOTLAND

Legal Aid

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 19 March, Official Report, column 438, if he will give comparable figures for the cost of administering legal aid in Scotland through the local legal aid committees in each of the five years prior to the establishment of the Scottish Legal Aid Board in 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Unlike the Scottish Legal Aid Board, the former Law Society legal aid central committee and the local legal aid committees dealt only with the merits of civil legal applications. The committees did not undertake assessments of the means of applicants for civil legal aid, which were assessed by DHSS and latterly the Scottish Office. Nor did they have any responsibility for summary criminal legal aid applications, which were dealt with by the courts. Comparable administrative cost figures are therefore not available.

Saztec Europe Ltd.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what industrial grants or support have been paid to Saztec Europe Ltd., Ardrossan.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 15 April 1993]: Saztec Europe Ltd., formerly Saztec Scotland Ltd., received assistance in 1986 under the now terminated regional development grants scheme. This scheme offered automatic grants if the applicant met the appropriate criteria.

The conditions attaching to the grant were met.

HEALTH

Warner Report

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she now expects to make a statement on the Warner report.

Mr. Yeo: The responses to the consultation exercise are being considered. I hope to announce the Government's response to the report next month.

Drugs Trials

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will make a statement on her policy on the use in the NHS of post-marketing surveillance trials by drugs companies;

(2) if she will list the drugs used by the NHS in post-marketing surveillance trials in the last 12 months; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Post-marketing surveillance studies are the responsibility of pharmaceutical companies and not the NHS or the Department of Health. These studies are designed to gain information on the safety of medicines in everyday clinical practice and therefore could not be done without the involvement of the NHS. Voluntary guidelines on the conduct of company-sponsored PMS studies have been in force since 1988. Under these guidelines, companies are requested to provide information on these studies to the Medicines Control Agency.

The MCA has reviewed PMS studies conducted under the guidelines and their findings were published in the British Medical Journal in June 1992. In the light of these findings, the guidelines are now being reviewed.

Information supplied by companies to the MCA is considered confidential under section 118 of the Medicines Act 1968. A list of individual drugs on which PMS studies are being conducted cannot therefore be published by the Department of Health.

Zoladex

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines have been issued in relation to the prescribing of Zoladex by (a) hospital consultants and (b) general practitioners; and what proposals she has for further actions on this front.

Dr. Mawhinney: Prescribing information on Zoladex is available to all doctors in the British National Formulary, which the Department issues free of charge to all prescribers, and in the data sheet for this product, which is produced by the manufacturer and authorised by the licensing authority. This information is applicable to both hospital consultants and general practitioners. There are no plans at present to issue additional guidelines on Zoladex, but, as with all medicines, its safety is monitored by the Medicines Control Agency.

HEALTH

Comfrey

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether he proposes to carry out further research on the toxicological data on comfrey, with a view to determining a level of safe use; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what pyrrolizidine alkaloids are found in comfrey; and if he will indicate which of these is of proven toxicity.

Mr. Sackville: I have been asked to reply.

Common comfrey (symphytum officinale) and Russian comfrey (symphytum X uplandicum) are believed to be the varieties commonly used in herbal food supplements. The following pirrolizidine alkaloids have been identified and reported in the scientific literature as being present in either common or Russian comfrey or in both.

Symphytine[1]
Echimidine[1]
Acetyl-echimidine[3]
Lycopsamine[1]
7-acetyl lycopsamine[1]
Symlandine[1]
Echinatine[3]
Heliosupine[3]
Acetyl-heliosupine[3]
Intermidine[1]
7-acetyl intermidine[1]
Uplandicine[2]
Viridiflorine[1]

[1] in common comfrey but not in Russian comfrey.
[2] in Russian comfrey.
[3] in both common and Russian comfrey.

The majority of alkaloids found in comfrey have not been tested for toxicity. The results of studies on symphtine suggest that it may be genotoxic and carcinogenic. There is some evidence to suggest that echimidine and echinatine may be genotoxic. Whilst the toxicity data on the individual alkaloids found in comfrey are limited, there is evidence from studies using laboratory animals that the dried leaves and roots of common comfrey are potentially carcinogenic.

The Government's independent expert advisory committee, the Committee on Toxicity of Food, Consumer Products and the Environment, reviewed data including that on four cases of human liver damage associated with the consumption of comfrey preparations. It considered the data to be of sufficient concern to warrant action in the interests of public safety and recommended that action should be taken to reduce the intake of comfrey and its potentially toxic constituents.

It is for the manufacturers of preparations using comfrey to submit to the Government the results of research into the safety of other products if they so wish. The Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment advised that further toxicological testing would provide results of limited use in toxicological evaluations.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Electricity

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer under which vote sub-head the proceeds of the sale of the former NIE generating stations were accounted for.

Mr. Lamont: Northern Ireland estimates 1992-93, Department of Economic Development, vote 4.

Environmental Protection

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what matters in regard to investment in environmental protection were discussed and decided at the G-7 meeting of Finance Ministers in Tokyo on 14-15 April.

Mr. Nelson: Nuclear safety in Russia and dumping of radioactive waste at sea were discussed at the meeting. The meeting reaffirmed the commitment of the G7 to the full and timely implementation of the multilateral programme of action to improve nuclear safety in Russia agreed at the Munich summit.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many letters he has received concerning compensation for the victims of BCCI.

Mr. Nelson: The Treasury has received some 800 letters about BCCI since the bank was closed. It would be possible to identify how many of these were about compensation only at disproportionate cost.

Tax Changes

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update, to take account of the 1993 Budget, the information on tax changes contained in his answer to the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) of 29 June 1992, Official Report, column 380.

Mr. Dorrell: Latest estimates of the annual change in income tax liability resulting from the changes in tax rates, allowances and thresholds announced in the 1993 Budget are in the table. The 1978-79 income tax regime has been indexed to 1993-94 levels by reference to the statutory formula, and allowing for independent taxation.

For the purposes of these calculations the indexed regime of 1978-79 is applied directly to the income base of 1993-94. In practice, retention of the regime indexed as appropriate, for the intervening years would have led to changes in the income base.

Average reduction in income tax per individual[1] in 1993-94 compared with the 1978-79 indexed regime

Range of individual's income in 1993-94 (£)	Number of individuals 1993-94[1] (million)	Total reduction (£ million)	Average reduction (£ per annum)

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, what reports have been produced by the Northern Ireland court service with regard to the operation of the legal aid scheme in Northern Ireland; and if he will place these reports in the Library.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No reports have been produced by the Northern Ireland court service with regard to the operation of the legal aid scheme in Northern Ireland. Such reports are produced annually by the Law Society of Northern Ireland and are referred to the Lord Chancellor's Advisory Committee on Legal Aid in Northern Ireland for consideration and advice pursuant to article 23(3) of the Legal Aid, Advice and Assistance (Northern Ireland) Order 1981. These reports and the Lord Chancellor's advisory committee reports are placed in the Library.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, what progress has been made by the Northern Ireland court service in consolidating Northern Ireland's legal aid regulations; and what has been the reason for the time taken in consolidating these regulations.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Considerable progress has been made by the Northern Ireland court service in preparation of the regulations which will revise the Legal Aid (General) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1965. This exercise, which is at an advanced stage, involves primarily a consolidation of existing provisions, but the opportunity is also being taken to improve and modernise the regulations in some respects. The exercise has been held in abeyance pending the resolution of a number of points of detail. It is expected that these will be resolved within the next month, and that it will be possible to bring forward the new regulations later this year.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, whether he intends to set up a Legal Aid Board for Northern Ireland.

Mr. John M. Taylor: In the light of the establishment of independent legal aid boards for England and Wales and Scotland, the Lord Chancellor has been reviewing the arrangements for the administration of legal aid in Northern Ireland with the aim of effecting improvements to the present system. One of the options for consideration is the establishment of an independent legal aid board. There have already been preliminary discussions with the Law Society of Northern Ireland and it is expected that these will continue. Following the completion of the review, the Lord Chancellor will bring forward proposals.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, what plans he has to extend to Northern Ireland the research he has commissioned into the operation of legal aid in respect of eligibility, the green form scheme and advice and assistance at police stations.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Legal Aid Board in England and Wales has commissioned research which has touched on these subjects, but no research has been commissioned recently on them by the Lord Chancellor's Department. As a general principle, the Lord Chancellor's Department would consider extending any research it commissioned to Northern Ireland.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he will publish the research undertaken by the Northern Ireland court service into advice at police stations; what other research has been undertaken or funded by the Northern Ireland court service into legal aid and legal advice and assistance; and when this research will be published.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The results of a survey undertaken by the Northern Ireland court service into legal advice and assistance at police stations, have been forwarded to interested parties, but there are no plans to publish the results of this survey. No other research has been undertaken or funded by the Northern Ireland court service into legal aid and legal advice and assistance.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the steps taken to co-ordinate the Northern Ireland court service research schedule on legal aid with his Department's research programme.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor's Department and the Northern Ireland court service will continue to liaise closely in respect of any research on legal aid.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, what proportion of the population in Northern Ireland is currently eligible for legal aid and legal assistance; what proportion of these is eligible (a) with a financial contribution and (b) without a financial contribution; what proportion of the Northern Ireland population will be eligible for legal aid and advice and assistance under the new legal aid regulations laid down by his Department; and what proportion of these is eligible (i) with a financial contribution and (ii) without a financial contribution.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Estimates of eligibility that have been made are based on family expenditure survey data and relate to households. The proportion of households currently eligible for civil legal aid, is likely to be somewhere between 50 and 55 per cent. in England and Wales. Only a small proportion of Northern Ireland households are included in the family expenditure survey. However, Northern Ireland household incomes are estimated to be 82 per cent. of the incomes in England and Wales. It is therefore estimated that somewhere between at least 60 and 65 per cent of households in Northern Ireland are currently eligible for civil legal aid. As a result of the distribution of incomes in Northern Ireland, the effect of the introduction of the new regulations will be a small decrease in the proportion of households eligible for legal aid. It is estimated that this reduction will be in the region of two percentage points.

The proportion of households eligible for legal advice and assistance will be virtually unchanged under the new regulations, although more will be required to make a contribution.

Information regarding the proportion of the population that is currently eligible for legal aid and legal assistance with a contribution and the proportion that will be so eligible under the new legal aid regulations, is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. In 1991-92, of those persons granted civil legal aid, 89 per cent. were eligible with no contribution. The comparative figures for legal advice and assistance and assistance by way of representation were 97 per cent. and 89 per cent. respectively.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisons (Market Testing)

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which prisons currently in use will be market tested during the next three financial years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No decisions have yet been made.

Life Sentences

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a table to show for as many years for which the information is conveniently available the number of persons sentenced to life imprisonment for the murder of (a) police officers, (b) prison officers, (c) military personnel and (d) civilians who have been in each year released from prison; whether the life sentence had a minimum recommendation imposed by the court which was not fully served; and in which cases there was a terrorist involvement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The available information for 1981 to 1991 is shown in the table. Murderers of military personnel cannot be separately identified nor is the minimum recommendation of the court recorded centrally. There was no known terrorist involvement by any of the life sentence prisoners released during 1981 to 1991.

Immigration and Nationality Department

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the Immigration and Nationality Department solicits information on individual cases from local authorities without the express consent of the individual.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There are various circumstances in which the Immigration and Nationality Department may ask local authorities for information about an individual. It is not always appropriate to seek to express consent of the person concerned.

Mr. Fraser To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the Immigration and Nationality Department receives information on individuals from the Department of Social Security passed on without the individual's express consent.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Yes. Liaison between the Departments may be necessary in particular cases and it is not always appropriate to seek the express consent of the individuals concerned.

Child Abduction

Mr. Olner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to improve police training and to produce guidelines for police forces on child abduction.

Mr. Charles Wardle: It is for individual chief officers of police to determine what action should be taken to investigate offences under the Child Abduction Act 1984 and to decide what training is required. My right hon. and learned Friend is aware of the recent report of the parliamentary working party on child abduction and is ready to consider any proposals for amending the existing guidelines.

Market Testing

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the criteria used by the Home Office to evaluate outside tenders for Home Office tasks which are the subject of market testing exercises.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Evaluation criteria will be contained, where appropriate, in the EC Journal notice advertising the relevant market tests, or in the invitation to tender documents.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether Home Office unions and staff associations have been consulted on the method and content of market testing exercises since January 1992.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Yes, on both a formal and an informal basis.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the total cost of all Home Office market testing exercises to date.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The total cost of the Home Office market testing programme, including consultancies, since November 1991 has been approximately £1,036,000.

Emergency Planning College

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what would be the security implications of contracting out the emergency planning college; and what safeguards would be introduced.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We are not aware of any security consideration which would prevent the contracting out of the work of the emergency planning college. Whether safeguards would be necessary is something which would be considered in any contracting-out study.

Donald Treshman

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current immigration status of Donald Treshman; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Mr. Treshman left the United Kingdom voluntarily on 14 April. In accordance with the directions given by the Home Secretary on 26 March, he is now excluded from the United Kingdom on the ground that his presence is not conducive to the public good. Before he left Mr. Treshman appealed against the decision to deport him; that appeal will now proceed in his absence.

Mr. Tom Metzger

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what instructions he has issued to United Kingdom immigration authorities to exclude from entry to the United Kingdom Mr. Tom Metzger, an American citizen; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend is awaiting information about Mr. Metzger's background, to enable him to consider whether to exclude him from the United Kingdom on the grounds that his presence would not be conducive to the public good. In the meantime immigration officers at ports of entry have been instructed not to admit him without reference.

Prison Escort Service

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to extend privatisation of the court escort service to London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for the further contracting out of prison escort services.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Members to the reply given to the hon. Member for Westminster, North (Sir J. Wheeler) on 16 February, column 139.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the terms of the contract with Group 4 for prison escort duties; what monitorings carried out of whether the contract is being adhered to; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Graham Allen, dated April 1993:

GROUP 4 COURT ESCORT SERVICE

The Secretary of State has asked me to write to you directly in reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking about the terms of the contract with Group 4 for prison escort duties and what monitoring is carried out or whether the contract is being adhered to.

Details of the operational requirements of the contract were included in the operational specification for the Court escort service for Humberside and the East Midlands placed in the Library of the House at the time of issue of the tender documents. The contract, which is initially for 5 years, covers 7 counties: Derbyshire, Leicestershire, Lincolnshire, Nottinghamshire, South Yorkshire, North Yorkshire, and Humberside. The contract includes financial remedies to withhold payment for unsatisfactory service, with the option of termination of the contract on default. I attach a summary of the contract conditions and some additional background material.

A Home Office monitor has been appointed, as required by the Criminal Justice Act 1991, to oversee the operation of the service in the area. He is assisted by a deputy.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the cost to the Exchequer for police time in pursuing prisoners who have escaped or have been wrongfully released by Group 4 Security.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Graham Allen, dated 19 April 1993:

GROUP 4 COURT ESCORT SERVICE

The Home Secretary has asked me to write to you directly in reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the cost to the Exchequer for police time in pursuing prisoners who have escaped or have been wrongfully released by Group 4 Security.

The nature and circumstances of incidents of escapes differ widely from one case to the next and the Prison Service is not charged for costs incurred in recapturing prisoners. The information requested is not, therefore, available.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the prisoners who have escaped or been wrongfully released by Group 4 Security since they began escort duties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Graham Allen, dated 19 April 1993:

GROUP 4 COURT ESCORT SERVICE

The Home Secretary has asked me to write to you directly in reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking for a list of prisoners who have escaped or been wrongfully released by Group 4 Security since they began escort duties.

2. Full investigations into the circumstances of each escape are continuing. However we know that:

i. on 5 April a defendant escaped from the dock of Hull Magistrates' Court.

ii. on 6 April a prisoner escaped from a hatch in a four cell van by kicking the secured safety exit from its mountings and climbing out. All similar vehicles have now been modified.

iii. on 8 April a prisoner kicked out the window of a 7 cell van. Again, all similar vans used by the company have now been modified to prevent a recurrence.

iv. on 15 April a defendant escaped by vaulting over the top of the dock at Ilkeston Magistrates' Court.

v. on 16 April in an insecure courtroom at Sheffield Magistrates' Court, a defendant received from bail was sentenced to a custodial sentence. Following a struggle both inside and outside the courtroom, he escaped from two prisoner custody officers who were trying to escort him to the custody area.

In addition to these escapes two further incidents have occurred:

vi. on 8 April a defendant was released in error from Mansfield Magistrates' Court. The clerk has exonerated Group 4 of blame for the incident which arose from administrative error by the court and the prosecuting authorities.

vii. on 10 April a defendant was bailed from Leicester Magistrates' Court on conditions which included a £50 surety. A misunderstanding on the part of Group 4 meant that the defendant was released before the surety had been accepted. Subsequently the court amended the bail conditions to remove the need for a surety.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will conduct an inquiry into the escape and wrongful release of prisoners entrusted to Group 4 Security.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The director-general has on his own initiative conducted such an inquiry.

Election Deposits

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the deposit for a candidate in a General Election was last set; what is the current figure; and what plans he has to increase the sum.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The deposit for a candidate at a parliamentary election was set at £500 in 1985. I have no plans to increase this sum.

UKIAS (Director)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 30 March, Official Report, column 113, if he is now in a position to state when it is likely that the post of chief executive or director to the successor body to the United Kingdom Immigrants Advisory Service will be duly advertised.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This is a matter for the planning group established by my right hon. and learned Friend, but I understand that the post of director will be advertised shortly.

Wolds Remand Centre

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the two recent incidents which involved an assault on a police officer at the Wolds remand centre.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated April 1993:

Wolds Prison: Incidents of alleged assaults on police officers

The Home Secretary has asked me to write to you directly in reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking about two incidents which involved alleged assaults on police officers at HM Prison Wolds.

There have been two separate unconnected incidents of alleged assault on police officers. The first incident involved an officer who was visiting a prisoner in an official capacity. The prisoner has been charged and is currently awaiting trial.

The second incident occurred when a prisoner was being escorted into the prison's admissions building. Witness statements were taken, but to date no charges have been laid.

Blakenhurst Prison

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what training is being provided for custody officers at HMP Blakenhurst; and who is providing that training.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 16 April 1993.

HM PRISON BLAKENHURST STAFF TRAINING

The Home Secretary has asked me to write to you in response to your Parliamentary Question about the nature and provision of training for prisoner custody officers at HM Prison Blakenhurst.

The training requirement is set out in Schedule 3b of the Operational Specification which formed part of the invitation to the tender for the management of the prison. A copy of the Specification was placed in the Library of the House and I enclose a further copy of the relevant schedule.

It is for UKDS to determine how the required training is delivered and the bulk of it has been provided by their own staff. However a certain amount has been bought in, including control and restraint training from the Prison Service, and part of the First Aid training from specialist medical sources. The West Mercia police have provided an input on drug recognition and control. In addition the Chairman of the Board of Visitors and the Home Office Controller have given sessions on their respective roles and functions.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Astra plc

Mr. Rogers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the names and positions of those who requested the investigation into Astra plc.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The inspectors were appointed following an application of the company, made by letter dated 27 June 1990, signed by the chairman, Mr. Roy Barber.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the cost of his Department's inquiry into Astra plc. to date.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: A total of £2,170,000, inclusive of VAT.

British Coal Superannuation Scheme

Mr. O'Neil: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what indemnities Her Majesty's Government have offered British Coal for any court costs incurred through legal action by the trustees of the British Coal staff superannuation scheme; if he will detail the full extent of past and present indemnities offered to British Coal; and if he will publish the external legal advice and the terms and conditions upon which any indemnity was offered.

Mr. Eggar: No indemnity has been given or offered to British Coal for such legal costs.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals his Department has made to British Coal in relation to using part of the surplus in its pension scheme to meet the cost of additional contributions to its staff superannuation scheme in respect of early pensions and pensions for redundant miners.

Mr. Eggar: My Department has made no such proposals. It has, however, because of its responsibilities for the proper use of public funds, asked British Coal to explore the possibility of applying its share of the surplus to the staff superannuation scheme in discharge of its obligation to meet the cost of additional contributions to that scheme. The corporation intends to seek a court direction before taking any final decision.

Company Law

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to reform company law to prevent overseas companies that are operating in the United Kingdom with the same names as existing United Kingdom companies from abusing their matching identity.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: All overseas companies opening a branch or place of business in the United Kingdom are required to register with the Registrar of Companies. If the corporate name of such an overseas company is the same as, or too like, an existing name on the Great Britain register, section 694 of the Companies Act 1985 already gives the Secretary of State power to serve notice requiring the overseas company to cease using that name in Great Britain within two months. There are similar powers in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to reform company law to tackle fraud by corporate directorships held in the name of a company registered abroad and to prevent such companies avoiding punishment under United Kingdom law.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: None. Where fraud has been committed in the United Kingdom, existing legislation enables proceedings to be commenced against a company and the directors involved, even where these are overseas companies. There is also a number of bilateral and other arrangements with overseas regulators which provide for assistance with inquiries into offences involving directors and companies located overseas. Provisions in the new Criminal Justice Bill will make it easier to prosecute persons—whether companies or individuals—involved in cases of international fraud.

Regional Development

Mr. Janner: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) when the decision was made to locate his Department's east midlands regional development organisation in Nottingham;

(2) whether he will reconsider his decision to locate the east midlands regional development organisation in Nottingham rather than in Leicester.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 14 April 1993]: The decision was made on 25 March when my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade made a statement on the conclusions of the Government's coal review. The new east midlands regional development organisation is not part of my Department, but will be supported in part by a grant in aid linked to the performance of specific inward investment promotion activities on behalf of the Invest in Britain Bureau.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Potatoes

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the average price of one tonne of British potatoes in (a) 1975, (b) 1985 and (c) 1993; at what average price potatoes were sold to the public in the same years; and if he will also provide the figures at 1991-92 constant prices.

Mr. Curry: The following tables give information in respect of 1975 and 1985. Information about 1993 is not yet available so I have supplied figures for 1992.

	1975 (a) £	1985 (b) £	1992 (b) £
United Kingdom average price per tonne paid to producers	66·80	47·17	[1]70·60

Food Prices

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received during recent months on the pricing policies of food retailers in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Curry: I received from time to time representations from members of the public about retail prices of a wide range of foodstuffs.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Care Homes

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish the projected admissions to residential and nursing homes in the various districts of the Eastern health and social services board for the years 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is not available. In Northern Ireland as a whole, based on the numbers used in the calculation of the sum transferred from the social security system to the health and personal social services budget, it was estimated that in each of the years in question the number of claimants expected to enter independent homes would grow by 2,135 per annum. From 1 April 1993, the number of actual admissions to residential and nursing home care will be determined by the outcome of the assessment of need which boards will be required to carry out on individuals.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish the number of people in care in independent homes in the area of the Northern Ireland Eastern health and social services board on which the budget for community care will be calculated from 1 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The projected number of people in independent care homes in the Eastern board area at 1 April is not available. However, the number of people expected to enter independent homes in Northern Ireland as a whole under the previous arrangements was projected to grow by 2,135 per annum. In 1993-94, £29·5 million, including £24·63 million transferred from social security, has been allocated to the four boards in Northern Ireland on the basis of the capitation formula giving the Eastern board additional community care resources of £12 million. The deployment of these funds together with the existing community care resources is for the board to take forward through its purchasing plans.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people in care in independent homes in the area of the Northern Ireland Eastern health and social services board will qualify for preserved rights under the community care reforms.

Mr. Hanley: All those in care in independent homes in the Eastern health and social services board area on 31 March 1993 have a preserved right to claim the higher rates of income support under the community care reforms.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people were recorded as in care in independent homes in Northern Ireland by the Eastern health and social services board on 31 March.

Mr. Hanley: A provisional total of 5,932 beds were available in independent homes in the Eastern board area at 31 March 1993. It is not known how many of these beds were occupied. Prior to 1 April the majority of residents made private arrangements for admission to these homes and the Eastern board does not have a record of their numbers.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what system was used to obtain the projected number of people in care in independent sector homes in the area of the Eastern health and social services board as at 1 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Projections of the number of people in care in independent sector homes were made for the purposes of the transfer of resources from social security and therefore reflected numbers of demands in social security districts and not individual board areas. These projections were derived from numbers collected from two surveys of all income support claimants and updated by computerised scans of resident numbers in independent homes. Projections do not include residents who were not relying on income support for help with the cost of their accommodation.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what department will make the necessary assessments under the community care reforms for people applying for residential and nursing home care in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: Health and social services boards, through their units of management, are responsible for carrying out an assessment of need for any individual living within their area who requires community care services, including residential care and nursing home accommodation.

Community Care

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans the health and social services boards in Northern Ireland have to meet the needs of those people admitted to community care from 1 April for all the costs of care required to be covered where the applicant is on income support.

Mr. Hanley: Each board, through its units of management, is responsible for assessing the needs of individuals living within its area who require community care services. The costs of providing the necessary community care services will be met by boards. Where this includes residential or nursing home accommodation boards will seek to recover the cost from the person according to his ability to pay, irrespective of whether income support is in payment. Boards must, however, ensure that individual residents are left with at least an amount equivalent to the personal expenses element of income support payable to those in registered independent sector homes.

Cardiac Surgery

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many patients, in each of the health board areas, have been waiting for cardiac surgery for more than (a) one year, (b) two years, (c) three years and (d) four years.

Mr. Hanley: The information is not available in the precise form requested. The numbers waiting for cardiac surgery as recorded by board of residence at the end of February 1993 are as follows:

Board	Number 18-23 months	Number 24 months +	Total
Eastern	37	183	220
Northern	12	43	55
Southern	9	23	32
Western	3	24	27

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many patients were offered cardiac surgery outside the Province in 1992; and of those offered, how many refused.

Mr. Hanley: The information is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, I can say that some 230 patients have been treated in Great Britain during the last 18 months.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 8 December, to the hon. Member for Londonderry, East (Mr. Ross) Official Report, column 601-02, how much additional money will be made available for heart operations in the financial year 1993-94; and how it will be allocated between the four health boards.

Mr. Hanley: A total of £1·62 million additional money will be made available for cardiac surgery in 1993-94. This will be divided among the four health and social security boards as follows:

Eastern—£1,011,348
Northern—£283,458
Southern—£189,318
Western—£135,876

Clinical Care

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment has been carried out of the quality of clinical care in Northern Ireland hospitals; and if he will publish the results.

Mr. Hanley: Clinical care is constantly being assessed by clinicians. Arising from the NHS reforms additional funds have been made available to boards to assist in the process of audit and the Department has centrally funded various medical audit projects. A regional audit advisory committee and area audit advisory committees in each board are all required to produce annual reports which are presented to the Minister. There are no plans to publish these.

In addition Northern Ireland has been an active participant in national studies such as the confidential inquiry into maternal deaths and the confidential inquiry into perioperative deaths. These inquiries are conducted in a formal way and are published widely.

Northern Ireland is also participating fully in the confidential inquiry into stillbirths and deaths in infancy. It is a rolling programme and will be published annually.

Bangladeshi Population

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps have been taken since 1986 to improve employment and training opportunities for the Bangladeshi population in Britain.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Employment Department is committed to the principle of equality of opportunity in all its employment and training programmes. This policy is implemented through the race relations advisory service (RREAS), which helps to improve opportunities for all ethnic minority groups, and training and enterprise councils (TECs). TECs have a contractual obligation to ensure equality of opportunity in all their activities.

The Employment Act 1989 encouraged wider use of positive action training both in training providers and employers. The RREAS helps by publicising what the special provisions allow and encouraging employers to use them.

The Government recognise that those with little English language or low levels of literacy skills will face significant barriers to getting the skills and qualifications to help them get jobs. Those with such needs are eligible to start training for work, the main programme for unemployed adults, without having to be unemployed for six months.

TECs are uniquely placed to work with local communities and all relevant agencies to help address specific needs and overcome barriers. Since their launch in 1989, some TECs have developed provision specifically for local Bangladeshi communities, and others provide a wide range of support for all ethnic minority groups, to which members from Bangladeshi communities have equal access. The ethnic minority grant, administered by the Home Office, has been successful in providing TECs with extra help in overcoming language or cultural barriers in particular.

Advertisements (Age Bar)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she intends to introduce legislation to ban advertisements for job vacancies which place an age bar.

Mr. McLoughlin: Employers who refuse to consider people purely because of their age miss out on the skills, experience and commitment which older people can bring to a job. Banning age limits in job advertisements, however, would do nothing to prevent discrimination occurring later on at the interview or selection stages. The way forward is to persuade employers who discriminate that it is in their own best interests to treat everyone on their merits, regardless of age.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iran (Death Sentence)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards Iran as long as the death sentence on a British citizen living in the United Kingdom is not withdrawn.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We remain greatly concerned by the continuing failure of the Iranian authorities to repudiate the incitement to murder Mr. Rushdie and the bounty on him offered by an Iranian organisation. This failure inevitably prevents the establishment of full and friendly relations with Iran.

TRANSPORT

Railway Stations (Staffing)

12. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will discuss the safety aspects of staffing levels at railway stations with the chairman of British Rail.

Mr. Freeman: The Secretary of State regularly meets the BR chairman and board members to discuss a wide range of matters relating to the railways, including the safety and security of the travelling public. Staffing levels at railway stations are a matter for the board.

Freight Traffic

13. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what support the Government are giving to encourage the transfer of freight traffic from the roads to the railways.

Mr. MacGregor: I recently announced three important new measures to boost the prospects for rail freight. These provided for improvements to the existing freight facilities grant scheme; the introduction of a new grant scheme to assist with Railtrack's charges; and the publication of a paper on the potential for weight incentives for lorries used in combined transport.

These measures taken together with privatisation, open access, and substantial investment in channel tunnel services, will provide the best prospects for encouraging more freight traffic to the railways.

West Coast Main Line

14. Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport to what extent performance levels on the west coast main line are affected by the age of the infrastructure and the age of the rolling stock.

Mr. Freeman: I recognise that the age of equipment on particular lines can affect performance. That said, British Rail intends to start work soon on renewing the infrastructure on the west coast main line. The precise timing will be decided later in the spring when British Rail has finalised its spending plans. New stock for the line is, as I announced earlier, one of two options under consideration for the planned £150 million leasing facility announced at the time of the autumn statement.

16. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations the British Government have made to European institutions with a view to securing financial support for investment in the west coast main line.

Mr. Freeman: The west coast main line is included in the outline plan for the European high speed train network. The Commission has requested further information on such projects. The Commission is at present assessing the likely demand for the proposed networks fund rather than inviting bids for funds.

18. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment his Department has made of the economic potential of the west coast main line to carry intercontinental freight and passenger services via the channel tunnel.

Mr. Freeman: It would be for British Rail, not the Department, to make such an assessment. British Rail's current assessment underlies their proposals for international freight and passenger services using the west coast main line.

25. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of British Rail to discuss services on the west coast main line.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport regularly meets the chairman of British Rail to discuss a variety of railway issues.

Bus Services (London)

15. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received regarding deregulation of bus services in London.

Mr. Norris: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) earlier today.

Motorway Repairs

17. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many working hours he estimates were lost in 1992 due to motorway repairs.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: All motorway repairs are planned so as to keep delays to a minimum.

A40 (Feeder Routes)

19. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to develop improvements to the feeder routes into the A40 in the Northolt and Ealing area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: This is a matter for the London borough of Ealing which has responsibility for the roads in question.

West Midlands (Continental Rail Links)

20. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given to improving rail links between the west midlands and the continent.

Mr. MacGregor: British Rail is investing over £1·4 billion in rolling stock and infrastructure for their channel tunnel services. Projects particularly benefiting the west midlands include the upgrading of the existing freight terminal at Birmingham. This will enable high-quality rail freight services to operate from the region to the continent and allow goods to transfer from road to rail. British Rail is also investing in rolling stock to provide a direct day service for passengers linking Manchester, Birmingham, Stockport and Crewe to both Paris and Brussels and a passenger night service via Lancaster, Preston and Crewe to those cities.

Disabled People (London)

21. Mr. Deva: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures his Department will take to facilitate travel by the disabled in London.

Mr. Norris: My Department's disability unit works closely with the unit for disabled passengers at London Transport in promoting a wide range of accessible mainstream and specialist transport services.

Dial-a-ride services in London are funded by my Department and administered on our behalf by London Transport. The level of funding for this year is £12 million —which represents a real increase of 60 per cent. since 1985-86, the last year of GLC funding.

Traffic Congestion (London)

22. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his current estimate of the annual cost of traffic congestion on London's roads.

Mr. Norris: No single figure can be quoted because there is no generally accepted norm against which any measure of congestion can be compared. However, it is an aim of the Department's expenditure and policies to reduce congestion and make the best possible use of available road space.

Pilotage (The Minches)

23. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider a compulsory pilotage scheme in the Minches.

Mr. Norris: I refer the hon. Member to my reply on 17 March, Official Report, column 262.

Road Accidents

24. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the most recent figures for progress towards the aim of reducing the numbers of road accidents between the years 1985 and 2000.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The aim is to reduce road accident casualties by one third by the year 2000, compared with the annual average for 1981-85. The provisional figures for 1992 show that fatalities are down by 24 per cent., serious injuries by 34 per cent. and all casualties by 3 per cent. on the target baseline.

North Nottinghamshire Coalfield

26. Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for further investment in road and rail links in the north Nottinghamshire coalfield.

Mr. Freeman: Central Government investment for road infrastructure proposals in north Nottinghamshire ranges from direct investment in motorway and all-purpose trunk road improvement schemes, such as widening the M1 and A1, to possible support through transport supplementary grant for local highway improvements. Assistance towards the construction of Bosford and Balwell stations on stage 1 of the Robin Hood rail line has also been given.

Rail Privatisation

27. Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the franchising of Great Western main line passenger services.

Mr. Freeman: We have so far received four expressions of interest in a franchise for the Great Western main line inter-city services. As promised in our consultation document, we are treating all expressions of interest as strictly confidential.

British Rail Rolling Stock

28. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much capital was spent on rolling stock at British Rail in (a) 1979 and (b) 1992.

Mr. Freeman: In 1991-92 prices expenditure on rolling stock by British Rail in 1979 was £226 million and in 1991-92 was £331 million.

Roads (North Yorkshire)

29. Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many road schemes in North Yorkshire were approved for 1993-94 and their costs; and which schemes are under consideration for construction in 1994-95.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Two major trunk road schemes have been approved to start construction in 1993-94. A contract has just been let for one and construction works are about to start. Together they are currently estimated to cost over £80 million.

Two trunk road schemes may start construction in 1994-95 at an estimated cost of over £14 million subject to the completion of statutory procedures and the availability of funds.

Thirty-seven smaller trunk road improvement schemes are programmed to start in 1993-94 costing about £1 million overall and a similar number is under consideration for 1994-95, costing about £1·5 million.

My right hon. Friend is supporting six major local authority schemes in North Yorkshire in 1993-94, costing nearly £48 million.

Support for local authority schemes for a start of construction in 1994-95 will be considered after North Yorkshire county council submits its transport policies and programme bid in July.

Helicopter Sites (London)

30. Ms Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the working party on helicopter sites in London will report.

Mr. Norris: The Secretary of State hopes to receive the report of the London heliport study working group in late summer, and to publish the report as soon as possible thereafter.

20 mph Zones

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what evidence he has that the experimental 20 mph zones are reducing accidents; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Preliminary indications are that 20 mph zones reduce casualties by well in excess of 50 per cent. There have also been small reductions on surrounding roads. It is particularly pleasing that they seem to be especially effective in reducing accidents to children.

Buses (Disabled Access)

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to increase the number of low floor buses for use by people with disabilities.

Mr. Freeman: Decisions on the purchase of buses are a matter for the commercial judgment of bus operators. However, the Government wish the merits of low-floor buses to be fully assessed. I have therefore allocated resources for a trial of such vehicles in North Tyneside. London Transport have also decided to purchase 68 low-floor buses at a cost of £8 million, the first of which will come into service shortly. Both these schemes will be monitored and the results made widely available.

Climate Change Policies

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many staff in his Department have responsibility for implementing climate change policies arising out of Agenda 21.

Mr. MacGregor: Agenda 21 raises a wide range of environmental policies which fall within the responsibility of many of the Department's divisions. It is not therefore possible to specify the precise number of staff concerned with this issue. Work on implementing policies arising out of agenda 21 is co-ordinated by the transport policy unit.

Mail Services

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the security of the conditions under which the royal mails are conveyed by train; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: This is an operational matter for the British Railways Board and the Post Office.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many incidents involving theft of mail bags from trains have occurred in each of the past five years.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is as follows:

	Number
1988	602
1989	564
1990	337
1991	224
1992	123

Maritime Transport (Safety)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received from, and what recent meetings he has had with, Lloyd's Register regarding environmental safety in maritime transport.

Mr. Norris: None.

Ministerial Engagements

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list (a) his official engagements and (b) those of the Minister for Aviation and Shipping on (i) 30 March, (ii) 31 March and (iii) 1 April.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 14 April 1993]: On 30 March, I met Mr. Israel Kessar, the Israeli Minister of Transport. Later that day I attended a lunch hosted by the British Ports Association and in the evening I had to be in the House of Commons for important votes. On 31 March, I announced the publication of the Department's report on options for city congestion charging. On 1 April, I attended Cabinet. Over these three days, I also chaired some 15 meetings with officials from my Department. On 30 March, my right hon. and noble Friend was in Shetland to open a conference on "Managing the Marine Environment", organised by the Shetland islands council. On 31 March and 1 April he was overseas.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Fuel Bills

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will make it his policy to increase the level of all benefits for disabled people and carers to fully compensate them for their higher gas and electricity bills as a result of the introduction of a value added tax charge on domestic fuel;

(2) what measures his Department will take to compensate disabled people and carers, other than those on income-related benefits, for the introduction of a value added tax charge on domestic fuel.

Mr. Scott: In his Budget statement the Chancellor said that there would be extra help for poorer pensioners and those on low incomes; this includes many disabled people and carers. Also, this help would be additional to the uprating of benefits. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will be announcing the details of this extra help in the autumn.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what research his Department is taking to measure the impact of a value added tax charge for domestic fuel on recipients of disability and carer's benefits.

Mr. Scott: The Department sponsors surveys which identify people with disabilities and the pattern of their expenditure.

The impact of a VAT charge for domestic fuel will be considered and our conclusions made public in the normal way in the autumn statement on benefit uprating. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has made it clear that extra help will be given to poorer pensioners and others on low incomes.

Social Fund

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the impact of the social fund's policy with respect to help with work-related expenses on the ability of claimants to take up work.

Mr. Scott: Help with work-related expenses is specifically excluded from the social fund. Some assistance is available from the Department of Employment and might also be given by employers. Generally the fund seeks to avoid duplicating help which is available elsewhere.

Maastricht Treaty

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the cost (a) to business and (b) to the Exchequer of implementing the second protocol of the Maastricht treaty.

Miss Widdecombe: Assuming the Maastricht treaty is ratified, this protocol will limit retrospective application of the ruling of the European Court of Justice in the case of Barber v. Guardian Royal Exchange Assurance Group to pensionable service from 17 May 1990, the date of that ruling. In that case the court ruled that occupational pensions were pay and so must be equal between men and women according to article 119 of the treaty of Rome. The question of the retrospective effects of the Barber ruling is also under consideration by the European Court of Justice in the case of Coloroll Pensions Trustees Ltd. v. Russell and Others.

There is no cost to either business or the Exchequer arising from the protocol. On the contrary, it will save British industry the estimated £51 billion cost of a fully retrospective interpretation of the Barber ruling.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many copies of his Department's information pack on the Child Support Agency have been published; at what cost; and to whom it has been circulated.

Mr. Burt: The Child Support Agency has published 10,000 copies of the information pack, containing the agency's framework document, business plan, charter and brochure. The cost, which includes publication and distribution of a further 10,000 brochures and 10,000 charters, was £66,400.

The pack has been issued to a wide range of advisory, voluntary and statutory bodies with an interest in child maintenance matters; to representatives of the legal profession; to Members of Parliament and to the agency's staff.

Mr. F. Ellis

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he intends to respond to the application by Mr. F. Ellis for disability living allowance made on 23 October 1992.

Mr. Scott: A reply was sent to the hon. Member regarding this matter on 11 February 1993.

Margaret Edwards

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects the office of determination of contribution will reach a decision on the case of Margaret Edwards (NI No. ZA 090204 D; ref. No. RM 171 M/CO999/72/402/4).

Miss Widdecombe: The Secretary of State's decision, on review, will be given as soon as current inquiries with the Contributions Agency have been completed and Mrs. Edwards has been given the opportunity to make representations on the Secretary of State's proposals resulting from those inquiries.

Pneumoconiosis and Silicosis

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims for industrial injuries compensation from sufferers of emphysema or bronchitis caused by pneumoconiosis or silicosis have been withdrawn due to bereavement of claimants since August 1992.

Mr. Scott: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Ten-minute Bills

40. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Lord President of the Council what proposal he has to change the procedure concerning ten-minute Bills.

Mr. Newton: I have no proposals to change the current procedure in relation to Bills presented under Standing Order No. 19.

Sitting Hours

41. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Lord President of the Council what further representations he has received in respect of the changes in hours for the House; and if he will make a statement.

42. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make a statement on the progress of sitting hours reform.

Mr. Newton: Further representations are made to me regularly at business questions. Discussions are continuing through the usual channels, but I am not yet in a position to make a further statement.

Divisions

43. Mr. Bates: To ask the Lord President of the Council what plans he has to review the procedure governing time available for hon. Members to reach the Lobby at times of a Division of the House.

Mr. Newton: There are no plans to review the current procedure, but my hon. Friend may care to write to the Procedure Committee if he has any specific proposals.

Standing Committee on Regional Affairs

44. Mr. Enright: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will bring forward proposals for a meeting of the Standing Committee on Regional Affairs.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Lancashire, West (Mr. Pickthall).

Departmental Staff

45. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many staff are employed in his Department; for what purposes and at what cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The Privy Council Office has 32 staff. Of these, 12 are employed in the private offices of the Lord Privy Seal and the Lord President. The remaining staff provide administrative support for the Privy Council, including the Judicial Committee. In 1992-93, the cost of staff salaries was £720,000.

Nationalised Industries

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Lord President of the Council what alterations he will propose to the procedures of the House to allow increased parliamentary discussion of the operations and accounts of nationalised industries.

Mr. Newton: I have no plans to propose alterations to existing procedures relating to the operations and accounts of nationalised industries.

Disabled Visitors

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what consideration has been given to the financial implications of the need to protect the architectural heritage of the Palace of Westminster in meeting the requirements of disabled visitors.

Mr. Ray Powell: A report by consultants into the scope for improving facilities for the disabled in the Palace of Westminster is expected to be considered by the Accommodation and Works Committee shortly after the Easter recess. It is therefore not yet possible to determine the financial implications of safeguarding the historic fabric of the building.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

St. Helena

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if references were taken up from the Falkland Islands Government before the new general manager of the St. Helena Development Agency was appointed.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The general manager-designate of the proposed development agency is an employee of the consultants, Pieda plc, who were appointed by the Overseas Development Administration to help set up the agency. Any question of references would have been for them. The general manager had previously worked in the Falkland Islands, but was not employed by the Falkland Islands Government.

Development Aid

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the announcement by the European Commission on 24 March of five priority areas for member states' policies on development aid.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Council of Development Ministers chaired by my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development in November 1992 set out overall objectives for Community and member states' aid and a timetable for future work. This included a review by the Commission of Council resolutions and conclusions adopted since 1981. The results of this review have now been sent by the Commission to the Council and are summarised in the announcement made by the Commission on 24 March. The Council will consider them at its next meeting on 25 May.

We welcome much of the Commission's paper, but have questions about some aspects of it which we shall raise with other member states and the Commission.

EC Development Council

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek at the next EC Development Council meeting on 28 May to press for (a) the establishment of a recovery budget line of at least 100 million ecus in the 1994 budget and (b) immediate use of unspent resources particularly with Lomé.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Development Council on 25 May will discuss a Danish initiative on African recovery and rehabilitation. We believe that the EC and its member states should continue to support effective programmes in the area; but we are not convinced that additional transfers of resources away from member states aid programmes to those administered by the European Commission would be helpful.

Aid Schemes

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in respect of how many co-financed projects under the joint funding scheme the Government have requested a reimbursement on grounds of unsatisfactory performance, listed (a) by country and (b) by non-governmental organisation concerned.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There has been one occasion when the Government requested a reimbursement of funds received by an NGO from the joint funding scheme. This occurred in 1989. The project was based in Indonesia and the agency concerned was World Vision UK. The project was carrying out activities which had not been described in the proposal and to which we had not agreed. We are, however, continuing to fund World Vision projects in Bangladesh, Cambodia, Ethiopia, Bali, Peru, Senegal and Vietnam and are satisfied that these are being implemented properly.

Forestry

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans exist for further bilateral aid support for the tropical forestry action plan.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 2 April 1993]: The Overseas Development Administration proposes to continue to assist in the preparation and implementation of national forest action plans under the tropical forests action programme in a number of developing countries, including those referred to in my answer to the hon. Member of 7 December, column 494, as part of our wide-ranging programme of forestry projects.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if information collected by the World Conservation Union on threatened tropical timber species with funding from the Overseas Development Administration will be used by the International Tropical Timber Organisation to help to achieve the environmental projection aspect of its mandate.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 2 April 1993]: Information originally collected by the World Conservation Monitoring Centre was with Japanese funding. ODA subsequently funded work to refine the database and develop a methodology to identify endangered species. We are considering, with the WCMC and the International Tropical Timber Organisation proposals for further work on threatened tropical timber species. This could help the ITTO to meet its environmental objectives.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the World bank and the United Nations Development Programme to encourage their support and sponsorship for the proposed consultative group on the tropical forests action programme.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 2 April 1993]: We have made clear to the United Nations Development Programme and the World bank that we believe that the tropical forests action programme would benefit significantly from their participation in the proposed consultative forum.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the findings of the investigation conducted into rates of tropical deforestation published on 8 March by the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organisation.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 2 April 1993]: The FAO estimates the annual global rate of tropical forest loss to be 15·4 million hectares. There is a continuing need for international support for the strengthening of sustainable forest management practices by tropical countries.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evaluation there has been of completed national forest action plans undertaken as part of the revamping of the tropical forests action programme.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 2 April 1993]: We do not know of any evaluation reports on national forest action plans carried out under the reformed tropical forests action programme.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects the African development bank to publish the final version of its new forestry policy.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 2 April 1993]: We understand that the African development bank intends to submit a draft forestry policy paper to its board of directors in May. The draft will take account of comments received from interested non-governmental organisations on a preliminary draft.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 8 March, Official Report, column 456, if he will publish the results of review and monitoring exercises carried out in respect of British support for the tropical forestry action plan.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 2 April 1993]: The written reports of monitoring and review of projects under implementation are internal working documents; we do not publish them.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on measures so far adopted to improve the performance of the tropical forestry action plan as a result of mechanism's revamping.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 2 April 1993]: The tropical forests action programme's goal and objectives have been redefined; its operational principles have been revised to give increased emphasis to priorities as seen by tropical countries. There has been a renewed emphasis on consultation with local forest communities and non-government organisations. Action is under way to improve policy analysis and planning capacities in a number of developing countries.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the tropical timber trade seminar attended by Overseas Development Administration and Forestry Commission officials in Brussels on 17 and 18 March.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 2 April 1993]: The seminar was organised primarily by the Scottish Hardwood Charter and attended by participants from a wide range of countries and interest groups. Many different opinions were expressed on the need for the certification and labelling of sustainably produced timber and how best this might be undertaken.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will publish a list of approved forestry projects supported by the Commonwealth Development Corporation;

(2) if he will publish a list of completed forestry projects to be presented for approval by the board of the Commonwealth Development Corporation before July.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 2 April 1993]: Details of projects currently supported by CDC are shown in the table. At the moment CDC does not expect any other forestry projects to be considered for approval by the CDC board before July.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the African development bank in relation to the adoption of that organisation's new forestry policy.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 2 April 1993]: We have supported the African development bank's intention to adopt a forestry policy and to involve informed non-governmental organisations in preparation of the draft policy paper.

Tapajos National Forest

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures have been taken to ensure the full participation of local people in the development and implementation of the Tapajos national forest project funded by the Overseas Development Administration in Brazil.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 2 April 1993]: The project is intended to test controlled, selective, sustainable logging within less than 1 per cent. of the total area of the national forest. No people inhabit the project area.

The project management has established a consultative committee which includes representatives from the community, the Rural Workers Union, and from two local non-government organisations active in the region as well as local government officials. It will meet quarterly and will help define methodologies for the implementation of the project as well as evaluating project progress. A Tapajos community working group has also been established, comprising 20 members of which about half are representatives of local people, to enable the local community to participate in the management of the whole national forest.

The Overseas Development Administration has engaged a social development consultant to ensure that the needs of local people are not overlooked in any of our operations in Brazil.

Chandrapur Electricity Plant

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement regarding the potential for Overseas Development Administration withdrawal from the Chandrapur electricity plant project following an environmental assessment of the proposal.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 2 April 1993]: The offer of aid for the Chandrapur HVDC project was subject to ODA's usual appraisal and approval procedures which include environmental assessment.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what support has been given to GEC Alsthom's bid for the Chandrapur electricity plant in India from the main part of the British bilateral aid budget; what consideration was given to providing the grant under the aid and trade provision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 2 April 1993]: An offer of £63 million of aid was made in support of GEC Alsthom's bid for the Chandrapur HVDC project in India, subject to usual Overseas Development Administration appraisal and approval procedures. It was decided that this aid should come from the bilateral programme with India, rather than the aid and trade provision, because the project was consistent with the energy efficiency objectives of our India aid programme.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement regarding the scope and eventual availability of the environmental assessment for the current Chandrapur electricity plant project proposal.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 2 April 1993]: The environmental assessment of the Chandrapur HVDC project will be conducted in accordance with the Overseas Development Administration's manual of environmental appraisal. The first step will be an initial assessment which will determine the need for and scope of subsequent investigation. The environmental appraisal will inform the Overseas Development Administration's decision on the project. Environmental impact assessments cover issues of potential sensitivity to overseas Governments and material which is commercial in confidence; they are not generally made available.

Aid and Trade Projects

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library the criteria employed in awarding a company tender credit support through the aid and trade provision.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 2 April 1993]: Tender credit support is not provided to companies through the aid and trade provision.

Bilateral Aid Projects

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will place in the Library details of British bilateral aid project allocations and expenditures since 1989 by country within each sector;

(2) if he will place in the Library details of British bilateral aid project allocations and expenditures in each year since 1989 by sector within each country.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answers 2 April 1993]: Because of current developments in the ODA's management information systems it is not presently possible to provide this information in the form requested except at disproportionate cost. Details of our aid allocations, by country and by sector, are given in "British Aid Statistics", a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library the project cycle for the approval and implementation of British bilateral aid projects.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 2 April 1993]: Copies have been placed in the Library.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the results of consultations with potentially affected communities about particular bilateral aid projects are made available to the public, both in the recipient country and in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 2 April 1993]: Working documents relating to the appraisal or implementation of projects, which may include the results of such consultations, are not generally made available. The results of such consultations may however be covered in published project evaluation reports.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Overseas Development Administration requests that the sponsors of bilateral aid projects consult potentially affected communities as part of the project cycle.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 2 April 1993]: For projects which have a direct impact on local communities ODA seeks to ensure full consultation with and participation by those directly affected by the project. This applies throughout the project cycle, with particular efforts to involve women and poor people. Written guidance and training is given to ODA staff and ODA often provides specialist advice to the project sponsors in developing countries.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) which proposed or approved British bilateral aid projects have been withdrawn following an environmental assessment;

(2) whether an environmental assessment is produced for British bilateral aid projects before the projects and evaluation committee gives a proposal the go-ahead.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answers 2 April 1993]: ODA projects, including those considered by the projects and evaluation committee, are subject to environmental assessment according to the procedures described in ODA's manual of environmental appraisal, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. ODA does not keep central records of project proposals which do not reach the approval point.

Aid and Trade Provision

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the 10 largest recipient companies of aid and trade provision-related finance since April 1990.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 2 April 1993]: The 10 largest aggregate commitments of funds from the aid and trade provision by lead contractor since April 1990 are as follows:

Company	ATP commitment £ million
Balfour Beatty	243·987
Foster Wheeler Energy	53·850
Snamprogetti UK	47·179
Phillips Radio Communication System	34·111
Marconi	26·911
NEI Parsons	23·485
TQ International	23·363
Coppee UK	22·250
John Laing International	21·049
Siemens Plessey Radar	20·340

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library details of all aid and trade provision projects awarded since April 1991 and all those currently in operation or under negotiation.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 2 April 1993]: Aid agreements involving aid and trade provision funds which have been concluded with Governments of developing countries since April 1991 have been placed in the Library. All the projects are still in operation.

A list of projects for which ODA has made a current offer of aid and for which ECGD cover remains available has also been placed in the Library.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will place in the Library a list of all aid and trade provision-related environmental consultancy contracts awarded since 1980;

(2) if he will place in the Library a list of the environmental consultancies currently engaged in aid and trade provision-linked assignments.

Mr. Lennnox-Boyd [holding answer 2 April 1993]: ODA's central records do not indentify separately all environmental consultancy contracts related to the aid and trade provision since 1980. A number of consultancies have contained environmental components, although most environmental appraisal work on ATP projects is carried out by the ODA's in-house advisers in accordance with ODA's manual of environmental appraisal. Monitoring is done both in-house and using consultants.

Since 1990 Environmental Resources Ltd. has undertaken the following environmental studies, of which only the last is current:

Appraisal of Fushun and Dalian power projects, China
Monitoring of Samanalawewa Dam project, Sri Lanka
Appraisal of Pergau Hydro Electric project, Malaysia
Monitoring of Pergau Hydro Electric project, Malaysia

World Bank

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the action plan to be prepared by the management of the World bank in relation to the recent report of the portfolio management task force; and if he will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 2 April 1993]: We understand the action plan perepared by World bank management in response to the report of the task force on portfolio management will be discussed by the bank's board of directors in early May. Subject to board agreement on publication, which we support, we will arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

Biwater UK

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a list of Biwater UK's involvement in British bilateral aid projects for the last five years.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 2 April 1993]: Contracts funded under the bilateral aid programme have been placed with the company or its subsidiaries by overseas Governments or the Overseas Development Administration for the following projects:

Malaysia rural water scheme (1986-1992)
Sir Lanka water supply (1989-1991)
Uganda turbine spares (1992-1993)
Egypt—Cairo wastewater (1992-current)

Information on aid-funded contracts which the company may have received through sub-contracting by other companies implementing bilateral aid projects is not held.

Commonwealth Development Corporation

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress made this year in reviewing and updating the environmental procedures employed by the Commonwealth Development Corporation.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 2 April 1993]: CDC aims to introduce revised environmental guidelines, discussed with ODA, in June.

Brazil

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on recent meetings with Senator Coutinho Jorge, Environment Minister for Brazil, in respect of British support for the pilot programme for the conservation of Brazil's rain forests and if he will provide details of the United Kingdom's bilateral support for the programme.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 2 April 1993]: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Denham) at col. 488, 22 March 1993.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much aid is given to Brazil; and if he will give details of the funded projects.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The latest available figures for gross bilateral aid to Brazil for the last three years are 1989-90 £2·4 million, 1990-91 £3·3 million, 1991-92 £2·7 million. For details of current forestry projects in Brazil, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 7 December 1992, Hansard, column 494-96.

Further projects which are or were active during the last year are as follows:

(i) Recife Environmental Control Project. The project invcIves consultancy visits by United Kingdom experts in industrial waste treatment and environmental assessment/ management and pollution control, to give seminars and lectures; and short-term training of Brazilians in Britain. The objective is to enhance the capability of three organisations in environmental control in Recife, the Pernambuco State Pollution Control Agency (CPRH), Federal University of Pernambuco (UFPE) and Pernambuco State Technical Institute (ITEP). Project cost £270,000.

(ii) Technological Enhancement of Sewage Treatment for Sao Paulo Metropolitican Region. This project is in support of SABESP (the water treatment and supply company for Sao Paulo State). The objectives are to transfer and provide traihing in the knowledge and technology necessary for improving sewage treatment in large plants, and to find a solution to the problem of sludge disposal. Project cost £170,000.

(iii) Capibaribe River Pollution Project. This project provides advice to the authorities on their programme for the control of pollution in the Rio Capibaribe, Recife. Project cost £110,500.

(iv) English for Specific Purposes. This project supports the development of English training for technicians and scientists who can use English to gain access to international scientific and technical literature. Project costs £91,500.

(vi) In addition under the Joint Funding Scheme 63 projects costing £477,000 are currently funded through Non Government Organisations targeting assistance to street-children, indigenous peoples, mother and child welfare and health.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the most recent assessment of the extent of destruction of Brazilian rain forest; what steps he takes to ensure that aid to Brazil is not used to support projects which entail destruction of rain forests; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Figures provided by the Brazilian Ministry of Environment estimate deforestation at 8·4 per cent. of the original rain forest area. Figures of up to 12 per cent. are given by some sources and depend on interpretation of the original area and degree of deforestation. According to the Brazilian Space Research Institute, the trend in recent years is downward. In 1991 about 11,000 square kilometres was deforested, this was a reduction by 20 per cent. on the figure for 1990, itself a reduction of 27 per cent. on 1989.

All United Kingdom-supported projects in Amazonia are intended to contribute to reducing deforestation.

Malaysia

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a copy of the environmental impact assessment and the results of consultations undertaken with local interest groups for the British aid-funded Malaysian rural water study project announced in April 1984.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 2 April 1993]: This project comprised 134 sub-projects. ODA commissioned environmental assessments of two of the larger sub-projects which involved construction of dams. No changes in project design were indicated.

Environmental impact assessments cover issues of potential sensitivity to overseas Governments and material which is commercial in confidence; they are not made generally available.

Amlohri Coal Mine

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library the environmental impact assessment and the results of consultations undertaken with local interest groups for the British aid funded Amlohri opencast coal mine, Madhaya Pradesh, India, announced on 25 March 1991.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 2 April 1993]: The British aid for the Amlohri opencast coal mine in India, announced on 25 March 1991, consisted of technical co-operation and spare parts for existing equipment. ODA's assessment was that this aid would offer a number of environmental benefits by improving the management of the mine and assisting the mine management to implement an environmental management plan. This plan was prepared for Northern Coalfields Ltd. in India and covers issues of potential sensitivity to the Indian Government and material which is commercial in confidence; such documents are not made generally available.

Urumqi Petrochemical Complex

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a copy of the environmental impact assessments and the results of consultations undertaken with local interest groups and communities for the British aid-funded Urumqi petrochemical complex, Xinjiang Province, China, announced on 10 September 1992.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 2 April 1993]: ODA commissioned an environmental assessment by a specialist consultant in 1991. On the basis of that assessment ODA has allocated aid funds to assist with the establishment of up-to-date environmental protection and safety standards.

Environmental impact assessments cover issues of potential sensitivity to overseas Governments and material which is commercial in confidence; they are not made generally available.

Kelantan Power Station

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a copy of the environmental impact assessment and the results of consultations undertaken with local interest groups for the British aid-funded Pergau hydro-electric power station, Kelantan, Malaysia, announced on 15 July 1991.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 2 April 1993]: ODA commissioned an environmental assessment by specialist consultants in 1990. On the basis of that assessment and following consultations with the Malaysian authorities ODA has allocated aid funds to assist environmental monitoring and the preparation of an environmental management plan.

Environmental impact assessments cover issues of potential sensitivity to overseas Governments and material which is commercial in confidence; they are not made generally available.

Angola

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evidence he has of South African involvement in the Angolan war; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 14 April 1993]: We are aware of allegations of South African Government involvement in the war in Angola. This has been denied by the South African Government. We have seen no firm evidence to support those allegations.

Overseas Aid

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of the overseas aid budget, for the last three years for which figures are available, had no tying commitments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 14 April 1993]: Commitments not tied to the procurement of British goods and services, as a percentage of total bilateral official development assistance 1988-91, were as follows:

	Per cent.
1989	24·0
[1]1990	n/a

[1] The figure for 1990 is not available.

It is not our policy to impose tying requirements on our multilateral aid commitments, although multilateral agencies commonly restrict offshore procurement access to companies from member states.

Population Control

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 1 July 1992, Official Report, columns 577-78, what sums were given to (a) the International Planned Parenthood Federation and (b) the United Nations Population Fund in 1992.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 16 April 1993]: The Overseas Development Administration contributed £8 million to IPPF and £9·423 million to UNFPA in 1992.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has regarding the specific projects mounted by the Chinese Family Planning Association and funded by the International Planned Parenthood Federation; and what visits have been made by his officials to China to monitor the work of the Chinese Family Planning Association.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 16 April 1993]: IPPF contributes some US$1 million per annum in technical and financial support to the China FPA. These funds are used for audio-visual equipment, information/education materials and logisitics support.

IPPF is responsible for monitoring the activities of its family planning associations in over 130 countries, including China. ODA is in regular contact with IPPF about the performance of these FPAs and receives additional information from a number of sources including our diplomatic missions overseas.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what report he has received from the general secretary of the International Planned Parenthood Federation regarding his visit to China in February; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 16 April 1993]: Dr. Mahler has been invited to discuss his visit to China with ODA officials.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of (a) the activity of the Chinese Family Planning Association in Tibet and (b) the application of coercive methods of population control in Tibet; what action his Department has taken in response; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 16 April 1993]: The British Government are deeply concerned about reports of human rights violations in Tibet and elsewhere in China. We are opposed to any form of coercion in population programmes. We take every opportunity to bring our concern to the attention of the Chinese authorities and will continue to do so.

We believe that the China Family Planning Association has an important role to play in monitoring the implementation of family planning programmes throughout China and resisting any systematic abuse of human rights by officials.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Market Testing

Mr. Michael: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what guidance is given to Government Departments on market testing; and whether such advice is made available to staff.

Mr. Waldegrave: Her Majesty's Treasury's public competition and purchasing unit guidance note No. 34, "Market Testing and Buying In", issued in March 1992, is available to Departments and their staff. Copies have already been placed in the Library. My Department plans to publish revised guidance, which will be widely available to those involved in market testing, including the staff of Government Departments.

ENVIRONMENT

City Grant (Bradford)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current status of the application by 3Ds Ltd. for city grant in connection with the west end scheme in Bradford.

Mr. Robin Squire: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave him on 18 February 1993, Official Report, columns 307-8.

Housing, Chelmsford

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many housing units have been purchased by housing associations under the housing market package, announced in the autumn statement in November 1992, in the Chelmsford local authority area.

Mr. Baldry: Seventy eight properties have been purchased in Chelmsford.

Bangladeshi Population

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps have been taken since 1986 to improve housing provision and standards for the Bangladeshi population in Britain.

Mr. Baldry: The Government's aim for housing is to bring a decent home within reach of every family, and our policies work towards that end regardless of the ethnic origin of individual households.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

Mr. Fishburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the environment what will be the timetable for introducing compulsory competitive tendering for local authority construction-related and corporate services.

Mr. Robin Squire: We intend that the first of the construction-related and corporate services in English local authorities will come into the CCT regime from October 1995. From that date work can be carried out by local authorities' own staff only if it has been awarded following competitive tendering. Local authorities will therefore wish to begin seeking tenders for the first services in summer 1994. CCT for all the new services will be in place by the start of 1997-98.

The first corporate service to be the subject of CCT will be legal services. This will be followed in a phased programme by IT services, housing management, finance, personnel, and corporate and administrative services.

CCT will be introduced for all the construction-related services simultaneously—this will include local authorities' engineering, architectural, and property management services which the Government had proposed to be treated as separate activities. Authorities are increasingly integrating these services, and the Government have agreed to bring them together as a single activity under the CCT regime to give authorities maximum flexibiilty and discretion in how they deal with and contract for this work —on either an integrated or a single-discipline basis.

For each new service in the CCT programme, the Government will prescribe the proportion of work which must be market tested. The Government's preliminary proposals are 33 per cent. for legal services and 90 per cent. for construction-related services. The exact figures are now being discussed with local government and others.

Authorities will be required to submit the prescribed percentage of each service to competition before it can be carried out in-house. For legal services, the prescribed percentage will apply immediately from October 1995. For construction-related services, covering the three separate disciplines of engineering, property management and architectural services, authorities will be required to market test a third of the prescribed percentage from October 1995, rising to the full percentage from October 1996.

The Government are still considering the detailed timetable for CCT for housing management. Ministers will make further announcements about this shortly. Separate announcements will also be made about the timetable for authorities in Scotland and Wales.

This announcement will help both local authorities and private sector suppliers of the services to prepare for CCT. The arrangements have been worked out following very helpful discussions with local authority representatives, which are continuing. I am confident that CCT will raise standards and improve value for money in local authorities' professional services, as it has done for construction work and blue collar services.

Water Charges

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he collects on levels of charges for water supply.

Mr. Maclean: The Director General of Water Services has responsibility for the economic regulation of the licensed water companies and publishes details of average household bills for measured and unmeasured water supply each year.

Toxic Waste

Ms Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the forms of toxic waste exported from British industries, the destinations, identifying third world destinations separately and the quantities involved over the last 12 months.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, I refer the hon. Member to my answers to the hon. Member for Ceredigion and Pembroke, North (Mr. Dafis) on 9 November 1992, Official Report, columns 587-88, and 2 March 1993, Official Report, column 102, and to the hon. Mr. Hain: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when the deputy chairman of the Parliametary Boundary Commission for Wales is to be appointed.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The appointment of the deputy chairman of the Parliamentary Boundary Commission for Wales will be made as soon as possible, following consultation with Opposition parties.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

BCCI

Mr. Darling: To ask the Attorney-General if the Serious Fraud Office is still pursuing inquiries into possible criminal conduct of individuals connected with the Bank of Credit and Commerce International; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Yes. Three persons have already been indicted at the Central Criminal Court on charges connected with the Bank of Credit and Commerce International. It is expected that a fourth person will be extradited from France in the near future. Other lines of inquiry are being pursued and the investigation will continue while there is still a realistic prospect of bringing criminal charges against persons in England.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General what steps have been taken by the Serious Fraud Office to interview (a) the British citizens in Abu Dhabi and (b) the persons in Pakistan who have indicated that they will co-operate with the Serious Fraud Office in furnishing information about BCCI.

The Attorney-General: Requests have been made to interview detainees and view documents in Abu Dhabi. So far, it has not been possible to arrange for such access.

I have taken the persons mentioned at (b) to be those about whom the hon. Member wrote to my hon. and learned Friend the Solicitor-General. His letter of 29 July 1992 to the hon. Member explained the basis on which it would be possible to interview those persons and, since the Serious Fraud Office is unable to contact the individuals save through the hon. Member, sought assistance in confirming their willingness to be interviewed on that basis. No such confirmation has been received.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the amount of money spent on (a) new build, (b) improvement schemes and (c) maintenance schemes by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in each of the estates under its control in the seven housing districts of Belfast in each of the last five years.

Mr. Atkins: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but I have been advised by the chief executive that the information is not readily available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Squatters

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many squatters have had court proceedings taken against them by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive for illegal occupancy in each year since 1988.

Mr. Atkins: The chief executive of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive has advised that details of the number of squatters who have had court proceedings taken against them are available for only the last three years. The numbers are as follows:

	Number
1990-91	133
1991-92	227
1992-93	172

Punishment Shootings

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many punishment shootings occurred in Northern Ireland in each year since 1990.

Mr. Mates: There were 106 casualties as a result of terrorist shooting attacks within own communities in 1990, 76 in 1991 and 133 in 1992.

Mr. Mates: The number of explosions which have occurred and the number of members of the security forces who have been killed or injured in each year since 1990 in Northern Ireland as a result of the security situation is as follows:

Mr. Mates: The information, which is available only for financial years, is as follows:

Year	Number of personnel	Salary/Wages cost £ million
31 March 1990	9,324	95·2
31 March 1991	9,082	97·6
31 March 1992	8,935	101·0

Information for the year ended 31 March 1993 is not yet available.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Capital Projects

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what arrangements he has made to monitor the extent to which the private sector is participating in the Government's programme of capital projects.

Mr. Portillo: Departments are being asked to notify the Treasury on a regular basis of cases being considered, or in hand, where the total expenditure involved by the public and/or private sector exceeds £5 million. In addition, the Treasury expects to obtain information about other projects through its normal contacts with Departments.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement as to the reasons for the increase in value added tax write-offs between 1990 and 1991.

Sir John Cope: The increase in value added tax write-offs between 1990 and 1991 was attributable primarily to an increase in the number of VAT registered traders being declared insolvent. The figures for 1991 also include some £80 million written off following a special review of long standing debts on the VAT ledger.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in what circumstances the 20 per cent. penalty on value added tax debt is incurred.

Sir John Cope: The maximum rate of surcharge affects only those who persistently fail to submit returns and pay tax on time. As a result of proposals announced in the recent Budget statement and subject to the passage of the Finance Bill, no surcharges of 20 per cent. will be issued for tax periods ending on or after 1 April 1993. Prior to 1 April 1993, a taxpayer would incur a 20 per cent. surcharge only if at least six returns or payments were submitted late.

Exchange Rates

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the current rate of currency exchange to the pound sterling for (a) Bermuda, (b) Gibraltar, (c) Hong Kong, (d) the Cayman Islands, (e) Montserrat, (f) St. Helena and (g) Turks and Caicos.

Mr. Nelson: At the close of the London Market on Friday 16 April the sterling exchange rates were:

Area	Currency
(a) Bermuda	Bermudian $ 1·52
(b) Gibraltar	Gib £ 1·00
(c) Hong Kong	HK $ 11·7898
(d) the Cayman Islands	CI $ 1·2551
(e) Montserrat	E Carr $ 4·1099
(f) St. Helena	£ 1·00
(g) Turks and Caicos	US $ 1·5250

The Gibraltar pound is fixed at parity with sterling. The currency in St. Helena is sterling, and that in Turks and Caicos is the US dollar.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Dioxins

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what maximum levels of concentrations of dioxins and furans within samples of soil and herbage are allowable before these trigger further surveys within an area into the concentrations of dioxins and furans in food and beverages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: No specific maximum concentrations of dioxins and furans in soil and herbage have been set as a trigger for a corresponding survey of locally produced foods. The Ministry's general approach is to consider the need for a survey of local foodstuffs only when the concentrations or patterns of dioxins and furans in soil or herbage in a specific area differ significantly from normal background levels.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the maximum tolerable concentrations of dioxins and furans which are allowable in differing types of milk, milk products, meat, meat products, fish, fats, oils, eggs, fruit, vegetables, cereals, cereal products, water and other beverages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The Ministry has established a maximum tolerable concentration—MTC—of dioxins and furans in whole milk of 0·7 ng TEQ/kg. Action is necessary to prevent direct consumption of milk if it contains dioxins and furans at concentrations above the MTC. No MTCs have been set for dioxins and furans in other foods listed.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of confirmed cases of BSE during the first three months of 1993 that were (a) under two years of age, (b) aged two to three years, (c) aged three to four years, (d) aged five to six years and (e) aged seven or more years.

Mr. Soames: The number of cases of BSE confirmed in Great Britain in cattle in which the age has so far been determined in the first three months of 1993 by age at onset of clinical signs of disease, is as follows:

Age Band (Years)	Number of cases
Under 2	0
2 and less than 3	5
3 and less than 4	189
4 and less than 5	1,803
5 and less than 6	3,266
6 and less than 7	1,206
7 and over	437

The majority of these cases will have been clinically affected and reported in 1992, and consequently the data cannot be used as an expression of incidence in the first quarter of 1993.

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give his Ministry's estimated annual figures for BSE in beef cattle for the next five years.

Mr. Soames: The number of cases of BSE occurring in beef cattle has always been a small part of the total. However, because it is still not possible to calculate accurately the extent to which the national herd was exposed to BSE agent through feed, accurate predictions of future incidence cannot be made.

Slaughterhouses

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he is able to report on the outcome of the independent review of slaughterhouses, and of the recent consultations on the Government's proposals to limit meat inspection charges; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 31 March 1993, c. 251-52]: I have now considered recommendations from my officials to refuse to grant licences to slaughterhouses in England. I am delighted that, following very thorough scrutiny of all the applications and an intensive programme of advice from my veterinary officers specialising in meat hygiene, we have been able to license 438 slaughterhouses, almost all the premises for which applications were made. I have refused only seven applications, all of them from premises which had failed on successive inspections to comply with the basic hygiene requirements of the regulations.

A small number of slaughterhouses which have not yet agreed a work plan to upgrade their premises have been given a time-limited licence to 31 May to enable outstanding problems to be resolved. No further licence will be issued unless by the end of that period the operator has agreed to a satisfactory work plan. The state veterinary service will continue to be flexible in finding practical solutions in individual premises. But we will not allow businesses which have invested in meeting the new structural standards to be disadvantaged by unfair competition from plants where structure-related hygiene problems persist.

Marine Pollution

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made in fulfilment of paragraphs B4.1 and B4.2 on radioactive substances in annex 3 of the action plan of the ministerial meeting of the Oslo and Paris Commissions on the Prevention of Marine Pollution, 21 and 22 September 1992.

Mr. Maclean: I have been asked to reply.

The question of criteria for assessing and/or reporting on best available techniques for the prevention and elimination of pollution by radioactive substances in the north-east Atlantic—paragraph B.4.1—is one which has been the subject of extended debate among the contracting parties of the Paris convention. Further discussion of the possibility of developing such criteria will no doubt continue. The adoption of further measures—paragraph B.4.2—will be considered as and when necessary. The United Kingdom is applying the best available techniques and sees no need for any measures to be adopted by the Paris commission.

DEFENCE

Departmental Property (Scotland)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the disposal of his Department's property in Scotland.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is the Government's policy that the defence estate should be no larger than necessary for defence purposes. In order to ensure the best return is achieved for the taxpayer it is our normal policy to offer surplus property for sale on the open market although special provisions apply to the sale of surplus housing.

Army Personnel Centre

15. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the relocation of the Army personnel centre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Work is still in hand to determine the location of the Army personnel centre, but I hope to be in a position to make an announcement soon.

16. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of the Royal Air Force assets which are deployed in the air defence of the United Kingdom; and what they were in (a) 1983 and (b) 1973.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Currently we have seven Tornado air defence variant squadrons, three Rapier squadrons and one Sentry airborne early warning squadron deployed in the air defence of the United Kingdom. In addition, 50 dual-role Hawk trainer aircraft are available as interceptor day fighters. This compares to a United Kingdom air defence force in 1983 of five Phantom and two Lightning squadrons, one Bloodhound and three Rapier squadrons and one Shackleton airborne early warning squadron. Seventy two dual-role Hawk trainer aircraft were then available as interceptor day fighters. In 1973 we had one Phantom and five Lightning squadrons, one Bloodhound squadron and one Shackleton AEW squadron.

Amphibious Warfare

17. Mr. Bates: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he intends to take to improve the United Kingdom amphibious warfare capability.

Mr. Aitken: We are committed to improving Britain's amphibious warfare capability. We recently announced that we are going ahead with a new helicopter carrier and we expect to place an order later this year. We are proceeding with our plans to upgrade our three older landing ships logistic, Sir Bedivere, Sir Percival and Sir Geraint. We are also continuing with project definition studies for replacements for our two assault ships.

Nuclear Tests

18. Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the discussion his Department's ministers and officials have had with the United States Government about nuclear tests.

Mr. Rifkind: We are in close contact with the United States Government on nuclear testing, at both ministerial and official level.

25. Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with his United States counterpart regarding nuclear testing.

Mr. Rifkind: I shall be discussing a wide range of issues with Mr. Aspin later this week.

Communications with Industry

19. Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps his Department is taking to improve its communications with industry.

Mr. Aitken: We have taken a number of initiatives to improve communications between my Department and industry. They include special conferences, meetings, briefings and industrial visits all with a new emphasis on providing the maximum information to industry, subject to the constraints of security and commercial confidentiality.

Infantry Strength

20. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the total infantry strength in 1994; and what the figure was in 1984.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The total trained strength of the infantry on 1 April 1994 is expected to be about 29,000. The total trained strength of the infantry on 1 April 1984 was 38,373.

Bosnia

21. Dr. Blackburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many tons of food and other humanitarian aid have been escorted by United Kingdom forces on behalf of the United Nations in Bosnia.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As at 18 April, 474 convoys escorted by British troops have carried 33,224 tonnes of humanitarian aid. A further 6,751 tonnes of aid have been flown into Sarajevo by 449 sorties of RAF Hercules.

Scott Inquiry

22. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many pages of evidence he has submitted to Lord Justice Scott's inquiry.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on 26 March 1993, Official Report, column 759.

European Fighter Aircraft

23. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next expects to meet the Spanish Defence Minister to discuss the EFA.

Mr. Aitken: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans at present to discuss Eurofighter 2000 with Senor Garcia Vargas. I met my Spanish opposite number, Senor Flos Bassols, along with the German and Italian State Secretaries on 5 April. We reviewed the progress that has been made in the task of reorientating the Eurofighter 2000 project in line with the agreement reached between my right hon. and learned Friend and the other three Ministers of Defence on 10 December 1992.

Nuclear Missile Capabilities

24. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those countries which possess a nuclear missile capable of striking Britain.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Within the Commonwealth of Independent States, Russia, Ukraine, Kazakhstan and Belarus have such missiles on their territories—these are centrally controlled. The only other country outside NATO with such a capacity is China.

Peace Dividend

26. Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make an assessment of the peace dividend.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Under the plans set out in the 1992 Autumn Statement, Cm 2096, the underlying defence budget will decline by around 12 per cent. in real terms between 1990-91 and 1995-96.

Market Testing

27. Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will report on progress with market testing in the armed forces.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 9 March 1993, Official Report, columns 547-48.

Aldermaston

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what inquiries were made about the health and safety record of companies bidding to take over the running of the Aldermaston nuclear weapons plant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: Comprehensive and detailed inquiries were made about all aspects of the companies which bid for the contract to operate the atomic weapons establishment. These included health and safety factors, which were particularly important in judging the competition.

British Army of the Rhine

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many troops are currently serving in Germany; at what cost to the Exchequer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The military manpower strength of the British Army of the Rhine is currently about 40,000 and the defence budget provision for BAOR is some £1,275 million for 1993-94.

Yugoslavia

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions to date British troops have come under fire in former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: To date, there have been about 70 incidents in which British troops or the convoys they were escorting have come under fire or sustained injury or damage as a result of military type activities by indigenous forces. Except in a small number of cases it is not possible to distinguish between incidents in which UNPROFOR vehicles and/or personnel have been deliberately aimed at and those where they have sustained collateral damage as a result of an attack on a nearby target.

Outrider Laser Weapon

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if it is his intention to procure for British forces the Outrider laser weapon system.

Mr. Aitken: The Outrider combat protection system is a United States research programme involving laser technology. The United Kingdom is also involved in research in this field, including in collaboration with the United States. No decisions have been taken on the procurement by the United Kingdom of systems which might result from such research.

Reserve Forces

Sir Keith Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the present and proposed tasks for (a) the Royal Naval Reserve, (b) the Royal Marines Reserve, (c) the Territorial Army and (d) the RAF Reserve; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Royal Naval Reserve exists to augment the Royal Navy with trained personnel in times of tension and general war. Its present major tasks are the defence of ports and anchorages; naval control of shipping; the provision of naval parties for ships taken up from trade; and the manning of ships of the 10th mine counter-measures squadron. The main purpose of the Royal Marines Reserve is to provide trained reinforcements to bring units of commando forces up to full war establishment on mobilisation. The Territorial Army provides formed units and sub-units, and some individuals, to complete the mobilised army order of battle. Some units would form part of the Allied Command Europe rapid reaction corps, and others contribute to the direct defence of the United Kingdom. The mobilisation tasks of the Royal Auxiliary Air Force and Royal Air Force Volunteer Reserve are to support the Royal Air Force with units, squadrons and flights in the maritime headquarters, ground defence, air movements, aeromedical evacuation, intelligence support, photographic interpretation, foreign language interrogation, and public relations roles, and with a small number of air electronics operators for Nimrod maritime patrol duties.

Work is continuing on the future role of the Reserves and proposals will be announced to the House later in the year.

Transport Aircraft

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received on the future development of large transport aircraft and the replacement of the Hercules C130; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: We have received a number of representations on this subject from hon. Members and industry. I can confirm that we intend to replace or modernise the Royal Air Force's C-130 fleet. We have no plans to participate in a new development programme, as we believe that the technology already exists to meet our requirements.

WALES

Dredging

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date the Llanelli Sand Dredging Company commenced dredging on the Helwick bank; and if he will indicate the tonnage of sand dredged on a weekly basis to date.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The dredging licence issued by the Crown Estate commenced on 1 February 1993. Monitoring of the licence is the responsibility of the Crown Estate, but I understand that so far only limited extraction has taken place.

Junior Doctors

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what guidelines he has issued and will issue to Welsh health authorities and trusts in relation to the work and rest period within the 83-hour maximum for junior hospital doctors;

(2) what provisions he will make regarding the work content and rest period content within the 83-hour maximum working time for junior hospital doctors.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The new limit on junior hospital doctors' hours came into effect and has been operated by all hospitals involved since 1 April 1993. Guidance agreed by all parties represented on the ministerial group on junior doctors hours on the new limits on total and continuous duty periods for junior doctors together with details of minimum periods of off duty had previously been distributed to all health authorities, NHS trusts and individual doctors. A copy is in the Library of the House.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what additional medical staff have been appointed by Welsh health authorities and trusts to facilitate adherence to the 83-hour maximum hours for junior hospital doctors.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Funds for a total of 78 posts have been provided to health authorities and trusts to facilitate the 83-hour target for junior hospital doctors. This is in addition to any staff that authorities and trusts may have appointed from their own resources.

Crime Prevention

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will incorporate the recommendations of the Morgan report relating to the local delivery of crime prevention in the functions of the new unitary local authorities in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to the hon. Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Ms Jackson) by the Minister of State, Home Department, on 16 December 1992, Official Report, column 220.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what response he has made to Friends of the Earth, Cymru, in regard to their report, "The Threats to the Welsh Coasts", published in March, a copy of which was sent to him.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I have not as yet received a copy of the report.

Timeshare Dwellings

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has had concerning people in Wales and the orders relating to council tax and timeshare dwellings—S.I., 1993, Nos. 526 and 542; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I have received 16 letters.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet representatives of those people in Wales who are concerned about the impact of orders relating to council tax and timeshare dwellings—S.I., 1993, Nos. 526 and 542.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Before the order for England and Wales was made full consultation was undertaken with representatives of the timeshare industry.

South Glamorgan Health Authority

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the South Glamorgan health authority concerning the cost to the authority's 1993-94 budget of further proposed moves towards trust status; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In the event of a formal invitation to prepare an application for NHS trust status, health authorities are aware that the Welsh Office is prepared to consider bids for a financial contribution towards the cost of the application process.

Orthopaedic Operations

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the total cost in Wales of (a) hip replacement and (b) knee replacement operations during the last 10 years for which records are available.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not available centrally.

Health Service Costs

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has agreed with the directors of finance of the Welsh health authorities for the rise in health prices for 1993-94.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The allocations to health authorities for 1993-94 includes provision for pay increases of up to 1·5 per cent. and forecast price inflation of 2·75 per cent. It is for directors of finance to calculate the effects of inflation locally taking into account the composition of pay and non-pay costs within their respective authorities' expenditure on services.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received in relation to the level of cost adjustments required to compensate health authorities for the Towards 2000 proposals.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The introduction of the Towards 2000 arrangements for the central planning and funding of pre-registration education and training have been preceded by extensive research and detailed discussion with all health authorities.

This research and subsequent discussions have addressed changes in the methodology of funding education and training together with other matters of detail. All adjustments of funds have been undertaken based on data provided by health authorities.

Departmental Reports

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the total costs of the 10 most expensive reports published by his Department during the financial years (a) 1991-92 and (b) 1992-93.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Comprehensive information about reports and similar documents produced by my Department could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Wind Power

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his calculation of the amount of electricity produced in Wales from wind power during each of the past five years and his projection of the output during the next five years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Since 1990, figures on the amount of electricity produced in Wales from wind power have been collected by the Welsh Office, but cannot be released for reasons of commercial confidentiality. Prior to 1990, there was no centrally recorded generation of electricity from wind power in Wales.

Planning Inspectorate

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what performance targets he has set for the Planning Inspectorate agency's work in Wales for the financial year 1993-94.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The key objectives for the agency in Wales in 1993-94 will be to continue to preserve the impartiality and quality of the inspectorate's work while seeking further to improve efficiency. The agency's key performance targets in Wales will be:

Timeliness

(b) To provide an inspector for local plan inquiries on request within 26 weeks of the end of the objection period.

Financial

(a) Unit costs of planning appeals decided by written representations not to exceed £690.

(b) Recover 90 per cent. of receipts due within eight weeks of invoice date.

Efficiency

Generate a 3 per cent. efficiency improvement in the use of running costs as compared with 1992-93.

Quality

High Court appeals and/or other justified complaints allowed against Inspectors' decisions not to exceed 1 per cent. of intake.

Volume

To determine 1,150 planning and enforcement appeals, subject to intake not declining.

Information and Guidance

To complete a second satisfaction survey by 31 December 1993.

These and other performance targets for the agency's work in Wales will be included in its business plan for 1993-94 which will be published shortly.

Separate timeliness and volume targets for the agency's work in England are being announced today by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing, Planning and Construction.

EDUCATION

Students

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment he has made of the numbers of undergraduate university students taking up employment during term time; and if he will increase student grants and end student loans.

Mr. Boswell: The student income and expenditure survey currently under way on behalf of the education Departments seeks information about the income of full-time and sandwich students, including term-time earnings. My right hon. Friend has no plans to change the current student support arrangements which work well and which have provided substantially increased resources to students.

Pupil Costs

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he expects to have available details of the unit cost per pupil in each local education authority for 1991-92 for (a) nursery, (b) primary and (c) secondary pupils.

Mr. Forth: Figures for expenditure on nursery and primary pupils are not collected separately. The table gives the unit cost for nursery and primary combined, and secondary pupils by local education authority for 1991-92 for those English LEAs that have returned details of their expenditure to the Department of the Environment. The figures are subject to final checking by the Department of the Environment and the Department for Education.

Notes to tables

1. n/a indicates that returns of expenditure have not yet been received from the local education authority, or that returns are subject to follow-up inquiry.
2. Figures are derived from local education authorities' returns of their net institutional expenditure to the Department of the Environment and of their pupil numbers to the Department for Education.
3. Net institutional expenditure covers the direct costs in schools of salaries and wages, premises and certain supplies and services. It does not include the costs of school meals, home to school transport, local education authority central administration, and financing costs of capital expenditure. Figures include unspent balances held by schools at the year end under local management of schools schemes.

Universities (Research)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will bring forward proposals to alter the criteria used in the universities research assessment exercise to ensure that those universities whose work is geared towards the needs of the industry and the economy are favoured; and if he will take steps to alter the membership of assessment panels to increase representation from industry.

Mr. Boswell: Arrangements for research assessment are a matter for the higher education funding councils. They will be consulting institutions and others on arrangements for future assessment exercises. Universities and colleges were free to submit evidence of the full range of their research in the research assessment exercise undertaken last year by the Universities Funding Council, including that related to the needs of industry.

Fuel (VAT)

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will uprate students' mandatory grants from April 1994 to take account of the imposition of value-added tax on fuel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Deptford (Ms Ruddock) on 24 March, Official Report, column 603.

PRIME MINISTER

Council of Ministers

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Prime Minister what were the details of the last formal vote that was taken in a meeting of a Council of Ministers in the European Community; and if he will list the date of each subsequent meeting at which no formal votes were taken.

The Prime Minister: The last formal vote in the Council of Ministers was that taken on the proposed arrangements for bananas in the single market during the Agriculture Council on 13 February. Details were given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, on 3 March at column 192. No formal votes were taken at the following Councils: ECOFIN on 15 February, Consumer Affairs on 2 March, Foreign Affairs on 8 and 9 March, ECOFIN on 15 March, Transport on 15 March, Agriculture on 16 and 17 March, Fisheries on 18 March, Environment on 22 and 23 March, Foreign Affairs on 5 April, Employment and Social Affairs on 6 April, and ECOFIN on 19 April.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list those Government Departments having offices at No. 49 Whitehall, London SW1.

The Prime Minister: There is no Government occupation of 49 Whitehall. I assume that the hon. Member refers to 49/53 Parliament street, SW1 which is occupied by the Office of Public Service and Science—major occupier—the Inland Revenue and the Department of Social Security.

Derbyshire

Q10. Mr. Hendry: To ask the Prime Minister if he plans to pay an official visit to Derbyshire.

The Prime Minister: I am making plans for a series of visits to all parts of the country and hope to include Derbyshire among them.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his answer of 8 March, Official Report, column 390, when the hon. Member for Don Valley can expect a letter from the chief executives of the English Tourist Board and the British Tourist Board in respect of their future.

Mr. Key: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Key: The available information is contained in the table.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Sex Trade, Thailand

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Thailand about the sex trade in women and children in that country; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: Her Majesty's ambassador in Bangkok has raised on several occasions with the Thai authorities our concern about the problem of the sex trade in Thailand, particularly the forced prostitution of children. We have been assured that the Thai Government are looking seriously at ways of tackling the problem. We will continue to encourage them to take effective measures.

Abu Dhabi

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he has taken since 1 March to secure the release of the British citizens detained in Abu Dhabi.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have made two further representations to the Abu Dhabi authorities about the British citizens detained in Abut Dhabi pending conclusions of the investigation into the affairs of BCCI. On 21 March, Her Majesty's ambassador in Abu Dhabi called on the United Arab Emirates' Minister of State for Foreign Affairs. On 6 April the Minister of State, my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Grantham (Mr. Hogg) called the UAE ambassador in London to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. We were told by the UAE ambassador on 16 April that the prosecution case should be ready by mid-July. We will continue to press the UAE authorities either to charge or release the men.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to visit Abu Dhabi.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has at present no plans to do so.

East Timor

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he had on the issue of East Timor at his recent meeting with the Foreign Minister of Indonesia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: In my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs' discussions with the Indonesian Foreign Minister in Jakarta earlier this month, he reiterated our concern about human rights in East Timor. He encouraged the Indonesians—as we similarly encourage the Portuguese—to continue to seek an acceptable solution to the East Timor issue through their dialogue under the auspices of the United Nations Secretary-General.

Inhumane Weapons

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans exist for the British Government to ratify the United Nations inhumane weapons convention 1981.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The situation remains as set out in my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's reply to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 9 March, Official Report, column 517.

Bosnia

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many meetings he has had with hon. Members about the situation in Bosnia; and how many requests have been made for such meetings.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Since the London conference in August 1992, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, has held 11 meetings involving hon. Members specifically to discuss the situation in the former Yugoslavia. The conflict in Bosnia was discussed at all of these meetings and many others. Records are not kept of the number of requests for meetings.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Manchester Prison

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many mobile and non-mobile staff at Manchester prison have thus far opted not to be redeployed within the Prison Service in the event of contracting out.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 19 April 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to write to you directly in reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many mobile and non-mobile staff at Manchester prison have thus far opted not to be redeployed within the Prison Service in the event of contracting out.

Staff have not yet been asked to state their preference for redeployment in the prison service or transfer to the contractor should a private operator win the market test of Her Majesty's Prison Manchester.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice on the application of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 has been given to companies tendering for Manchester prison; and what additional costs will be involved.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 19 April 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to write to you in response to your recent Parliamentary Question about the advice on the application of the Transfer of Undertakings Regulations 1981 given to companies tendering for Manchester Prison.

Tenderers have been informed that the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 (TUPE) will apply to the market testing of HM Prison Manchester. They have been informed that should a private operator win the contract the Prison Service intends to give staff at Manchester the option of redeployment and have been asked to provide information on the effect the application of TUPE will have on their bids.

Any effect on costs will not be known until the tendering exercise has concluded and the number of staff transferring, in the event of a private operator winning the contract, is known.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which staff and union agreements will now be taken into account by companies tendering for Manchester prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 19 April 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to write to you directly in reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking which staff and union agreements will now be taken into account by companies tendering for Manchester Prison.

Companies tendering for the operation contract for HM Prison Manchester have been supplied with information about numbers of staff in-post, pay and the main agreements with the trades unions so that they can adjust their bids in the light of the application of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981. Full details of the terms and conditions of staff and agreements with the trades unions will be made available to the preferred bidder before any contract is awarded.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance was offered by the prison department to staff preparing the in-house bid at Manchester prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 19 April 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to write to you directly in reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about guidance to the Manchester prison in-house bid team.

The Prison Service bid for the management of Manchester Prison has made appropriate use of an extensive range of central services—including guidance and advice from headquarters. It has received the same advice and guidance from the Unit responsible for the competitive tendering process as has been available to other tenderers.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the companies that have been invited to submit tenders for the running of Manchester prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated April 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to write to you in response to your Parliamentary Question about the companies that have been invited to tender for the running of Manchester Prison.

In October 1992 the following organisations were invited to tender for the operating contract at HMP Manchester:

— HM Prison Service
— Premier Prison Services Ltd.
— Securicor Custodial Services Ltd.
— Group 4 Remand Services Ltd.
— Securiguard Services Ltd.
— UK Detention Services Ltd.
— Contract Prisons plc
— Reliance Security Services Ltd.
— Sodexho

Contract Prisons plc and Reliance Security Services Ltd withdrew at an early stage.

Racial Attacks

Ms Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of reported or recorded racial attacks in the latest year available; what are the rates of prosecution and conviction; in what number of cases racial motivation has been raised by the Crown prosecution service during court proceedings; out of the total number of cases of assault involving racial motivation, how many defendants were juveniles; and how many defendants in cases recorded as involving racial motivation were granted bail, and of these, how many were defendants in cases of murder.

Mr. Jack: The only information held centrally relates to the number of reported racial incidents and I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms Ruddock) on 23 March at column 529.

Contracting Out

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether existing trade union negotiating rights and agreements will be recognised in the event of Manchester prison or any other Home Office function or division being contracted out.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 19 April 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to write to you in response to your Parliamentary Question about trade union recognition if the management of Manchester prison were to be contracted out.

When the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 (TUPE) apply to the contracting out of a Home Office activity existing trade union recognition and collective agreements will transfer to the new employer. As a general rule whether or not TUPE applies depends on the facts of each case. Should a private operator win the market test for HM prison Manchester, TUPE will apply.

Police Vehicles (Accidents)

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, how many accidents involving Metropolitan police vehicles there were during the last three years; and how many fatalities and injuries there were as a result.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is as follows:

Total incidents	5,621	5,958	6,263
(i)	1,638	1,954	1,962
(ii)	2,409	2,399	2,268
(iii)	1,178	1,331	1,097
(iv)	393	274	936
Number of fatalities	7	3	8
Number of injuries	1,171	1,222	1,307

Notes:

(i) Police driver assessed as blameworthy.
(ii) Police driver assessed as not blameworthy.
(iii) Assessed as "For Record Only"—eg: The police driver was not in the vehicle at the time of the incident.
(iv) Liability not yet determined or incidents not followed up.

Prisoner Escort Services

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will meet Group 4 Security concerning the prison escort services it is providing.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. The director general of the Prison Service met Group 4 Court Services Ltd. on 15 April and a further meeting is scheduled for a month's time.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had about the prison escort service in the east midlands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have been kept fully informed of the position by the director general of the Prison Service.

Police and Fire Services (Radio Communications)

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he received the report of the major review into radio communications in the police and fire services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Copies of this report have been placed in the Library, and will be made available to those with an interest, both in the emergency services and industry. I welcome this report. It sets out a strategy for the development of radio communications for the police and fire services which would enable these services to make the most efficient use of the radio spectrum and take advantage of the latest advances in technology and thus to ensure that their radio systems operate as effectively and efficiently as possible, and give good value for money.

There are, however, a number of issues which require further work before decisions can be taken on which new systems are best suited to emergency service use and how they might best be implemented. This work will constitute a development programme which would be undertaken by my Department under the direction of a steering group including representatives from the police and fire services.

Market Testing

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish (a) the Coopers and Lybrand Study of 1992 and (b) the privatisation return of the same year which identified Home Office businesses thought suitable for market testing.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No. Both documents were produced for internal management purposes and the former was classified "commercial-in-confidence".

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of Home Office jobs will be the subject of market testing exercises with a view to contracting out between September 1993 and March 1995.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: A provisional Home Office market testing programme for 1993-94 has been drawn up, but I have not yet settled the final programme which I will announce in due course.

Fire Services

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to merge and create larger fire services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Apart from any combinations of fire authorities which appear necessary as a consequence of the reviews of local government in England and Wales, my right hon. and learned Friend has no present plans to combine fire authorities. Our proposals to replace the present eight fire authorities in Wales with three combined fire authorities are set out in the White Paper on the future of local government in Wales.

Explosion (Liverpool)

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Merseyside police on their investigations into the explosion in Liverpool 8; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I am not aware of any such explosion.

Criminal Injuries

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average time taken by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board to reach a decision and advise a client's solicitor; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The Criminal Injuries Compensation Board does not maintain detailed statistics on the time taken for a first decision to be made on cases. However, it has been established that some 80 per cent. of cases reach that stage within one year of the application having been received. The number of cases in which a first offer is made and accepted stands at about 50 per cent.

Long Lartin Prison

Mr. Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many attempted escapes there have been at Long Lartin prison over the last five years; and what category of prisoners were involved.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director-general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Michael Spicer, dated 20 April 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to write to you in response to your Parliamentary Question asking for details of how many incidents of attempted escape there have been at HM Prison Long Lartin over the last five years and what categories of prisoner were involved.

I regret that this information was not recorded centrally until 1 January 1990, but from information derived from the number of incidents reported to the Incident Management Support Unit, a part of the Directorate of Custody, the information available is as follows:

Date	Number of prisoners involved	Category of prisoner
April 1990	9	Not recorded
September 1991	2	Both 'A'
October 1991	1	'B'

Election Deposits

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out by political party how many deposits were lost in the 1992 general election.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 19 April 1993]: The table gives details of lost deposits by party. A deposit is forfeited if a candidate fails to secure 5 per cent. of the total valid votes polled in the parliamentary constituency.

Political party	Number of lost deposits
Conservative	8
Labour	5
Liberal Democrat	11
Liberal	70
Plaid Cymru	25
Green	251
Natural Law	307
National Front	14
Sinn Fein	5
Others[1]	207

[1] Political parties with less than five lost deposits.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Falkland Islands

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total spending by the Government in providing aid, assistance and investment in the Falkland Islands in each of the past 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Gross public expenditure on aid to the Falkland Islands since 1983-84 is as follows. Information on expenditure in 1992-93 is not yet available.

1983-84	7,469
1984-85	8,394
1985-86	10,198
1986-87	11,021
1987-88	6,735
1988-89	3,389
1989-90	2,487
1990-91	1,430
1991-92	1,286
Total	52,409

Additional assistance was provided by the diplomatic wing as follows:

Assistance Under-Secretary's Programme Budget

	£ thousand
1989-90	2
1990-91	10
1991-92	11

Foreign and Commonwealth Office scholarship awards scheme

1990-91	10
1992-93	12

Further investment in the Falkland Islands has come from the presence of the British forces garrison since the end of the war in 1982. The construction of living accommodation and the new airfield at Mount Pleasant have resulted in some capital expenditure in the local economy. Similarly, the presence of the garrison has resulted in personal expenditure by service men in the local economy, and the new airfield has allowed the expansion of tourism. These benefits are difficult to quantify. Detailed information on Ministry of Defence expenditure on defence of the Falkland Islands can be found in the statements on the defence estimates for the years in question. Much of this expenditure would have been incurred in the United Kingdom.

EMPLOYMENT

Unpaid Women Workers

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make it her policy to collect data on the number of women working unpaid within family enterprises in the United Kingdom.

Mr. McLoughlin: Such data are already collected by the labour force survey, quarterly for Great Britain and annually for Northern Ireland.

TRANSPORT

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the environmental appraisal appendix to Union Railways' report on the channel tunnel rail link to be published.

Mr. Freeman: The appendix has now been published and copies are available in the Vote Office.

Jubilee Line

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 28 January, Official Report, column 800, what information he has received from London Transport and the administrators of Olympia and York in relation to (a) the private sector contribution, (b) European investment bank contribution and (c) United Kingdom public sector funding to the Jubilee line, set out in each of the first 10 years after any decision to proceed, and the residual figures for those three categories for the period thereafter.

Mr. Norris: The European investment bank has agreed to finance some £98 million—the first and largest instalment—of the private sector's contribution to the cost of the Jubilee Line extension. I hope that it will enable the private sector to conclude with London Transport and London Underground Ltd a satisfactory funding agreement covering the basis on which the contribution will be made. Government funding has been ready for some time, and once the private sector funding agreement is in place we will be able to authorise the start of construction.

Railway Rolling Stock

Sir Keith Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 15 March, Official Report, column 98, what proposals he has now received from British Rail about the rolling stock it wishes to order using the leasing facilities announced in the autumn statement.

Mr. Roger Freeman: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Warrington, North (Mr. Hoyle) on 19 April, at column 7.

M1/M62 Link

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to make an announcement on the results of the public consultation exercise concerning proposals for an M1/M62 motorway link; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The implications of the large number of responses to the public consultation are still being assessed. When this work is complete we shall make a decision on the way forward with the proposed new road. It will be a few more months before we are able to announce the outcome.

Tugboat Crews

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to strengthen controls on the qualifications, including local knowledge and experience, of tugboat crews.

Mr. Norris: None. Masters, mates and engineer officers of sea-going tugs are required to hold certificates of competency in accordance with the deck or marine engineer officer regulations. Tugs that do not proceed beyond the limits of smooth or partially-smooth waters are not required to carry any officers with formal qualifications. The accident record of these vessels does not give cause to impose further legislative requirements.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what reports he has received of accidents and dangers arising from the employment of labour inexperienced in the area in operating tugs from Newport docks in the past four weeks.

Mr. Norris: None that involved any lack of local knowledge.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will recommend that recordings of messages between tugs and coastguards be retained for at least six months during the period of industrial action at Newport docks.

Mr. Norris: It is HM coastguard's policy to retain archive tape recordings of rescue centre telephone and radio messages for 30 days. Should an incident occur that may require the submission of a tape or associated transcript to an appropriate inquiry, such recordings are kept for a period dictated by the particular case. I see no reason to change this policy during industrial action at Newport docks.

Roads and Bridges (Damage)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest assessment of the percentage of damage and wear to motorways, roads and bridges caused by (a) lorries, (b) other vehicles and (c) other reasons.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: For motorways and other roads, the vast majority of damage and wear is caused by vehicles over 1·5 tonnes unladen weight such as heavy goods vehicles, buses and coaches. Damage and wear from motor cars and from other causes including weather and spillages is negligible compared with that from commercial vehicles. Bridges deteriorate for a variety of reasons not necessarily related to traffic. No percentage breakdown is readily available.

Road Safety (Blind People)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from, and what discussions he had with, the Royal National Institute for the Blind in preparation of his new code of practice for signing and guarding road and pavement works.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: In July 1991, the Department consulted a large number of organisations, including the RNIB, on its proposal to issue a code of practice on safety measures under the New Roads and Street Works Act 1991. Comments were received from organisations representing visually impaired people, but not directly from the RNIB. In February 1992, the Department convened a meeting of manufacturers of pedestrian barrier systems and visually impaired pedestrians, at which a representative of the RNIB was present. The views expressed by the RNIB on this occasion were taken into account in drawing-up the code of practice, now published as "Safety at Street Works and Road Works".

Marine Archaeology

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Libary the letter of 31 March from the Minister for Aviation and Shipping to the hon. Member for Linlithgow regarding marine archaeology, ref. L/PSO/6890/93.

Mr. Norris: I have done so today.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his proposals for marine archaeology in relation to the current discussions on the special salvage convention 1990.

Mr. Norris: It is our intention to ratify the 1989 salvage convention and to consult relevant bodies prior to ratification. The convention allows any state to reserve the right not to apply the convention when the property involved is maritime cultural property of prehistoric, archaeological or historic interest. At the conference that adopted the convention, we supported the view that material of this nature should be excluded from the scope of the convention. That remains our view.

MV Braer

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received urging him to set up a formal investigation under merchant shipping legislation into the grounding of the MV Braer on Shetland in January.

Mr. Norris: In addition to the one from the hon. Member, representations have been received from the hon. Member for Stoke on Trent, North (Ms Walley) and jointly, from the Shetland Conservative Association, the Shetland Labour party, the Shetland Liberal Democrats, the Shetland Movement and the Shetland Scottish National party. My right hon. and noble Friend, the Minister for Aviation and Shipping, has also received several representations. In addition to those made to him directly by islanders in the course of his three visits to Shetland following the grounding of the Braer, he has also received a petition containing some 6,000 names which calls for a formal investigation.

Road Pricing

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent studies he has published on road pricing and the technological options for its implementation.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Department of Transport published "London Congestion Charging—A Review of Technology for Road Use Pricing in London" on 31 March. This was an independent report commissioned by the Department from the University of Newcastle.

Her Majesty's Coastguard Helicopters

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the occasions in the past three years on which (a) Ministers and (b) hon. Members have been conveyed by Her Majesty's coastguard helicopter, or by private helicopter companies on contract to Her Majesty's coastguard.

Mr. Norris: The information is as follows:
(a) Minister:

Occasion	Location of coastguard helicopter	Minister
10 June 1990	Lee on Solent	Cecil Parkinson
11 September 1991	Stornoway	Patrick McLoughlin
1 May 1992	Lee on Solent	Lord Caithness
6 January 1993	Sumburgh	Lord Caithness
8 January 1993	Sumburgh	Lord Caithness and John MacGregor
9 January 1993	Sumburgh	Ian Lang and Sir Hector Monro
30 March 1993	Sumburgh	Lord Caithness

(b) Hon. Members – Nil.

Leicester Eastern Bypass

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive the report by Travers Morgan into the proposal for an eastern bypass for Leicester.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: A technical appraisal report should be submitted early in 1994.

Minches (Tankers)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take action in addition to the voluntary control arrangements for tankers using the Minches pending the recommendations of the Donaldson inquiry.

Mr. Norris: Any further action to control the movement of tankers must have regard to the outcome of the maritime safety committee meeting at the International Maritime Organisation, Lord Donaldson's inquiry and international law on the right of innocent passage.

Feja Svea

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further tanker control mechanisms he has recommended to avoid pollution incidents following the grounding of the tanker Feja Svea off the Teesside coast.

Mr. Norris: The grounding of the Feja Svea in severe weather conditions is being investigated by the marine accident investigation branch. The report and any recommendations will be considered when they are available.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Export Controls

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what powers he has to ensure that equipment granted an export licence so that it may be displayed at an arms exhibition or in trials overseas is returned to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Needham: It is a condition of licences granted for temporary export that the exporter return the goods within a specified period. Under article 5(3) of the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1992, failure to comply with any condition attaching to a licence is an offence, punishable by fine or imprisonment or both. If necessary, my Export Control Organisation may ensure compliance by visits to exporters' premises to check documentation and/or physical presence of the goods.

Car Imports

Mr. Spellar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement regarding agreement with the Japanese vehicle manufacturers on car imports.

Mr. Sainsbury: In accordance with the EC/Japan cars agreement reached in July 1991, the EC Commission and MITI have agreed forecasts for Japanese car and light van exports to the Community for 1993. The figure agreed for the United Kingdom is in line with the levels agreed under the previous arrangements between the United Kingdom and Japanese manufacturers.

"The Prospects for Coal"

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the Government will publish a full outline of their renewable energy strategy document as stated in the White Paper, "The Prospects for Coal."

Mr. Eggar: The Government will publish a renewable energy strategy review document later this year, in the light of the report of the Renewable Energy Advisory Group and the coal review.

Astra plc

Mr. Rogers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether his inspectors have received all papers removed from Astra plc by the MoD police.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The inspectors have confirmed to me that they have had access to papers of the company held by the Ministry of Defence police.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the DTI inspectors began work on Astra plc; and what reasons account for the time taken by the inspectors to prepare their report.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The inspectors commenced work on appointment on 16 August 1990 and their report was signed on 7 April 1993. In particular, the inspectors considered substantial representations received during the course of fairness procedures.

British Coal Superannuation Scheme

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what considerations underlay his Department's decision to indemnify British Coal against any adverse legal consequences of its action in respect of the trustees of the British Coal staff superannuation scheme.

Mr. Eggar: No indemnity has been given or offered to British Coal for such legal costs.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent discussions he has had with the chairman of British Coal about the staff superannuation scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: None.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had recently with the chairman of British Coal about surpluses in the corporation's staff superannuation fund.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him today.

Defence Diversification

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much money has been provided by the EC Konver initiative for defence diversification in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 15 April 1993, Official Report, column 715.

Postal Services

Mr. Bowis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to publish his response to the European Green Paper on Post.

Mr. Leigh: Following wide-ranging consultations on the Green Paper, the Government are completing a detailed response which will shortly be put to the European Commission. I will at that time arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consideration he has given to maintaining current exemptions from the provisions of (a) road traffic, (b) customs and excise and (c) health and safety legislation for the Post Office after privatisation.

Mr. Leigh: No decision has been taken as to whether to privatise the Post Office. If such a decision where made, these matters would need to be considered in detail.

Regulations

Mr. Sproat: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place in the Library a list of the regulations of all Departments which impact on business.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: A consolidated list of all regulations and forms, grouped by Department, which Departments have identified as having an impact on business has today been placed in the Library of the House.

Post Office

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answers of 25 February, Official Report, columns 705-6, if he will express the values of the Post Office 1993-94 capital investment programme in September 1992 prices.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 15 April 1993]: The value of the Post Office's planned capital investment programme for 1993-94, expressed in 1992-93 prices, is £312·4 million.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will provide a breakdown of current Post Office employee numbers by British standard region and nation.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 15 April 1993]: A breakdown of Post Office employees by British standard region is not available since the Post Office businesses do not operate on such a regional basis. The breakdown by nation of the March 1993 employee figure was:

	Number
England	164,800
Scotland	14,300
Wales	7,800
Northern Ireland	3,600
Total	190,500

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total number of Post Office employees in each year since 1988.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 15 April 1993]: The total number of Post Office employees in each year since 1988, rounded to the nearest thousand and excluding Girobank, was:

At 31 March	Number
1989	201,000
1990	205,000
1991	206,000
1992	197,000

All part-time staff counted as half.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the total wage bill of the national health service in each of the last five years, and projected for the next two years, broken down into the principal groups of staff, including consultants, junior doctors, and nurses.

Dr. Mawhinney: The available information is shown in the table and applies to hospital and community health services staff only.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) national health service hospital beds and (b) national health service private hospital beds there were in each region in each year since 1979.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the tables. Over the same period, total hospital in-patient activity rose by 29 per cent.

Prescribing Errors

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) men, (b) women and (c) children are known (i) to have been injured and (ii) to have died as a result of pharmacists' errors in the provision of drugs or medicines, in each of the last five years for which records are available.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally. All the evidence suggests that professional standards in community pharmacies remain high and dispensing errors are kept to a minimum. The Royal Pharmaceutical Society employs a team of inspectors whose role is to ensure that those standards are maintained.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will now institute new requirements for pharmacists, whether by checking or otherwise, to minimise or to remove the risks of error in their provision of drugs or medicines in accordance with doctors' prescriptions;

(2) what assessment she has made of whether United Kingdom requirements for the checking of prescriptions issued by doctors before the drugs or medicines are given to patients are (a) adequate and satisfactory and (b) in accordance with EC requirements;

(3) if she will carry out an inquiry into the methods for checking of prescriptions by pharmacists, to remove or minimise the possibility or error in the provision of drugs or medicines in accordance with doctors' prescriptions.

Dr. Mawhinney: The code of ethics of the Royal Pharmaceutical Society includes guidance which is designed specifically to eliminate errors in the checking and dispensing of prescriptions. The society employs a team of inspectors whose role is to identify any lapses in standards of performance. These arrangements have helped to keep errors in the dispensing of prescriptions to a minimum and I see no reason to change them.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what records she keeps to ascertain how many pharmacists query doctors' prescriptions, whether because the same are illegible or otherwise.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally. Pharmacists are encouraged to maintain good communications with general practitioners to ensure that, where questions arise, patients get their correct medicine.

Health Boards

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provision there is for chairmen of health authorities or trusts to be paid a financial settlement on termination of office.

Dr. Mawhinney: Paragraph 9(3) of schedule 5 to the National Health Service Act 1977 provides for the Secretary of State to make a payment of compensation to chairmen of health authorities, with the approval of the Treasury, where it appears that there are special circumstances for that person to receive compensation.

There is no such legislative provision in respect of chairmen of NHS trusts.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to start reviewing the actual time contribution of chairmen and non-executive directors of national health service trusts and the basis on which their emoluments are assessed; if her review will be published; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 8 March at column 386.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will consider holding centrally information on the professional qualifications and previous employment of national health service trust and health authority chairmen.

Dr. Mawhinney: We do not specifically seek information on the professional qualifications of chairmen of health authorities and national health service trusts. However, these details and previous employment are usually included in a candidate's curriculum vitae. Those appointed are not required to notify any changes to such personal details after their appointment. I do not propose to alter these arrangements.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will consider holding centrally information on the number of chairmen and non-executive directors who declined to receive emoluments in respect of membership of (a) regional health authorities, (b) district health authorities, (c) family health service authorities and (d) hospital trusts.

Dr. Mawhinney: No.

Nurses

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will consider holding centrally information on (a) newly qualified nurses seeking employment and (b) nursing vacancies.

Mr. Sackville: We have no plans to do so. Managing the recruitment of qualified nurses is a matter for regional health authorities and local employers.

Drug and Alcohol Misuse

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the new projects which are being funded in 1993 from the specific grant for drug and alcohol misusers.

Dr. Mawhinney: The alcohol and drugs specific grant awards for 1993-94 were announced on 1 April. A copy of the press release is available in the Library and the 43 projects receiving an award for the first time have been identified. A further 65 projects which received funding in 1992-93 are also being supported.

NHS Trusts

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what opportunities there are for public scrutiny of self-governing trusts; and how many trusts hold open public meetings.

Dr. Mawhinney: National health service trusts are obliged by law to hold at least one public meeting each year at which they present their annual report and accounts. They are also required to publish their strategic direction and business plans. The local community health council has the right to visit NHS trust facilities and service contracts with health authorities are publicly available. Many trusts go beyond these requirements.

NHS Sight Tests

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will extend the exemption from payments for NHS sight tests to deaf and hard of hearing people.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have no plans to do so.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Social Fund

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many applicants to the social fund in Nottinghamshire have two or more social fund loans outstanding;

(2) what percentage of social fund loans are (a) being repaid at 5 per cent. of the income support applicable amount and (b) have been rescheduled to allow for a lower repayment rate in each of the West, East and North Nottinghamshire benefit areas during 1992-93.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to introduce a regulatory grant system to replace the social fund.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to do so.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to review access to social fund loans and grants for (a) applicants who cannot demonstrate an ability to repay loans and (b) applicants who have an income just above the income support threshold but who do not qualify for social fund help.

Mr. Scott: We have no such plans to change the basic principles of the current social fund scheme which has succeeded in helping very large numbers of needy people while helping to keep expenditure under control.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to increase the social fund budget in line with unemployment.

Mr. Scott: The social fund gross discretionary budget has risen by over 50 per cent. since April 1991. This substantial increase is substantially greater than the rise in unemployment.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average waiting time from first application for a social fund local review to decision by the social fund inspectorate for (a) budgeting loans, (b) crisis loans and (c) community care grants.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will implement the recommendation of the Social Security Advisory Committee in connection with crisis loans, in respect of the payment in advance rather than in arrears of income support.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to do so.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received from welfare rights advisers in Nottinghamshire on the working of the social fund; and what response he has made.

Mr. Scott: We receive many representations on the working of the social fund. We have received none recently from Nottinghamshire welfare rights advisers. I understand that there is regular liaison between the district offices and many of the advisers in the area.

Pensions

Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioner households were below the 1979 supplementary benefit level in 1979; and how many were below the 1979 level in the latest year for which the figure is available.

Mr. Burt: Official estimates of the number of pensioner households below the 1979 supplementary benefit levels are only available for 1979. They were published in the low income families—LIF—series. Following a technical review in 1988, LIF was superseded by the households below average income—HBAI—series which provides estimates of the pattern of disposable income across the United Kingdom population and analyses change over time. The latest edition of HBAI, published in 1992, shows a reduction in the number of pensioners in the bottom 10 per cent. of the income distribution from 31 per cent. in 1979 to 14 per cent. in 1988-89, when measured after housing costs—36 and 23 per cent. respectively before housing costs—after adjustment for inflation. Copies of both publications are in the Library.

Giro Cheques

Ms. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will introduce legislation to ensure that Giro cheques that are reported lost can be stopped.

Miss Widdecombe: Under current legislation, the Department has the power to stop Giro cheques at any time before they are cashed.

War Widows

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensions are currently being paid to war widows; and how many of those relate to service up to 30 September 1921.

Miss Widdecombe: On 31 March 1993, there were 50,886 war widows' pensions in payment; of these, 2,274 related to service between 4 August 1914 and 30 September 1921.

Pensioners Living Abroad

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost of extending full inflation-proofed state retirement pensions to those British pensioners aged 80 years and over living in countries with which there is no agreement allowing the payment of United Kingdom pension increases.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

European Court

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the names and addresses of all the newspapers to which the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State sent a copy of his letter dated 7 April to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow concerning, inter alia, the recent ruling of the European Court of Justice in case C328/91.

Mr. Scott: The letter was copied to the editors of the Evening Times, 195 Albion street, Glasgow G1 1QP, the Greenock Telegraph, 2 Crawfurd street, Greenock, and the West Highland Free Press, Industrial Estate, Broadford, Isle of Skye, IV49 9AP.

A copy of the letter was also sent to the news and current affairs editor at Scottish Television.

ENVIRONMENT

Greenhouse Gases

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent decisions have been taken at the European Environment Council in regard to the monitoring of the production and discharge of greenhouse gases in the European Community.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. and learned Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for Reading, West (Sir A. Durant) on 26 March 1993, Official Report columns 737-39.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what calculations he has made concerning the contributions that each of the various policy measures now in place could contribute to reducing carbon dioxide emissions between 1990 and 2000, as compared to the predictions made in Energy Paper 59.

Mr. Maclean: The annex to the climate change discussion document, placed in the Library of the House, described measures already in hand at the end of 1992 to reduce CO_2 emissions. The effect of most of these measures were included in the CO_2 projections set out in "Energy Paper 59"—EP 59.

The discussion document also identified a number of new measures, the effect of which would be to reduce emissions below the projected trend in EP 59, by some 3 to 5 MtC. The most important of these is the establishment of the Energy Saving Trust. I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) for a description of these measures and their estimated effect on emissions—Official Report, 22 March 1993, column 495.

In his March Budget statement, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced two measures which will play a significant part in the CO_2 programme. The introduction of VAT on domestic fuel and power, is estimated to lead savings in CO_2 emissions of some 1·5 MtC. The strategy of rising transport fuel duties, with a commitment to increase duties on average by at least 3 per cent. in real terms in future Budgets in addition to the 10 per cent. increases announced in the March Budget, is similarly expected to lead to savings in CO_2 emissions of some 1·5 MtC.

On the basis of EP 59 a projection for CO_2 emissions in the year 2000 of 170 MtC provides a reasonable baseline for our programme. This implies that savings of some 10 MtC will be needed to meet the convention commitment. Taking all the above developments together, some two thirds of Britain's programme is now in place.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidelines he has issued to Greater London council successor bodies on energy efficiency.

Mr. Maclean: No guidelines were issued to GLC successor bodies on energy efficiency. However, my Department actively promotes cost effective energy efficiency measures throughout the public sector, including organisations in London. For example, on 10 March, the Energy Efficiency Office organised a conference on energy efficiency in buildings at the Guildhall in the City of London to which the chief executives of all London boroughs were invited.

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's current strategy on promoting energy efficiency in both new and existing public and private buildings across London.

Mr. Maclean: My Department has a number of programmes in place to promote cost effective energy efficiency measures in the industrial, commercial, domestic and public sectors of the economy. These are not targeted at specific geographical locations; however, events are held in London to directly influence people in the London area, and the south-east regional Energy Efficiency Office promotes energy efficiency in the region. The Office is also involved with many local energy management groups which provide a forum for energy managers to identify their common problems and to find solutions.

Packaging Standards Council

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent communications he has received from, and what recent meetings he has had with, the Packaging Standards Council.

Mr. Maclean: My officials met representatives of the Packaging Standards Council on 15 April to discuss the council's first half-yearly report.

European Environment Ministers

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what contribution his Department plans to make to the second pan-European conference of Environment Ministers, to be held in Lucerne on 28 to 30 April; what information he has received on the agenda of the meeting to date; and what documentation relevant to the conference he has received from the organising secretariat.

Mr. Maclean: My Department has participated fully in the preparatory process for the "Environment for Europe" conference in Luzern from 28 to 30 April. We have also helped with a number of analytical studies for the environmental action programme for central and eastern Europe. I shall attend the conference on 28 and 29 April. My right hon. and learned Friend will attend from 29 to 30 April.

The main items on the agenda for discussion are the environmental action programme for central and eastern Europe; innovative instruments of environmental policy; and monitoring, compliance and enforcement in environmental policy.

The executive secretariat has circulated a text of an environmental action programme for central and eastern Europe.

Peat

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to introduce a levy on peat extraction to fund peat-free substitute products.

Mr. Maclean: None at present.

Development Control

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many copies of his Department's joint publication, "Development Control—A Charter Guide", have been published; at what cost; and to whom it has been distributed.

Mr. Baldry: Just over 55,000 of this charter guide have been published, at a total cost of £9,400. Copies have been sent to all planning authorities in England and Wales, to the local authority associations, and to the relevant professional bodies.

Standard Spending Assessment

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which components used in calculation of standard spending assessments are being revised in the current review being undertaken.

Mr. Robin Squire: The primary aim of the current review of standard spending assessments is to incorporate detailed information from the 1991 census into the underlying SSA formulae. We are taking this opportunity in consultation with local authority representatives to consider more widely the range of social factors used within SSAs and the weight placed upon them, the basis of the area cost adjustment, measures of population density and sparsity and the inclusion of day visitors. We are also prepared to consider representations about other aspects of SSAs.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on the method of calculation of standard spending assessments.

Mr. Robin Squire: We have so far received 33 letters from local authorities responding to our invitation to make representations on the review of standard spending assessments for 1994-95 and to provide evidence to support any proposed changes.

There will be regular meetings between my officials and representatives of the local authority associations until September to discuss the technical aspects of the review.

Council Tax

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what estimate he has made as to the amounts payable by his Department to each of the London boroughs for transitional relief in 1993-94;

(2) what estimate he has as to the total amount which will be payable to local authorities in 1993-94 in respect of the transitional relief scheme which accompanied the introduction of the council tax.

Mr. Robin Squire: Using information on household liability drawn from the family expenditure survey, we estimated that the cost of transitional relief nationally would be £340 million in 1993-94. We have made no estimates of the amount of transitional relief grant payable to individual authorities. Local authorities are currently submitting claims in respect of income forgone in respect of 1993-94. Ninety per cent. of each authority's claim will be paid in the current financial year, and the remainder in 1994-95.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by what amount, and in respect of which authorities, his estimate of the amount payable in transitional relief to London boroughs has varied as a result of the changes to the transitional relief scheme of which local authorities were notified by his Department in a letter dated 1 March.

Mr. Robin Squire: We have made no revised estimate of the cost of the scheme since issuing the changes to the grant conditions in the letter of 1 March. A revised estimate of the cost of the scheme will be available once initial claims have been received from all authorities.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what matters will be discussed at the meeting of Europe's Environment and Energy Ministers in Luxembourg on 23 April; which Minister will represent his Department; and what target will be put before the meeting as Britain's accepted commitment for carbon dioxide reduction.

Mr. Maclean: The joint Council meeting is expected to be devoted principally to discussion of the Community's strategy on climate change, although there may also be some discussion of controls on ozone-depleting substances. I shall be representing the United Kingdom, along with my hon. Friend the Minister for Energy. Under the framework convention on climate change, the United Kingdom will be committed to taking actions aimed at returning emissions of carbon dioxide to their 1990 levels by 2000.

Private Water Supplies

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance has been given on the treatment of private water supplies.

Mr. Maclean: A manual on the treatment of private water supplies is being published today by HMSO. I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library.

It has been produced by the Water Research Centre under a contract steered by the drinking water inspectorate and gives guidance on assessing the suitability of small scale treatment processes.

Housing Transfers

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will publish the names of the authorities to be included in the programme for housing transfers by councils in 1993-94.

Sir George Young: I am today announcing the names of the 13 local authorities that will be able to proceed with proposals to transfer their housing stock, on a voluntary basis subject to the approval of their tenants, to housing associations during 1993-94, in the first year of the new annual transfer programme.

I am delighted that 22 authorities responded to our invitation and am pleased that, because of lower than anticipated Exchequer costs of disposal, it has proved possible to programme 43,000 dwellings compared to the 25,000 dwellings I mentioned when I announced the programme arrangements last February.

The 13 authorities which have successfully gained a place on the 1993-94 disposals programme, together with the intended recipient housing associations are as follows:

- Castle Morpeth District Council (3,430 dwellings) to Cheviot Housing Association;
- Epsom and Ewell Borough Council (1,773 dwellings) to Rosebury Housing Association;
- Hambleton District Council (4,262 dwellings) to Hambleton Housing Association;
- Hart District Council (2,504 dwellings) to Hart Housing Association;
- Havant Borough Council (3,587 dwellings) to Hermitage Housing Association;
- Leominster District Council (1,874 dwellings) to Leomister Marches Housing Association;
- Maidstone Borough Council (4,040 dwellings) to Hazlitt Housing Associations and (4,009) dwellings to Lenway Housing Association;
- Mendip District Council (5,262 dwellings) to Mendip Housing Association;
- Penwith District Council (3,431 dwellings) to Penwith Housing Association;
- Rother District Council (3,479 dwellings) to Downland Housing Association;
- South Ribble District Council (3,600 dwellings) to Progress Housing Association;
- South Shropshire District Council (1,632 dwellings) to South Shropshire Housing Association; and
- Westminster (partial transfer of 649 dwellings) to the Peabody Trust.

The programme comprises some 43,000 dwellings in total, valued at more than £375 million.

Clause 121 of the Housing and Urban Development Bill, currently before Parliament, enables the Secretary of State to control housing stock disposals through such an annual programme. The Bill also contains transitional provisions which allow my right hon. and learned Friend to ensure that the necessary arrangements are in place for the introduction of the first year's programme, once the Bill has received Royal Assent.

Planning Inspectorate

Dr. Blackburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what performance targets he has set for the Planning Inspectorate agency for the financial year 1993-94.

Sir George Young: The key objectives for the agency in 1993-94 remain to preserve the impartiality and quality of the inspectorate's work while seeking further to improve efficiency. I have set the following further key targets for the agency's work in England:

Timeliness:
(a) 80 per cent. of planning appeals by written representations to be decided within 19 weeks;
(b) To provide an inspector for local plan inquiries on request within 26 weeks of the end of the objection period;

Financial:
(a) Unit costs of planning appeals decided by written representations not to exceed £690;
(b) Recover 90 per cent. of receipts due within eight weeks of invoice date;

Efficiency:
Generate a 3 per cent. efficiency improvement in running costs, as compared with 1992-93;

Quality:
High Court Appeals and/or other justified complaints allowed against inspector's decisions not to exceed 1 per cent. of intake;

Volume:
To determine 19,000 appeals, subject to intake not declining;

Information and Guidance:
To complete a second customer survey by 31 December 1993.

These and other performance targets for the agency will be included in its business plan for 1993-94 which will be published shortly.

Separate targets for the agency's work in Wales are being announced today by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Wales.

Regulations

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library a list of all the regulations for which his Department is currently responsible with a descriptive title for each individual regulation.

Mr. Redwood [pursuant to the reply, 12 February 1993, c. 831]: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs has today placed in the Library a consolidated list for all Departments of regulations which affect business. The Department's entry includes an explanation of the purpose and impact of each regulation.

Housing (Chelmsford)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the environment how many additional housing units have been made available in the Chelmsford parliamentary constituency by (a) Chelmsford borough council and (b) housing associations in the latest three available years.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 19 April 1993]: The information is not collected by parliamentary constituency. The figures for the Chelmsford local authority district are as follows.

SCOTLAND

Forestry

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will place in the Library a copy of the proceedings of the group charged with reviewing certain aspects of Government forestry policy whose existence was announced by him on 30 March;

(2) whether members of the public may, at their own cost, attend as observers meetings of the group charged with reviewing aspects of Government forestry policy announced by him on 30 March.

Sir Hector Monro: No. As is the usual practice, the policy advice offered by the forestry review group and the discussions and papers on which it is based will be confidential to Ministers.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what provisions exist for professional foresters, experts, other interested parties and members of the public to give evidence for the consideration of the group charged with reviewing aspects of Government forestry policy announced by him on 30 March.

Sir Hector Monro: The forestry review group, which held its first meeting on 31 March, will not be taking formal evidence but those bodies or members of the public who wish to make representations may write to the secretary of the group at the following address:

G S Pearson
Secretary, Forestry Review Group
Room 6/61
New St Andrew's House
EDINBURGH
EH1 3TG

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he estimates he will receive a report from the group charged with reviewing aspects of Government forestry policy announced by him on 30 March; and if he will publish that report.

Sir Hector Monro: The forestry review group held its first meeting on 31 March. My right hon. Friend and his fellow forestry Ministers expect to receive a report on a timetable consistent with the existing commitment to complete the review of the effectiveness of incentives for forestry investment by the end of this year.

There are no present plans to publish any of the advice offered by the group to Ministers.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the names of and posts held by the members of the group charged with reviewing aspects of Government forestry policy announced by him on 30 March.

Sir Hector Monro: The forestry review group, established by forestry Ministers, includes the following officials:

Mr. H. H. Mills, Secretary, The Scottish Office Environment Department (Chairman);
Mr. T. R. Cutler, Director General, Forestry Commission;
Mr. D. S. Grundy, Commissioner, Forestry Commission;
Mr. M. L. Williams, Head of Industry, Agriculture and Employment Group, HM Treasury;
Dr. S. Harding, Director of Policy and Resources, Forestry Commission;
Mr. T. J. Osmond, Head of Land Use and Tenure Division, Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food;
Mr. D. R. Thomas, Head of Land, Agricultural Subsidies and Grants Division, Welsh Office Agriculture Department;
Dr. R. Shaw, Head of Rural Development Division, Department of the Environment;
Mr. T. G. Birley, Head of Rural Affairs Division, The Scottish Office Environment Department;
Mr. D. Green, Prime Minister's Policy Unit;
Mr. G. S. Pearson, Rural Policy Coordinator, The Scottish Office Environment Department.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 30 March, Official Report, column 150, to the hon. Member for Staffordshire, Moorlands (Mr. Knox) on forestry (a) when the group of officials charged with examining forestry first met and on what subsequent dates meetings were held, (b) what dates have been arranged for future meetings, (c) how often it will meet and (d) what is the estimated cost of the meetings and how this is shared between different Government Departments.

Sir Hector Monro: The forestry review group met first on 31 March and will meet again on 5 May. No firm dates have been set for further meetings. The group will meet as often as necessary to fulfil its task, consistent with the commitment to complete the review of the effectiveness of incentives for forestry investment by the end of this year. No estimates of the cost of its meetings have been made and any such costs will be met, as appropriate, by the Departments represented on the group.

Hunting

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of whether all fox hunts that have licences or permits to hunt on Forestry Commission land are fully aware of the terms and conditions; and what arrangements are made to supply copies in writing.

Sir Hector Monro: All permits issued to fox hunts by the Forestry Commission clearly set out the terms and conditions on which they are granted. Copies are signed and retained by the commission and the master or secretary of each hunt. The fox hunts are therefore fully aware of the terms and conditions.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what monitoring and supervision procedures are in place to ensure that the terms and conditions of licences issued to hunt on Forestry Commission land are adhered to.

Sir Hector Monro: Forestry Commission staff carry out random checks on hunt days to ensure that the conditions of the licences are being followed.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the terms and conditions of licences or permits given to (a) the New Forest Buckhounds and (b) the Surrey Union hunt to hunt on Forestry Commission land; and to which areas of land the licences or permits apply.

Mr. Curry: I have been asked to reply.

Copies of the permits issued by the Forestry Commission to the New Forest Buckhounds and the Surrey Union hunt for the 1992-93 season have been placed in the Library of the House. These incorporate maps which show the areas of land covered by the permits.

Housing

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many properties have been transferred from public sector landlords to landlords approved under section 57(1) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1988;

(2) how many of the approvals in terms of section 57(1) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1988 which have been issued by Scottish Homes have been issued to housing associations registered with Scottish Homes;

(3) how many approvals in terms of section 57(1) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1988 have been issued by Scottish Homes.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 14 April 1993]: Thirteen approvals have been issued by Scottish Homes, including 11 to registered housing associations and co-operatives. Two thousand two hundred and twenty-five properties have been transferred from public sector landlords to approved landlords.

Home Improvement Grants

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applications for home improvement grants made before 1984 remain outstanding in (a) Edinburgh, (b) Glasgow, (c) Dundee and (d) Aberdeen; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 15 April 1993]: Information on the number of outstanding applications for home improvement grants received by local authorities is not held centrally.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he proposes to take to reduce the backlog of applications for home improvement grants in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 15 April 1993]: The Government make available substantial resources to local authorities to fund improvement grants and other investment in private housing. The non-HRA capital allocations for 1993-94 announced on 29 March total £120·5 million. These include £9·030 million which is earmarked to deal with the backlog of pre-1984 improvement and repairs grant applications in Edinburgh.

Language Teaching (Primary Schools)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to make any resources available to education authorities in Scotland to promote the teaching of modern languages in primary schools; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 19 April 1993]: Funds of £1·45 million have been allocated in this financial year, as the first stage of our major initiative to extend the teaching of modern languages into primary schools throughout Scotland; £450,000 of that allocation forms part of the specific grant available to education authorities for the in-service training of teachers in 1993-94. The funding provided will allow training packages to be prepared and substantial numbers of primary teachers to begin the courses that will enable them to teach modern languages in their schools.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Duty Solicitors (Northern Ireland)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what consideration he has given following the debate on the Police and Criminal Evidence (Northern Ireland) Order on 17 July 1989, Official Report, column 171, to introduce a statutory duty solicitor scheme in Northern Ireland.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Following the introduction of the Police and Criminal Evidence (Northern Ireland) Order, the Law Society of Northern Ireland established panels of solicitors in all police divisions throughout the Province, who were prepared to offer their services to persons detained or attending voluntarily at police stations.

In recognition of the PACE provisions and in order to ensure access to solicitors, regulations were made by the Lord Chancellor to coincide with the commencement of PACE, providing that persons detained or attending voluntarily at a police station should have legal advice and assistance without reference to their financial means and without contributions.

In co-operation with the police and the Law Society, a survey was carried out by the Northern Ireland court service over the second six months of 1991, in respect of the availability of legal representation for persons detained or attending at police stations.

The results of the research indicate that 34 per cent. of persons detained or attending police stations requested legal advice. Of these, 87 per cent. asked for a solicitor known to them; only 9 per cent.—or some 3 per cent. of the total—sought the services of a panel solicitor.

This survey produced no evidence to suggest that there is a significant unmet demand for access to solicitors under the PACE Order. There is no present indication that a statutory scheme is required.

High Court Judges

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proportion of the recently proposed 10 new High Court judges will be women.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Once the necessary parliamentary approval has been obtained, the Lord Chancellor will make his recommendations on individual appointments to the Queen. He will be recommending those who are best qualified to fill each post regardless of sex. Women candidates are among those under consideration.

TRANSPORT

Slough-Windsor Railway Line

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he is considering for privatisation of the Slough to Windsor railway branch line; and what steps he can take to protect the railway triangle at Slough for future rail use.

Mr. Freeman: It is our intention that all British Rail's passenger services will be franchised to private sector companies, including the Slough to Windsor branch line. We expect to make an announcement within the next few months about the form in which the remaining parts of the passenger rail network in Great Britain will be prepared for franchising. The area of land known as the Slough railway triangle is owned by British Rail. I understand that BR's plans for development on the triangle will not preclude possible future use if necessary in connection with a franchise of the Slough to Windsor line. A corridor of land will remain which would be sufficient for such purpose.

Consultants

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those consultants currently engaged by his Department on projects related to rail privatisation, the nature of the projects and the cost thereof.

Mr. Freeman: The consultants and the nature of their work are:

Linklaters and Paines—Legal issues
Samuel Montagu and Co—Merchant Banking
KPMG Peat Marwick—Accountancy
Richard Ellis—Property matters
Dewe Rogerson—Marketing
Coopers and Lybrand—Access charges
PJR—Management and organisation

Most of these consultants are retained on hourly rates which must remain confidential for commercial reasons. The total costs, including completed and expected projects, for the financial years 1991-92, 1992-93 and 1993-94 were given in my answer to the hon. Gentleman of Wednesday 24 February, Official Report, column 587. The final outturn for 1992-93 was £5·7 million.

Aston Down

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what work is currently being carried out by the Civil Aviation Authority at the former Royal Air Force station Aston Down; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The Civil Aviation Authority facilities at Aston Down are used for the storage of air traffic control equipment.

London Travelcard

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects his Department's working group on the future of the London travelcard to complete its deliberations; and if he will publish the results.

Mr. Norris: The working group is exploring with transport operators in both the public and the private sector how the London travelcard is most likely to adapt over the next few years to changes in the provision of public transport services, including the franchising of rail services and the privatisation and deregulation of bus services. The conclusions will no doubt be reflected in the announcements which will in due course be made, in the usual way, about changes in the operators' fares.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Charities

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) pursuant to his answer of 17 February, Official Report, column 210, what consideration was given to the Charities Tax Reform Group proposals regarding the introduction of a value added tax refund scheme;

(2) what plans the Government have to introduce a value added tax refund scheme for charities.

Sir John Cope: We considered this proposal very carefully. We concluded that it is better to foster a more favourable tax regime for charitable fund raising and charitable giving rather than introduce more reliefs based on charity spending. This policy provides the greatest benefit to charities perceived by givers to deserve most support rather than to those which happen to spend most on taxable goods and services in the United Kingdom. Total tax reliefs to charities now amount to almost £1 billion a year.

Oil Taxation (Budget Confidentiality)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what evidence he has of breaches of Budget confidentiality in relation to changes to the oil taxation regime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: None.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what additional provision for annual recurring public expenditure has been made as a result of rulings of the European Court of Justice in each year since the implementation of the Single European Act.

Sir John Cope: Information is not available on the financial consequences resulting from the rulings of the European Court of Justice or of any annual recurring public expenditure resulting from such rulings.

Postal Services (VAT)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue he estimates would be raised if (a) Parcelforce and (b) the Royal Mail were subject to value added tax.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 20 April 1993]: Businesses may reclaim VAT charged. On this basis, the estimated revenue effects are:

(a) negligible.
(b) £180 million.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consideration he has given to permitting the Post Office to reclaim value added tax, following the imposition of value added tax on intra-Community transport costs; and what is his estimate of the cost to the Post Office of value added tax on these costs.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 20 April 1993]: The Post Office is registered for VAT purposes and is able to reclaim VAT incurred on its purchases subject to the normal rules. On the ground of commercial confidentiality, it would be inappropriate for me to comment on the additional costs incurred by the Post Office as a result of the recent VAT changes in the treatment of intra-EC freight transport service.

Domestic Fuel (VAT)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much extra a family with two children on half average earnings will pay per week, when value added tax on domestic fuel is increased to 17·5 per cent.

Sir John Cope: A family with two children on three quarters average earnings would pay about £2·30 per week additional tax, assuming 1993-94 levels of real earnings. Estimates outside the range of 75 to 150 per cent. of average earnings are not available because of the large margins of error associated with small sample sizes and large variations in spending patterns.

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the increase in annual expenditure due to the introduction of 17·5 per cent. VAT on fuel assuming no behavioural changes for (a) someone on mean earnings, (b) someone on 75 per cent. of mean earnings, (c) someone on 50 per cent. of mean earnings, (d) someone on 150 per cent. of mean earnings, (e) each income decile of the population, (f) each income decile of households and (g) each income decile of families.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 1 April 1993]: The available information is given in the tables. The figures make no allowance for changes to expenditure patterns due to the introduction of VAT on domestic fuel and power.

Table 1: increase in expenditure on fuel and power by a single person due to imposition of VAT at 17·5 per cent. in 1993-94 prices

Percentage of average earnings	£ per week
100	1·90
150	2·30

1. The estimates are based on an equation relating expenditure on fuel and power to total spending derived from the 1991 Family Expenditure Survey and applied to 1993-94 price earnings levels and the 1993-94 income tax and NICs systems on the illustrative assumption that 10 per cent. of disposable income is saved.
2. Average earnings are taken to be average gross weekly earnings of all full time males on adult rates. This is assumed to be £359·80 per week in 1993-94, based on the illustrative earnings growth assumption of 4 per cent. in 1993-94.
3. Estimates are not available outside the earnings range shown due to the large margin of error associated with small sample sizes and large variations in spending patterns.

Table 2: increase in average household expenditure on fuel and power due to imposition of VAT at 17·5 per cent. in 1993-94 prices

Deciles of household income	£ per week
1st	2·00
2nd	1·95
3rd	2·10
4th	2·25
5th	2·35

Deciles of household income	£ per week
6th	2·40
7th	2·35
8th	2·40
9th	2·45

1. Figures are based on the last three Family Expenditure Surveys, 1989 to 1991, uprated to 1993-94 prices in line with the growth in consumers' expenditure.
2. Households have been allocated to deciles on the basis of their net income in the survey period adjusted to take account of differences in family composition.
3. Data on expenditure on fuel and power is only available at the level of the household.

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the total amount paid into the Treasury in VAT on domestic fuel in 1994-95 and 1995-96 by each income decile of (a) the population as a whole, (b) households and (c) families.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 1 April 1993]: Table 4.1 of the 1993-94 Financial Statement and Budget Report estimates the projected yield in 1994-95 and 1995-96 from applying VAT to domestic fuel and power as £950 million and £2,300 million respectively. These figures take into account changes in expenditure patterns. They are not available at a decile level.

VAT

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the total amount paid into the Treasury in VAT in 1987-88, 1992-93 1994-95 and 1995-96 (a) by the whole population, (b) by each income decile of the population, (c) by each income decile of households and (d) by each income decile of families.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 1 April 1993]: Total net receipts of VAT in 1987-88 were £24,066 million—HM Customs and Excise annual report 1991-92—and are estimated to be £37,400 million in 1992-93—table 1.2, Financial Statement and Budget Report 1993-94. Estimates of total VAT receipts for 1994-95 and 1995-96, consistent with published estimates for 1992-93, are not available. Figures giving a breakdown of total VAT payments in 1987 by decile group are published in the article on the effects of taxes and benefits on household incomes in the May 1990 edition of Economic Trends. Similar figures for 1992-93 and later years are not available.

Postal Services (VAT)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 29 October 1992, Official Report, c. 789 if he has yet held discussions with EC Finance Ministers or the Commission about the value added tax exemption for public postal services; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 20 April 1993]: There have been no such discussions and the reply of 29 October remains appropriate.

PRIME MINISTER

Iran and Iraq (Weapons)

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Prime Minister what was the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards export of lethal weapons for Iran and Iraq from 1979 to 1985; and if he will list each occasion on which changes in the policy were announced to the House.

The Prime Minister: Restrictions on the export of lethal weapons to Iran were introduced following the seizure of the American hostages in 1979. Restrictions were introduced on Iraq following the outbreak of the Iran/Iraq conflict in 1980. Guidelines applying to all deliveries of defence equipment to Iran and Iraq were introduced in December 1984. They were announced to the House on 29 October 1985 by my noble and learned Friend, Lord Howe of Aberavon, then Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs. The guidelines were as follows:

(i) we should maintain our consistent refusal to supply any lethal equipment to either side;
(ii) subject to that overriding consideration, we should attempt to fulfil existing contracts and obligations;
(iii) we should not, in future, approve orders for any defence equipment which, in our view, would significantly enhance the capability of either side to prolong or exacerbate the conflict;
(iv) in line with this policy, we should continue to scrutinise rigorously all applications for export licences for the supply of defence equipment to Iran and Iraq.

Liverpool

Mr. Parry: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to visit Liverpool in the near future.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him yesterday at column 178.

WALES

Community Care

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many copies of his Department's report, "Community Care—Information Pack for the Voluntary and Private Sectors", have been published; to which organisations it has been distributed; and at what cost.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Three thousand copies of the Welsh Office information pack for the voluntary and private sectors have been published. Packs have been distributed to social services departments, health authorities, family health services authorities, voluntary organisations, and residential and nursing homes in Wales. The total costs of producing and distributing the pack have not yet been finalised, but are expected to be around £22,000.

EDUCATION

Further Education (Special Needs)

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what arrangements there are to ensure that (i) support needs, (ii) transport needs and (iii) maintenance costs of students with disabilities and learning difficulties in further education will be met.

Mr. Boswell: The duties on the further education funding councils and local education authorities to secure further education provision for students with disabilities and learning difficulties require them to take acount of their additional learning support needs. LEAs' duties and powers concerning the provision of transport now include students at colleges in the new further education sector. Students attending courses of further education may apply to their LEA for a discretionary award in respect of their maintenance costs, and full-time and sandwich students aged 19 or over may also seek assistance from the further education access funds.

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many specialist independent colleges for students with disabilities and learning difficulties in England and Wales make further education provision.

Mr. Boswell: This information is not held centrally.

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much was spent in England on provision for students with disabilities and learning difficulties in maintained further education colleges in 1992-93; and how much he estimates will be spent by (i) the Further Education Funding Council for England, (ii) training and enterprise councils, (iii) local education authorities and (iv) social services departments on such provision in 1993-94.

Mr. Boswell: It is for the various agencies involved in securing provision for students with learning difficulties and disabilities to determine what resources they should allocate to further education colleges for this purpose. It is not possible to estimate expenditure on such provision, given the discretion generally available to colleges over the use of resources.

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much was spent on further provision for students with disabilities and learning difficulties from England in specialist independent colleges in 1993; and how much he estimates will be spent by (i) the Further Education Funding Council for England, (ii) training and enterprise councils, (iii) local education authorities and (iv) social services departments on such provision in 1993-94.

Mr. Boswell: It is for the various agencies involved in securing provision for students with learning difficulties and disabilities to determine what resources they should allocate to specialist independent colleges for this purpose. Information on their funding of these institutions is not available centrally.

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many further education students with disabilities and learning difficulties from England in 1992-93 were attending (i) maintained colleges and (ii) specialist independent colleges; and how many of each of these are expected in 1993-94 to be the responsibility of (a) the Further Education Funding Council and (b) local education authorities.

Mr. Boswell: In 1991-92, the latest year for which data are available, there were 42,000 further education students classified as having special educational needs attending maintained further education colleges. It is not possible to specify the proportion that will be the responsibility of the Further Education Funding Council or local education authorities from 1993-94.

Information about specialist independent colleges is not available centrally.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Traffic Density

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the traffic density revealed in the latest traffic surveys for roads which will benefit from (a) the Comber bypass, (b) the Balloo road stage 3 Bangor, (c) the A5 Burndennett, (d) the Ann street/Thomas street, Dungannon, (e) the A5 Magheramason, (f) the A5 Leckpatrick, (g) the Antrim/Ballymena stage 2; (h) the Greenmount link, Coleraine, (i) the Omagh throughpass stage 2, (j) the Belfast urban area plan roads (95/96) and (k) the Belfast urban area plan roads (96/97) road schemes.

Mr. Atkins: The information is as follows:

Unemployment Schemes

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the schemes operated by Government Departments in Northern Ireland which are designed to alleviate unemployment amongst school leavers; how many benefited from each scheme since its inception; and how many obtained permanent employment as a result.

Mr. Atkins: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its chief executive, Mr. J. S. Crozier. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from J. S. Crozier to Mr. Peter Robinson, dated 16 April 1993:

You asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he would list the schemes operated by government departments in Northern Ireland which are designed to alleviate unemployment amongst school leavers; how many benefited from each scheme since its inception; and how many obtained permanent employment as a result. The Secretary of State has passed your questions to me, as Chief Executive of the Training and Employment Agency, for reply.

I take it that your question refers to labour market measures. The relevant schemes are the Youth Training Programme (YTP), the Job Training Programme (JTP) and the Action for Community Employment Programme (ACE). Through YTP, all 16 and 17 year olds who leave school and are unable to find employment are guaranteed a structured programme of directed and workplace training, lasting up to 2 years, to enable them to compete for available jobs. I have detailed below the average number who each year have benefited from YTP since its inception in 1982 and the number whose destinations are known and who left to take up employment.

	Average occupancy	Leavers to employment
1982-83[1]	8,035	214
1983-84	7,242	3,168
1984-85	7,381	5,017
1985-86	8,079	5,500
1986-87	8,658	5,686
1987-88	8,776	5,787
1988-89	8,880	6,428
1989-90	9,818	6,767
1990-91	12,914	4,223
1991-92	15,480	5,754
1992-93	13,793	6,672
	109,056	55,216

[1] September—March.

Progression into full-time education is also considered a positive outcome for young people. In 1992-93 11% of trainees entered full-time education immediately after leaving YTP.

The Job Training Programme and Action for Community Employment also provide training and employment opportunities to school leavers who are 18 years of age or over and who have been unemployed for 6 months or more. Total participation in these programmes and employment placements were as follows:

Job Training Programme

Year	Average Occupancy	Leavers to Employment
1988-89	517	119
1989-90	1,743	600
1990-91	2,341	1,543
1991-92	2,912	1,813
1992-93	[1]3,930	[1]1,940

[1]These are estimated outturn figures based on February 1993 figures.

Action for Community Employment

1981-82	430	[1]—
1983-84	2,525	[1]—
1984-85	3,090	[1]—
1985-86	3,890	[1]—
1986-87	6,150	[1]—
1987-88	6,200	[1]—
1988-89	8,600	2,494
1989-90	10,000	3,420
1990-91	10,000	2,750
1991-92	10,000	2,800
1992-93	9,600	[2]—

[1]No figures prior to 1989.
[2]Not yet available.

Unfortunately our records do not differentiate between school leavers and other adult participants of these programmes and I am therefore unable to give you a breakdown of these figures.

I hope that this information is of help.

Water Executive

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consultations took place about the establishment of the Water Executive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The establishment of the Water Executive was simply an administrative change of title introduced following the Government's announcement of their intention to privatise water and sewerage services in Northern Ireland. Consultation was not therefore necessary.

Disability (Grants) Bill

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how he intends to fund the Independent Living (Extension) Fund, the Independent Living (1993) Fund and Motability before the enactment of the Disability (Grants) Bill.

Mr. Hanley: The Disability (Grants) Bill currently before Parliament will allow the Department of Health and Social Services in Northern Ireland to make grants to certain named organisations that help disabled people lead a more independent life in the community. These organisations are the Independent Living (Extension) Fund, the Independent Living (1993) Fund and Motability.

Parliamentary approval of expenditure on grant in aid to the Independent Living Funds will be sought in the 1993-94 main estimate for centrally administered social security (Department of Health and Social Services, vote 5).

Approval for expenditure on a grant to Motability will be sought in the 1993-94 main estimate for administration and miscellaneous services (Department of Health and Social Services, vote 3).

Pending approval, urgent expenditure estimated at £3,100,000 will be met by repayable advances from the Northern Ireland civil contingencies fund.

ENVIRONMENT

Waste Management

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on responses received on his Department's Waste Management Paper 26A, published in December 1992.

Mr. Maclean: This paper was issued in draft as part of a second package of consultation documents concerning the new waste management licensing system to be introduced by regulations under the Environmental Protection Act 1990. When published, it will give guidance to waste regulation authorities on how to determine whether to accept the surrender of a licence for a landfill site.

Responses to the draft focused on three main issues: the criteria against which the degree of completion of a site should be judged; the amount of analysis required to assess whether a site is complete and the consequent cost to industry; and problems related to liability after a completion certificate is issued by the authority. In the light of the responses, the Department is revising the paper prior to publication.

Hazardous Chemicals

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the conditions under which planning consent for the storage of hazardous chemicals under the Planning (Hazardous Substances) Act 1990 may become unnecessary if the responsible party managing the chemicals deems them to be a waste material.

Mr. Baldry: The controls in the Planning (Hazardous Substances) Act 1990 do not apply to the presence of substances which are controlled wastes, as defined in section 75(4) of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, or radioactive wastes, as defined in section 18(4) of the Radioactive Substances Act 1960. This is to avoid an unnecessary duplication of statutory control.

Environmental Sustainability

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies on environmental sustainability he has commissioned since the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development.

Mr. Maclean: Much of my Department's research programme relates to questions of environmental sustainability. In addition, we commissioned six background studies for a recent seminar on sustainable development at Green college, Oxford. I shall place copies of these studies, together with the record of the seminar, in the Library.

Sewer Pipes

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to make water companies liable for flood damage from sewer pipes.

Mr. Maclean: Following proposals made by the Director General of Water Services, the Water Supply and Sewerage Services (Customer Service Standards) (Amendment) Regulations 1993, SI.1993 No. 500, which came into effect on 1 April 1993, extended the scope of the water industry's guaranteed standards scheme to provide, among other measures, for the refund of annual sewerage charges, up to a maximum of £1,000, paid by customers who suffer foul flooding of their property. I welcome these improvements to the generally good services that the water companies provide for their customers.

Nuclear Power Industry

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what role his Department will be playing in the planned review of the nuclear power industry.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade will make an announcement about the planned review later in the year.

Housing Benefit

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the number of local authority tenants not in receipt of housing benefit for each local authority in Northamptonshire.

Mr. Baldry: My Department collects information on housing benefit caseload, and this gives an indication of the numbers of tenants not on housing benefit as summarised in the accompanying table. Any further queries concerning the data should be directed to the local authority concerned.

Average data for 1992-93

(i) Local authority	(ii) Estimate of tenants (dwellings minus vacancies)	(iii) Housing benefit caseload	(iv) Tenants not receiving housing benefit (ii)-(iii)
Corby	7,792	3,696	4,096
Daventry	4,085	2,200	1,885
East Northants	4,721	2,450	2,271
Kettering	4,940	3,250	1,690
Northampton	15,793	9,245	6,548
South Northants	3,802	2,100	1,702
Wellingborough	6,009	3,365	2,644
Northamptonshire	47,142	26,306	20,836

Energy Savings Trust

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what financial contribution has been agreed from his Department for the work of the Energy Savings Trust.

Mr. Maclean: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave the hon. Member on 19 February 1993, Official Report, column 382.

Nematodes

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of developments in biological control methods of nematodes to kill slugs.

Mr. Maclean: No formal assessment of the proposed use of indigenous nematodes to kill slugs has been made. Their use in biological control is not covered by the Control of Pesticides Regulations (1986). The release of non-indigenous species for this purpose would be controlled by the Wildlife and Countryside Act (1981).

My Department is considering with the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and other Departments whether there is a need for additional controls in this area.

Aggregates

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made as to the accuracy of past forecasts of aggregate demand.

Mr. Baldry: The long-term projections of demand are reviewed on a regular basis to ensure that they are as accurate as possible. The accuracy of the projection used as a basis for the present MPG6 was assessed in 1989.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration has been given to the use of economic instruments to raise the price of primary aggregates and lower the price of secondaries in order to provide substitution between them.

Mr. Baldry: The Government have no plans at present to use economic instruments either to raise the price of primary aggregates or lower the price of secondaries.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the cost to his Department of all aggregates forecasts commissioned from ECOTEC in the last four years.

Mr. Baldry: The work undertaken by ECOTEC over the four-year period cost £38,125. Additional work by Cambridge Econometrics on long-term economic projections cost £9,100.

Minerals Planning

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration was given to the inclusion of an element of demand management in the proposed revision of minerals planning; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The Government's views on demand management for aggregates were set out in the policy issues paper, which was issued with the consultation draft of mineral planning guidance note 6 in January.

Imports

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment for which imports to industry, other than aggregates, policy is based on detailed 20-year forecasts of supply and demand.

Mr. Baldry: Long-term projections of demand are used to inform the preparation of planning guidance issued by my Department for the minerals used in cement making and for silica sand.

Local Government Staff Commission

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he plans to establish the local government reorganisation staff commission; whom he intends to appoint as its members; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. and learned Friend has today laid an order, made under section 23 of the Local Government Act 1992, to set up a staff commission. The commission, to be known as the Local Government Staff Commission (England), will be established formally on 13 May 1993.

I am inviting the following people to serve as members of the Local Government Staff Commission (England):

Alan Atherton
Colin Jeynes
Judith Lovelace

I have asked Mr. Atherton to serve as chairman.

This is a strong, independent commission whose members have a range of experience in local government and staffing matters.

Environmental Health Officers

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number of vacancies for environmental health officer posts in each year from 1979 to the latest available date.

Mr. Robin Squire: This information is not held centrally.

Telecommunications Systems

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward proposals to ensure that applications for the siting of telecommunications systems on public and private property are determined by relevant local authority planning committees with a right to refuse permission.

Mr. Baldry: Like other types of development, the installation of telecommunications equipment is subject to planning control. The degree of control depends on the scale of the development. Accordingly, major telecommunications developments require a full planning application and are subject to normal planning control. Other telecommunications developments benefit from a general permission granted by the Secretary of State under the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1988, as amended, provided that they are carried out in accordance with conditions set out in that order. Local planning authorities may require a planning application to be made in respect of development that would otherwise be permitted, by serving a direction under article 4 of that order; they may be a resulting compensation liability.

We published policy guidance on telecommunications development and an explanation of the operation of permitted development rights for telecommunications equipment, in planning policy guidance note 8, "Telecommunications". That note was published to coincide with the implementation of improved controls from 4 January this year, and following public consultation. We have no plans for any further review.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Chile

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions since 1980 (a) Mr. Carlos Cardoen and (b) Mr. Mark Thatcher visited the British embassy in Chile; and what was the date and purpose of each of those visits.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Mr. Carlos Cardoen has made two visits, each at his request. In May 1990, he expressed concern over media reports linking him to the death of Mr. Jonathan Moyle. In July 1992, he discussed his commercial relationship with British companies.

We have no record of any visit by Mr. Mark Thatcher.

British Manufacturing and Research Company

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the relationship between his Department and BMARC in the period from 1980 to 1992.

Mr. Goodlad: The answer to this question could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Hong Kong

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to ensure that the Governor's recent proposals regarding the future composition of the Legislative Council of Hong Kong remain available for consideration by the Legislative Council without amendment.

Mr. Goodlad: The Governor's proposals for the 1994-95 electoral arrangement in Hong Kong, which the Government support, remain on the table.

It will in due course be up to the Hong Kong Legislative Council to pass the necessary legislation taking all relevant factors into account.

We have said that if we succeed in reaching an acceptable understanding with China we would recommend it to the Legislative Council.

An essential point for us, and for the Governor, is that these elections should be fair, open and acceptable to the people of Hong Kong.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council held on 5 April.

Mr. Hurd: My right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office represented the United Kingdom at the Foreign Affairs Council on 5 April.

The Council agreed a revised mandate for negotiations on a partnership and co-operation agreement with Russia. This holds out the prospect of a free trade area as a long-term objective. The Council adopted a negotiating mandate for association agreements with the Czech and Slovak Republics. The Council agreed to open accession negotiations with Norway. The negotiations were later launched in the margins of the Council. The Council also agreed a trade and co-operation agreement and financial protocol with Slovenia. Signature of both instruments, and of a transport agreement, took place in the margins.

Sir Leon Brittan reported to the Council on the Commission's recent meetings with United States trade representative Kantor. The Council expressed its full support for the Commission's efforts to find negotiated solutions to individual trade disputes with the United States.

Ministers discussed relations with the European Parliament. The presidency undertook to push for conclusion of an inter-institutional agreement on subsidiarity, and also to take forward work on the European ombudsman. Member states are now discussing the European Parliament's draft proposals on how the ombudsman might function when the treaty of Maastricht enters into force.

The presidency and Commission reported on the troika visit to the middle east.

Foreign Ministers discussed latest developments in the former Yugoslavia, following a briefing from Lord Owen. They underlined the importance of all three parties accepting, and implementing, the Vance-Owen plan. Its continued repudiation by the Bosnian Serbs would have the most severe consequences and lead to the total international isolation of Serbia-Montenegro. Ministers welcomed the United Nations Security Council's preparation of a draft resolution supporting the peace plan and strengthening the sanctions regime, and a decision by WEU Ministers earlier that day to tighten enforcement of the United Nations embargo on the Danube. The Community and its member states would continue to make sanctions more effective. Ministers issued a statement to this effect, which also emphasised their concern about the humanitarian situation in Bosnia and especially the importance of immediate free access for help to eastern Bosnia.

HOME DEPARTMENT

EC Directive

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to implement article 27 of the Council directive 92/50/EEC in relation to his Department.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This article, along with the rest of the Council directive 92/50/EEC, comes into force on 1 July this year and will be fully implemented by the Home Office.

Prostitution

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next expects to discuss with the chief constable of South Yorkshire the problems of prostitution in the county; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: I have no plans to do so at the moment. The investigation of offences is an operational matter for which the chief constable is responsible.

Prisoners (Temporary Leave)

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of prisoners given temporary leave from prison, by category of reason for that leave, in the last full year when records were maintained; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the prison service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Dr. Robert Spink, dated 20 April 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to write to you in response to your Parliamentary Question about the number of prisoners given temporary leave from prison establishments in England and Wales.

The information which you have requested is not collected on a regular basis centrally at present. A three month survey of the numbers of temporary releases, other than for home leave, was however undertaken between 1 April and 30 June 1991. During this period, the number of temporary releases was 8,276, broken down as shown in the table below. The number of releases is not the same as the number of prisoners given temporary release, since the same prisoner may have been given temporary release on a number of occasions during the period; for example, for outpatient treatment or for job interviews.

Prison Service (Contracting Out)

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated value of the contract of the warehousing and distribution function of the suppiy and transport division of the prison service.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the prison service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 20 April 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to write to you in response to your Parliamentary Question about the value of the contract for the warehousing and distribution and function of the Supply and Transport Division of the Prison Service.

As you will know, it was not possible to negotiate a satisfactory contract with Beck & Pollitzer, who were the contractors originally selected. A service level agreement was therefore awarded to the in-house operation, who were the next best bidders. The operating budget for the warehousing and distribution function is approximately £5·5 million over the 3-year life of the agreement.

Doncaster Prison

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if a prison service bid for Doncaster prison will be sought during the tendering exercise this spring.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No decision has yet been made.

Market Testing

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance will be given to Home Office businesses which will be involved in in-house bids during the market testing period from September 1993 to March 1995.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: A variety of guidance notes are available, together with access to professional specialisms within the Home Office to enable in-house teams to construct their bids. In addition, limited funds are available to enable Home Office businesses to seek targeted external consultancy assistance where internal resources are unavailable.

European Parliament

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the method he intends to adopt to define the boundaries of new seats for the European Parliament.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Yes, we intend to publish our proposals in due course.

Prisoner Escort Service

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners escaped from (a) prison and (b) court escort in each court region per month in 1990, 1991 and 1992 and each month in 1993 to date.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 19 April 1993]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the prison service, who has been asked to arrange a reply.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 20 April 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question asking how many prisoners escaped from (a) prison and (b) court escort in each court region per month in 1990, 1991, 1992 and each month in 1993.

The number of prisoners who escaped from prison month by month in each of 1990, 1991, 1992 and 1993 is as follows:

I regret that the full information that you require in part (b) of your question is not readily available and could only be gathered at disproportionate cost. The information is recorded against individual prisons rather than court catchment areas and many prisons serve a number of court catchment areas. Information is not available centrally on escapes from court escorts staffed by the police.

The total number of escapes from Prison Service escorts are as follows:

The figures for 1993 are up to and including 16 April 1993.

The above information is derived from incidents reported to the Incident Management Support Unit, a part of the Directorate of Custody.

I hope the above information is of use to you.

Mr. Don Treshman

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the arrest and detention without charge of Mr. Don Treshman.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 20 April 1993]: Mr. Treshman was served on 29 March with a notice of intention to deport him on the ground that his continued presence in the United Kingdom was not conducive to the public good. He was also detained by virtue of a detention order made under paragraph 2(2) of schedule 3 to the Immigration Act 1971. Mr. Treshman has appealed to the independent immigration appeal tribunal against the deportation decision, and applied to the tribunal for bail pending the hearing of the appeal. Bail was granted on 1 April subject to conditions.

Maastricht Treaty

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in implementing declaration 17 on the right to access to information attached to the Maastricht treaty.

Mr. Garel-Jones: I have been asked to reply.

We understand that the Commission intends to put a paper to the Copenhagen European Council in June containing recommendations to the Council on how to implement the Maastricht declaration on the right of access to information.

SCOTLAND

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the vessels holding pressure stock licences registered in each Scottish port of registration in each of the past four years, and at the latest convenient date in 1993.

Sir Hector Monro: Information on the licensing of individual vessels is commercial in confidence. The number of vessels holding pressure stock licences in the years 1989 to 1992, and in 1993, as at 16 April, by Scottish port of registration, is shown in the table.

Scottish Renewables Obligation

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will publish the Scottish renewables order; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: I hope to make an announcement about the question of a Scottish renewables obligation later in the year.

Used Tyres (Incineration)

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment his Department carries out on the environmental impact of the waste-to-energy process involving the incineration of used tyres.

Sir Hector Monro: In determining any application made to him for authorisation in respect of a process involving the incineration of tyres for the production of energy the chief inspector of Her Majesty's industrial pollution inspectorate would consider the environmental impact of the proposed process. Guidance on the criteria he would use in assessing an application is available in process guidance note IPR 1/6: "Combustion Processes —combustion of fuel manufactured from or comprised of tyres, tyre rubber or similar rubber waste in appliances with a net rated thermal input of 3 MW or more." The note is published by HMSO.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Travel Agents and Tour Operators

16. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what further steps he is taking to ensure that travel agents and tour operators have sufficient funds to cover their commitments in the event of their ceasing to trade.

27. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what further steps he is taking to ensure that travel agents and tour operators have sufficient funds to cover the risk of collapse.

Mr. Leigh: No further steps are being taken. The Package Travel, Package Holidays and Package Tours Regulations 1992 require that organisers and/or retailers should at all times be able to provide sufficient evidence of security for the refund of money paid over and for the repatriation of the consumer in the event of insolvency.

Post Office

17. Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the planned change in the Post Office contribution to Government finances between (a) 1990-91 to 1992-93 and (b) 1993-94 to 1995-96.

Mr. Heseltine: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Wallasey (Ms Eagle) earlier today.

18. Mr. Pickthall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on his plans to privatise the Post Office.

26. Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what his plans are for the future of the Post Office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: I refer the hon. Gentleman and my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall) earlier today.

Motor Car Industry

19. Mr. Hunter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a further statement on the state of the United Kingdom motor car industry.

Mr. Sainsbury: There has been a major expansion in the production capacity of the car industry in the United Kingdom. Exports are holding up well in a difficult European market.

Scott Inquiry

20. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his oral answer of 17 March, Official Report, column 271, how many additional pages of evidence his Department has submitted to Lord Justice Scott's inquiry in relation to exports to Iraq.

Mr. Heseltine: My Department is continuing to supply material in response to ongoing requests from Lord Justice Scott.

Post Offices (Pension Payments)

21. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the average turnover in rural post offices of retirement pension payments and benefits in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Heseltine: Rural offices differ significantly in size. The payment value of pension and benefit transactions is estimated as ranging between £30,000 and £500,000 per annum.

Red Tape

22. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on his Department's seven private sector task forces for cutting the burden of red tape on industry.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The seven private sector task forces are now at work. More than 50 business men and women have committed themselves to giving half a day a week to identifying priority areas for the repeal or reform of regulations and making recommendations on how to ensure a continuing business voice in Government decision-making. The task forces are taking evidence from interested bodies and will be reporting regularly to Ministers during their six months period of operation.

Small Businesses

23. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to monitor the effect of EC regulations on small and medium-sized businesses.

Mr. Heseltine: The United Kingdom Government will continue to fight in Brussels to avoid unnecessary EC regulations. During our presidency, we secured agreement to a resolution which places pressure on the Commission to take full account of the impact on businesses, and particularly small and medium sized businesses, when drafting its proposals. We will build upon this foundation and ensure that all proposals listed in the European Commission's legislative programme likely to have a substantial impact upon United Kingdom business, are subjected to rigorous examination.

The Government have established a scrutiny of the formulation, implementation and enforcement of EC law in the United Kingdom with the aim of minimising the burdens on United Kingdom businesses, including smaller businesses.

34. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent representations he has received about the need ot reduce the burden of regulations on small firms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My Department continues to receive, and act on, representations about regulatory burdens on small firms both from individual firms and representative bodies.

As part of the deregulation initiative to reduce the burden of regulations on business, my Department has recently set up seven task forces of business men, organised on a sectoral basis. The task forces, which include representatives from small firms, will advise Ministers on priorities for repeal and simplification with special reference to the needs of small businesses.

Post Offices (Closures)

24. Mr. Gerrard: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many post offices closed in 1992; and how many he expects to close in 1993.

Mr. Heseltine: I understand from the Post Office that in the years 1991-92 and 1992-93 there were net reductions, through closures, of 148 and 202 post offices respectively. The majority of closures occur when the subpostmaster or subpostmistress retires or resigns and Post Office Counters Ltd. is unable to find a suitable replacement.

Textile Exports

25. Mr. Madden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he is taking to promote the export of British textiles and clothing.

Mr. Needham: My Department, jointly with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, provides a wide range of export advice and support which is available to all sectors of United Kingdom industry. I am pleased to say that the clothing and textile industry are major users of our export services.

Manufactured Goods

28. Mr. John Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his latest estimate of the deficit in trade of manufactured goods for the last 12 months in respect of which figures are available.

Mr. Needham: The United Kingdom had a deficit in trade of manufactured goods of £7·6 billion in 1992.

With the completion of the single market at the end of 1992, routine border requirements and formalities were abolished for trade within the European Community and customs declarations—the source of trade statistics until December 1992—are no longer required. Therefore, at present, it is not possible to provide figures for trade with the European Community for January 1993 onwards.

Detailed statistics on United Kingdom trade in manufactures are regularly published in the "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics", which is available in the Library of the House.

Japanese Inward Investment

29. Ms Coffey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the factors influencing Japanese inward investment in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sainsbury: Many factors influence Japanese inward investment into the United Kingdom and worldwide. Britain's advantages include a strong industrial infrastructure, a large and sophisticated domestic market, a skilled and dedicated work force and a communication system geared for the modern trading world. These factors have contributed to Britain having almost 41 per cent. of the stock of Japanese foreign direct investment into Europe, according to Japanese Ministry of Finance figures.

Petroleum Revenue Tax

30. Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received on the impact of the new arrangements for petroleum revenue tax on the offshore industry in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: Tax issues are a matter for the Chancellor of the Exchequer, but, to date, I have received around 50 separate representations, both written and oral, from companies, organisations and individuals in the oil and gas industry, mainly about the impact of the changes on exploration and appraisal activity and the future development of the North sea.

Companies (Receivership)

31. Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many companies have been placed into receivership since 1989 in the north-west region.

39. Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many companies have been placed into receivership since 1989 in the west midlands region.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: There is no regional breakdown of official statistics on companies placed into receivership. The total number of companies placed into receivership, in England and Wales, during the three years from 1 April 1989 was 16,096.

Timeshare Contracts

32 Mr. Purchase: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to outlaw downpayments on the signing of timeshare contracts following the meeting of the EC Consumer Council on 2 March.

Mr. Leigh: I have no such plans. A ban on down payments in timeshare contracts before the end of any cooling-off period is, however, among the proposals being discussed in the context of the negotiation of the draft timeshare directive.

Balance of Trade

33. Mr. Grocott: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent assessment he has made of movements in the United Kingdom's balance of trade during the past 14 years.

Mr. Needham: The United Kingdom current account deficit as a percentage of GDP has averaged 0·6 per cent. over the last 14 years.

In 1992, the United Kingdom had a current account deficit of £11·8 billion, equivalent to 2·3 per cent. of GDP. The deficit has been falling since 1989, when it peaked at 4·9 per cent. of GDP.

The recent sterling depreciation gives United Kingdom producers a competitive edge against foreign producers in both export and domestic markets, provided they keep costs down and continue to raise their quality.

Coal Mine Licensing Regime

35. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he last met representatives of the coal industry to discuss the mine licensing regime currently operating.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend and I meet representatives of the coal industry as necessary to discuss a range of issues including coal mine licensing.

Development Areas

36. Mr. Canavan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many representations he has received to date about the redrawing of the development area map; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is my intention to issue a complete list of those individuals and organisations which have put forward views under the consultation arrangements, when the announcement of the new assisted areas map is made. The only exceptions will be any views put forward to us in confidence. All representations received which are not confidential are available for inspection at specified offices in my Department and the Scottish and Welsh Offices.

Biomass

37. Mr. Ancram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received about using biomass for energy generation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Numerous representations have been made about biomass as a renewable energy source both directly and through the consultation process for the Renewable Energy Advisory Group.

Aerospace Industry

38. Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he will now publish the report of his Department's aerospace committee on the future of the United Kingdom aerospace industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The report on the future of the United Kingdom aerospace industry prepared by DTI's aviation committee—the national strategic technology acquisition plan for aeronautics—contains commercially sensitive information and is, therefore, not available for publication.

Regional Assistance

Mr. William Powell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those companies in the Corby area which have qualified for regional selective assistance since 1 April 1991 and the value of regional selective assistance in the same period.

Mr. Sainsbury: In this period 1 April 1991 to 31 March 1993, the following companies in the Corby travel-to-work area accepted offers of regional selective assistance:

Eismann International Ltd.
Solway Foods Ltd.
TLC Distribution (Corby) Ltd.
Unit Two Glass Ltd.
Zeller Plastik UK Ltd.

The list is limited to those companies where details of their projects were publicised in the Employment Gazette.

The value of regional selective assistance accepted by companies in the Corby travel-to-work area since 1 April 1991 is as follows:

Value of RSA accepted

1991-92	803
1992-93	588

National Welsh Omnibus Services Ltd.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 8 March, Official Report, column 408, if he has received the additional information and clarification requested from the receivers of the national Welsh bus company; and what further responses or actions he proposes.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The information requested from the administration receivers of National Welsh Omnibus Services Limited was received on 19 April 1993 and is currently under consideration by the insolvency service.

Adtec (Wales) Ltd.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he has received the receiver's report on the insolvency of Adtec (Wales) Ltd.; and what further proposals for action he has.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The joint administrative receivers' return under rule 4 of the Insolvent Companies (Reports on Conduct of Directors) No. 2 Rules 1986, received on 7 January 1992, did not contain information making it expedient in the public interest to seek an order disqualifying the company's directors.

Shipbuilding Intervention Fund

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what changes he proposes to make to the rules governing the shipbuilding intervention fund.

Mr. Sainsbury: As a result of representations made by the Shipbuilders and Shiprepairers Association, I have examined the rules of the shipbuilding intervention fund. Since the inception of the scheme in 1977, shipbuilders have not been allowed to make a profit on such contracts, which had to be taken at break-even prices. However, where a shipbuilder could show that he had made a profit as a result of an improvement in efficiency, he was allowed to retain 50 per cent. of the profit, the remainder being clawed back by the Department. I have now decided that it is desirable that shipbuilders should benefit from any profit they make, and the rules of the scheme have been simplified to allow grant from the fund to be paid at the maximum permitted level for the size of ship, less 2 per cent. for shipbuilders relief. based on the actual final cost, provided that the sum does not exceed the amount specified in the offer letter. The change took effect on 1 April.

HEALTH

Breast Cancer

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will supply numbers and comparative rates for deaths and registrations of deaths by health authority districts in England and Wales on female breast cancer since the present district health authority areas were established.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table. Deaths included are those with an underlying cause of malignant neoplasm of the female breast—ICD 174 ninth revision—and district health authorities as constituted in 1991. The death rates are based on the DHA population estimates for 1986, except for the DHAs indicated which are based on 1991.

Alzheimer's Disease

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the effect on the care for sufferers of Alzheimer's disease of the new community care programme; and what representations she has received from the Alzheimer's Disease Society.

Mr. Yeo: The new community care arrangements give local authorities an opportunity to improve support for all groups, including people with Alzheimer's disease.

Prescriptions (Limited List)

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what mechanism the Government proposes for the expansion of the limited list; and what effects he expects this expansion to have on the health of patients.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Government have identified 10 additional categories of drugs for the selected list scheme. Decisions on which individual drugs may no longer be available on national health service prescription will be taken on the advice of the independent Advisory Committee on NHS Drugs. This will ensure that drugs to meet real clinical needs can be provided as economically as possible under the NHS. The health of patients will not be adversely affected.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate she has made on the effect of the United Kingdom pharmaceutical industry and the consequent effect on public expenditure of the limited list changes in respect of drugs active on the skin.

Dr. Mawhinney: The selected list scheme is intended to help control the rise in the national health service drugs bill. The decision to extend the scheme to include additional categories of drugs, including drugs acting on the skin, will strengthen this objective and help to limit the growth of public expenditure. We cannot at this stage assess the specific effect of the selected list scheme separately from the many other factors influencing the pharmaceutical industry in the United Kingdom and other markets.

Resource Management

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total cost to date of introducing resource management in England; and what is current annual cost benefit return on the investment.

Mr. Sackville: The total of funds made available in the years 1988-89 to 1993-94 to regional and special health authorities to introduce resource management will be £293·584 million.

The resource management programme aims to secure improvements in patient care through better management of resources at hospital level and is not concerned solely with financial benefits. Assessment of benefits is an integral part of resource management projects in individual hospitals, but there has been no comprehensive national survey of those assessments.

Fire Certificates

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will consider holding centrally information on national health service premises which fail to hold a valid fire certificate.

Mr. Sackville: Local fire authorities are responsible for enforcing fire precautions in those parts of national health service premises designated under the Fire Precautions Act 1971 which require a fire certificate. It would be inappropriate for this information to be collected by the Department.

For clinical areas and other parts of hospitals not requiring a fire certificate general managers and chief executives are required to confirm to the Department that their fire precaution arrangements have been agreed with the local fire authority.

Mental Illness

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects the review team on mental illness in the community to report; and whether community treatment orders on schizophrenic patients will be considered by the review team.

Mr. Yeo: The terms of our review of the case for new legal powers relating to the care of mentally ill people in the community were announced in the reply my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Canterbury (Mr. Brazier) on 13 January, col. 731. The team has been asked to complete its work by July. It will take account of the full range of views which have been submitted on this subject.

Drugs Bill

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total cost of the national health service drugs bill, expressed in 1992-93 prices, in each year since 1982.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is shown in the table. The total national health service drugs bill comprises expenditure by the family health services and the hospital and community health services.

Russia and Kazakhstan

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on her recent visit to Russia and Kazakhstan.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There is much appreciation of the British health care system in both Russia and Kazakhstan. Both countries wish to take advantage of British know how in health care.

In Moscow I had lengthy and very encouraging discussions with Colonel General Nechaev, the new Health Minister, who is head of both the military and civil health systems. We signed the new health co-operation agreement which provides a sound basis for future co-operation. There was also great interest in the operation of the national health service in the United Kingdom and the recent health reforms. I have therefore invited Colonel General Nechaev to London to see the operation of the NHS at first hand.

Colonel General Nechaev accompanied me to Ekaterinburg in the Urals region of Sverdlovsk. This is the main centre of activity of the British Health Care Consortium which is offering the local government a complete health care package through an ingenious system of counter trade. The NHS, through NHS Overseas Enterprises, is also providing expert planning advice and training in health care management.

I was delighted to be able to announce the extension of the know-how fund into health care management and Ekaterinburg as one of the areas to receive help. The activities I saw underline the importance of this development.

In Almaty I had a 40-minute meeting with President Nazerbayev of Kazakhstan. The President is keen to put more substance into his country's relations with Britain and to see British industry involved in the health care sector. I had meetings with Mr. Devyatko, the Health Minister and signed a joint declaration on relations in the health care field. The consortium also signed a collaborative agreement with the Ministry of Health and Amersham International signed a protocol on vaccine production.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what national health service trusts allow community health councils to attend board meetings as observers;

(2) which national health service trusts hold their regular board meetings in public.

Dr. Mawhinney: National health service trusts are obliged by law to hold at least one public meeting each year and local community health councils retain the right to visit trust facilities. We are aware that many trusts go beyond the legal requirements on public access. However, provided that the legal requirements are met, the frequency of public meetings and attendance at them is a matter for individual trusts and the detailed information requested is not available centrally.

Youth Treatment Service

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she will publish the report of the advisory group on the youth treatment service; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The first annual report is being published today, and copies have been placed in the Library. I welcome the publication of this report and I am grateful to the chairman, Mrs. Winifred Tumim, and her group for producing a constructive and helpful summary of the issues.

The report demonstrates that the youth treatment service has made good progress since the events which led to the setting up of the group. I am confident that under the new management arrangements for the service introduced last April, progress will continue. The Government are committed to ensuring that children and young people are treated properly wherever they live; and the recommendations in this report should help to ensure that the rights of young people in the youth treatment service continue to be adequately safeguarded. I have asked the chief executive of the service to implement the recommendations, and he has reflected this in his service annual plan for 1993-94, copies of which are also being placed in the Library.

Medical Work Force

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will accept the recommendations of the medical manpower standing advisory committee contained in its report, "Planning the Medical Workforce".

Dr. Mawhinney: I am pleased to be able to announce that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has accepted this Committee's recommendations and has written to Professor Campbell, the chairman of the Medical Manpower Standing Advisory Committee, today to thank him and the committee for their helpful report. The target intake for medical students in the United Kingdom will be increased to 4,470 from October 1994.

NHS Review

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 23 November 1992, Official Report, column 503, if she will now announce the results of the review of her Department's requirements for information from the NHS.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In order to reduce the burden of form-filling on the national health service, it has been decided that the Department will no longer require the NHS to provide the following returns:

KH18 Maternity services: GP maternity clinics (only relates to the few clinics held in hospitals).
KP20 Summary of ward stays (provides an inappropriate measure of activity)
KP72 Regular day and night admissions (this information is not used centrally)
FR19 Purchase of health care from non-NHS bodies and grants to voluntary bodies (this information is not used centrally)
FR26 Analysis of stocks (this information is not used centrally)
FR27 Fixed Assets (this information is not used centrally)
MAO1 Provider activity (this monthly information was collected on a trial basis and is no longer required for management purposes)

It has also been agreed that the detailed content of other returns should continue to be reviewed to ensure that the burden on the NHS is fully justified. Changes to take effect in April 1994 will be announced in due course.

Inheritances

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the Registrar General will release personal information from the returns from censuses less than 100 years old to assist individuals establish their entitlement to an inheritance.

Mr. Sackville: Census returns for England and Wales which are less than 100 years old are closed to public inspection. Those from the 1921 and more recent censuses are in the custody of the Registrar General and are subject to the Census (Confidentiality) Act 1991. The Registrar General does not release any personal information from the returns for those censuses as long as they are in his custody.

The returns from the 1901 and 1911 censuses have been deposited at the Public Records Office. There is statutory provision for a record held by the Public Records Office to be inspected if special authority is given.

Under concessions previously announced to the House, information on an individual's age and place of birth is made available from the 1901 census on application to the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys and for a charge corresponding to the cost of supplying it. This is conditional on the consent of the person concerned or of a direct descendant in the case of a deceased person, or next of kin if the person died childless. This facility is also available to a public administrator trustee seeking a beneficiary under a will.

The Registrar General has reviewed his practice. While he is not prepared to extend to the 1911 census returns the concession which applies to the 1901 census, he would be willing to consider particular applications for information to be extracted from those returns if it would enable the applicant to establish a legal entitlement such as an inheritance. Such authority would be given only where the information is not available from any other source and is clearly requisite for establishing the entitlement in question. The Registrar General would wish to be fully satisfied from documentary evidence as to the identity of the applicant. Where the desired information from the census form relates to a living person other than the applicant, that person's consent would be required before the information would be released.

The same conditions would apply to applications for information from the 1901 census which went beyond the existing concession relating to age and birthplace.

The applicant would be required to meet the cost of making the search and, where the search is successful, of supplying the information.

These arrangements do not constitute any diminution of the confidentiality accorded to the records in conformity with the assurances printed on the forms of return for the censuses in question.

Knee Replacement Implants

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State of Health what plans she has to issue advice to patients regarding the most reliable knee replacement implants.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 16 April at column 745.

Care and Adoption, Barnsley

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children were (a) taken into care by Barnsley metropolitan borough council, (b) placed for adoption by that authority against the wishes of the parents and (c) placed for adoption during each year since 1990, and in the current year to date.

Mr. Yeo: In the year ending 31 March 1991, 197 children came into the care of Barnsley metropolitan borough council. A child may have more than one legal status in a year; in terms of the last legal status recorded, 132 children were received into care under section 2 of the Child Care Act 1980, 52 were committed to care by court order, and 13 remanded or detained in care.

In respect of children placed for adoption, the information available centrally is the number of children who were in care and had been placed for adoption. At 31 March 1991, two children had been placed for adoption. Information is not available centrally on whether the children were placed for adoption against the wishes of the parents.

Information about the children looked after by Barnsley metropolitan borough council for the period ending 31 March 1992 is still being processed; I will write to the hon. Member giving details when they are available. Information relating to the year ended 31 March 1993 is not due to be returned to the Department until 30 June 1993.

At-risk Register, Barnsley

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children are currently on the at-risk register in Barnsley metropolitan borough.

Mr. Yeo: There were 373 children on the child protection register in Barnsley metropolitan borough at 31 March 1992. Information relating to 31 March 1993 is not due to be returned to the Department until 31 May 1993.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was (a) the number and (b) percentage of persons out of work and eligible to claim benefit in the Cunninghame, North constituency in each month since June 1987.

Mr. McLoughlin: Unemployment rates are not available for parlimentary constituencies. The smallest geographical areas for which unemployment rates are officially compiled are travel-to-work areas.

Information on the number of persons in each month claiming unemployment related benefits in the Cunninghame, North constituency can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

These figures are on the unadjusted basis and therefore subject to seasonal influences and changes in the coverage of the count over the period.

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have been unemployed for more than one year.

Mr. McLoughlin: In January 1993, the latest date for which figures are available, 1,030,283 claimants in the United Kingdom had been unemployed for over one year. These figures are on the unadjusted basis.

Age Discrimination

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will bring forward proposals to prevent discrimination on grounds of age for those aged between 40 and 64 years.

Mr. McLoughlin: Employers who discriminate on the grounds of age miss out on the skills, experience and commitment which older people can bring to a job. Age, however, can affect different people's abilities to do different jobs in different ways. Legislation which attempted to provide for this would be difficult to draft and impossible to enforce. I am confident that the recently formed advisory group on older workers, which I chair, will help greatly in persuading employers who discriminate that it is in their own best interests to treat everyone on their merits, regardless of their age.

Construction Industry

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the change in the number of jobs in the construction industry over the last five-year period.

Mr. McLoughlin: Between December 1987 and December 1992 the number of employees in the construction industry in the United Kingdom fell by 149,000.

High Technology Training

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the average weekly unit price of HTNT; and what was the average length of a course.

Mr. McLoughlin: The planned average weekly unit cost of high technology national training payments to trainees, was £75 per trainee in 1992-93. The average length of a course in the same year was 49 weeks.

Careers Guidance (Diploma)

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many people are presently training for part I of the diploma for careers guidance, both full and part-time;

(2) how many people currently on the part I diploma for careers guidance courses are (a) seconded by employers, (b) in receipt of local education authority awards, (c) in receipt of a local government management board training award and (d) self-financing.

Mr. McLoughlin: The diploma in careers guidance is the responsibility of the local government management board, the advisory body to local authorities, although my Department makes a contribution towards funding some students. I have obtained from it the following information:

	Numbers
Number of students, including part-time, currently taking part I of Diploma in Careers Guidance	508
Of these, the number
(a) seconded by employers (LEAs)[1]	138
(b) in receipt of LEA grant	158
(c) in receipt of LGMB Training Award	84
(d) self-financing	128

[1] Funding source may be LEA alone, or combined with LGMB or Employment Department.

These figures apply to the United Kingdom and are for courses commenced in September/October 1992 and in January/February 1993. They are based on the registration forms completed by students.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Lord President of the Council when he expects to reply to the third report of the Select Committee on Procedure, Session 1990-91, on Parliamentary Questions (HC 178).

Mr. Newton: I hope to submit the Government's response in the near future.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Food Research Institutes

Dr. Strang: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the institutes of food research which have closed since 1979, with their respective dates of closure.

Mr. Jackson: The Bristol laboratory of the Institute of Food Research, formerly the AFRC Meat Research Institute, closed on 31 December 1990.

Institute of Food Research

Dr. Strang: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list total Government expenditure on the Institute of Food Research for each year from 1978-79 to 1992-93 in (a) cash and (b) constant prices; and if he will set out projected Government expenditure on the Institute of Food Research for each year from 1993-94 to 1996-97 in (i) cash and (ii) constant prices.

Mr. Robert Jackson: The Institute of Food Research did not come into being until the financial year 1985-86. Food research was previously carried out in the Meat Research Institute, Food Research Institute and the National Institute for Research in Dairying which were amalgamated into the Institute of Food Research. Recurrent science budget expenditure in the Institute of Food Research and its pre-cursors from 1978-79 is given in the table:

Year	Cash prices £ million	Constant prices £ million
1978-79	5·4	15·0
1980-81	8·0	16·1

DEFENCE

Nuclear Supplies

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will separately identify the nuclear supplies and services referred to at paragraph 2 of the introduction in his Department's Supply Estimates 1993-94, class I, vote 3; and if he will make a statement as to why those items have not been identified in the estimate.

Mr. Aitken: It would not be in the national interest to reveal the cost of the defence nuclear programme. For this reason such costs are not separately identified in supply estimates.

Military Equipment

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the liability in relation to the supply of military equipment to an overseas Government referred to in paragraph 11(c) of the introduction to his Department's Supply Estimates 1993-94, class I, vote 3; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Member to the Command Paper (Cmnd 9746) of 26 February 1986, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Ozone-depleting Substances

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Woodspring (Dr. Fox) of 15 March, Official Report, column 73, if he will list the critical applications of ozone-depleting substances considered essential to his Department's work; what are the annual amounts of each substance involved in each application; and to what extent there are any losses to the atmosphere of process emissions.

Mr. Aitken: My Department considers only those applications of ozone-depleting substances that meet the following UNEP halon technical options committee essential use criteria as critical:

"A critical need must exist to minimise damage due to fire, explosions or extinguishing agent application, which would otherwise result in serious impairment of an essential service to society, or pose an unacceptable threat to life, the environment, or national security; and

All other appropriate fire protection measures have been taken".

These applications can be found in, inter alia, installed equipments on ships, aircraft and in armoured vehicles. This list is under continuous review. Some 252 tonnes of halons and 425 tonnes of CFCs will be banked to support these critical applications. To preserve these and stocks within systems stringent measures are in place to reduce emissions to the atmosphere.

D-Notice Committee

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current membership of the D-Notice Committee; and what salary is paid to each member.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The membership of the Defence, Press and Broadcasting Committee is as follows:

Chairman
Sir Christopher France, KCB, Permanent Under-Secretary of State, Ministry of Defence

Vice-Chairman
A. C. D. Stuart, Esq, former Editor-in-Chief, Thomson Regional Newspapers[1]

Government representatives
Sir Clive Whitmore, KCB, CVO, Permanent Under-Secretary of State, Home Office

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how often the D-Notice Committee met in the past 12 months.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Defence, Press and Broadcasting Committee met twice in 1992; on 29 April and 20 October. I understand that its next meeting is scheduled for 6 May.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the review of the D-Notice Committee procedures to be completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I understand that the Defence, Press and Broadcasting Committee will be considering the progress of the D-notice review when it meets in early May.

Civil Service Relocation

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if it remains his policy to transfer 700 defence-related jobs from the south of England to Glasgow as part of the Government's civil service dispersal programme.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No final decision has yet been taken on the location of the Army personnel centre, but Glasgow remains a candidate to receive this work. If Glasgow is chosen, jobs will be relocated from the midlands and the north as well as the south of England.

Guards Officers

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to exclude consideration of the socio-economic group of the parents of guardsmen when appointments to officer rank are made.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Commissions throughout the Army are awarded on the basis of merit. Selection for individual regiments is based upon the discretion of the regimental colonel, who may well take account of how well an individual applicant is likely to fit into the ethos of a particular regiment. In the case of the Guards, some 18 per cent. of the total number of officers have been commissioned from the ranks.

RAF Hangar (Cosford)

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much it will cost to convert the RAF hangar at Cosford which at present contains the indoor running track for use as an aircraft technical training facility.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Conversion work is to be put out to contract and disclosure of estimated costs would comprise the tender process. A financial appraisal indicated however that the cost of converting the hangar would be less than half the cost of providing new functional accommodation.

Telecommunications Aerials

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what discussions he has had with telecommunications companies concerning the erection of telecommunication aerials for use by organisations other than his Department;

(2) how many telecommunication aerials have been constructed on his Department's property for use by private companies in the last five years; and where they are sited.

Mr. Aitken: It is our policy to encourage the use of our facilities by private companies where this is compatible with defence needs. Details of these numerous arrangements are not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Airbus

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he proposes to purchase a version of the European airbus for the role of multi-role tanker transport; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will investigate the prospects of adapting the airbus series of jets for military roles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The RAF will need to replace its VC-10 tanker transport fleet early next century. A number of commercial passenger aircraft types, including Airbus variants, could be suitable for conversion. It will be some time, however, before the draft requirement is ready to be discussed with industry, and Airbus will then be fully considered.

Service Children's Schools

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the key targets for 1993-94 which have been set for the Service Children's Schools (North West Europe) Defence Agency.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The chief executive of Service Children's Schools (North West Europe)—SCS (NWE)—has been set the following key targets for 1993-94, the agency's third year of operation:

1. To continue the implementation, so far as is feasible in the British Forces Germany (BFG) situation, of the Education Reform Act to the statutory timetable laid down for England and Wales by:
   - (a) Introducing the National Curriculum to SCS (NWE) by subject and Key Stage.
   - (b) Introducing pupil assessment by subject and Key Stage.
   - (c) Implementing Teacher Appraisal.
2. To continue to implement the SCS (NWE) "Schools for the Future" Development Plan in line with BFG drawdown and to action the following:
   - (a) Issue guidance regarding the admission of Non-Entitled pupils and adult learners.
   - (b) Make provision for support services to schools during, and beyond the drawdown process.
   - (c) Implement child protection procedures in all remaining schools.
   - (d) Work towards improved provision for pre-school children with special needs.
   - (e) Implement the Service Children's Education Authority policy and procedures for health and safety in schools.
3. To produce Management and School Development Plans reflecting the introduction of Local Management of Schools into SCS (NWE) to enable "taut" full cost financial and management planning within an agreed budget and to achieve annual efficiency savings of at least 3 per cent.

4. To maintain the overall pass rate at GCSE (grades A-G) and to improve the proportion of students gaining 'A' level grades A-E by 2 percentage points, and to achieve an 80 per cent. pass rate in BTEC First Diploma courses, whilst extending the range of vocational courses available to post 16 students as alternatives to 'A' level courses, to attract a larger proportion of 16-19 and mature students.

5. To ensure that all teachers meet at least 2 of the 4 qualification match criteria for their post with at least 95 per cent. meeting 3 and 90 per cent. all 4. The criteria are:

(a) A recognised professional qualification.
(b) Relevant specialist subject to phase qualifications.
(c) Broad and relevant previous teaching experience.
(d) Relevant post-entry in-service training.

6. To continue to implement Parents Charter requirements for:

(a) An annual progress report to parents.
(b) A transfer report on change of school.
(c) Keeping parents informed of relevant education developments.
(d) Standard Attainment Test and external examination results reported to parents annually.
(e) The introduction of parental choice of schools in SCS(NWE).

7. To submit an application for a Charter Mark by 30 June 1993.

8. To develop the role of Schools Advisory Committees including training members in order to match their function with Governing Bodies of schools in United Kingdom.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Means-tested Benefits

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 19 March Official Report, column 420, showing the numbers and percentages of families receiving one or more means-tested benefit in 1979 and 1991, what are the comparable figures for single people without children; and whether the percentages in his reply refer to supplementary benefit/income support caseload or the specified demogrant groups.

Mr. Burt: Information in percentage terms cannot be given as there are no figures available for the total population of single people without children. Other information is in the table.

Lost Giro Cheques

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average time for the replacement of a lost Giro cheque.

Miss Widdecombe: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Housing Benefit

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the most recently available figure for the housing benefit live load in each district of Northamptonshire; and what are the costs involved.

Mr. Burt: The latest information available is as follows:

Child Support Act 1991

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what arrangements he has made to exempt women resident in refuges for battered women from having to go through the Child Support Act 1991 procedures in order to give evidence that harm and undue distress may result from the fathers of their children being pursued for maintenance.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Bow and Poplar (Ms Gordon) on 11 March at column 697.

Bronchitis and Emphysema

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to implement the Industrial Advisory Council recommendations with respect to chronic bronchitis and emphysema.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. Pickles) on 29 March 1993 at column 77.

Ms Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when forms for claims for occupational health benefits for miners in respect of emphysema and bronchitis will be available in all DSS and Benefits Agency offices.

Mr. Scott: The administration of social security is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Ms Helen Jackson, dated 20 April 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking when forms for claims for occupational health benefits for miners in respect of emphysema and bronchitis will be available in all DHSS and benefits agency offices.

As announced in the House of Commons on 29 March, the Government propose to extend the list of prescribed diseases to include chronic bronchitis and emphysema in relation to underground coal miners. This change is intended to take effect from 13 September 1993. Claims can be made for disablement under the industrial injuries scheme at any time, but claims for these diseases made before the change takes effect will not be successful. District Offices will have full instructions and claim forms will be available in good time for the start date.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also appear in the Library.

SERPS

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his latest estimate of the long-term savings which will arise as the result of the phasing out of the best 20 years rule for calculating SERPS pensions.

Miss Widdecombe: The best available estimate[1] is as follows:

	Savings £ billion[2]

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 1 April, Official Report, column 419, if he will give a breakdown of the number of claimants and dependants on income support by standard region; and if he will give equivalent figures for the past three years.

Mr. Burt: Such information as is available is in the tables. The latest year for which regional figures are available is 1991.

Investigations

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 16 March, Official Report, column 214, how many of the cases of social security investigations in (a) England and (b) Yorkshire and Humberside resulted in identified overpayments (i) inclusive of prosecutions for fraud and (ii) exclusive of prosecutions for fraud.

Miss Widdecombe: The administration of benefit fraud is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated 20 April 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking, pursuant to his answer of 16 March 1993, Official Report, column 214, how many of the cases of social security investigations in (a) England and (b) Yorkshire and Humberside resulted in identified overpayments (i) inclusive of prosecutions for fraud and (ii) exclusive of prosecutions for fraud.

The last full year for which figures are available is the year ending 31 March 1992. The figures for the year ending 31 March 1993 will shortly be available and I will be pleased to write to you again with these details when I receive them. However, during the year ending 31 March 1992 a total of 40,674 investigations in England resulted in an identified overpayment. Included in this figure are 5,685 identified overpayments in the Yorkshire and Humberside area. I am unable to provide details of those overpayment cases that resulted in prosecution for fraud as our statistics are not kept in this way.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Social Fund

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what percentage of budgeting loans in Nottinghamshire in 1992-93 were refused because the applicant has not received income support for 26 weeks;

(2) how many applications for (a) a local social fund review and (b) a social fund inspectorate review were made from claimants in North, West and East Nottinghamshire Benefit Agency offices during 1992-93; and what percentage in each case were successful;

(3) how many applicants (a) for a community care grant were offered a budgeting loan instead and (b) for a social fund loan were offered a community care grant, in Nottinghamshire in 1992-93;

(4) how many crisis loans and budgeting loans were allocated in Nottinghamshire during 1992-93.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Alan Simpson, dated 20 April 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to four of your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the operation of the Social Fund in Nottinghamshire. All figures provided are for the period 1 April 1992 to 28 February 1993, the latest period for which information is available.

The percentages of budgeting loan applications refused because the applicant had not been in receipt of Income Support for 26 weeks are 10·6% for East Nottinghamshire District, 13·9% for North Nottinghamshire District and 9·4% for West Nottinghamshire District.

Figures relating to the number of applications for review and the percentage which resulted in an increased award are in Annex A.

I am unable to answer the Question as to how many applicants for a community care grant were offered a budgeting loan as such information is not kept as a matter of course. However, I can advise you that 834 loan applications in the three Nottinghamshire Districts have resulted in the award of a grant.

The total number of crisis loans awarded by the three Nottinghamshire Districts is 9,606 and that for budgeting loans is 12,737.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this letter will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Notes:

Stage 1. Review conducted in the office, usually by the officer who made the original decision.

Stage 2. Reviews which do not result wholly in the applicant's favour are referred automatically to a higher grade officer, who determines the application afresh.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) which benefit agencies were able to pay crisis loans only towards the end of the 1992-93 financial year;

(2) what is the administrative cost of (a) a crisis loan allocation and (b) a budgeting loan allocation;

(3) what were the (a) percentage success rates for crisis loans and (b) average community care grants paid for (i) East Nottinghamshire benefit agency and (ii) North Nottinghamshire benefit agency for 1991-92; and what analysis has been made of the reasons underlying the differences;

(4) what were the percentage success rates for (a) community care grants and (b) budgeting loans for 1991-92 for Nottinghamshire benefit agency offices; and what are the reasons for the difference.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Alan Simpson, dated 20 April 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to four of your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the Social Fund.

Two of your questions relate to the national situation. Firstly, the latest available costings for processing applications for crisis loans and budgeting loans are £18·95 and £12·06 respectively. Applications include awards and refusals. You will appreciate that the costs of administering a discretionary scheme are high, as each application involves a comprehensive consideration of the applicant's individual circumstances.

Secondly, you also asked about Benefits Agency Districts which were only paying crisis loans towards the end of the 1992-93 financial year. I can confirm that all Districts continued throughout the year to meet all the highest priority applications generally.

Your other questions asked for information specific to Districts in Nottinghamshire. The average community care grant paid by East Nottinghamshire District in 1991-92 was £284. The figure for North Nottinghamshire was £255.

Details of percentage success rates for crisis loans, community care grants and budgeting loans for the Nottinghamshire Districts during the 1991-92 financial year are given in Annex A.

It is inevitable that there will be some variation in numbers and amounts of awards in a discretionary scheme like the Social Fund. I should emphasise that the vast majority of community care grant refusals are because the application fails to meet the basic criteria for an award.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this letter will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Benefits

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures showing the numbers and percentages of families receiving one or more means-tested benefit in 1979 and the latest available year.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is in the table.

000s Per cent.

Benefit	1979 Recipients (Note 2)	1991 Recipients
Supplementary Benefit (SB)/ Income Support (IS) (including those with Housing Benefit (HB) and Community Charge Benefit (CCB)) (Note 8)	488 (6·8)	1,320 (19·5)
Family Income Supplement (FIS)/ Family Credit (FC) (including those with HB and CCB)	79 (1·1)	347 (5·1)
Housing Benefit (HB) (including those with CCB but not those with IS or FC)	—	143 (2·1)
Community Charge Benefit (not including those with IS or FC or HB)	—	99 (1·5)
All families in receipt of one or more means-tested benefits	567 (7·9)	1,909 (28·2)

Notes:
1. For the purposes of the answer, families are defined as couples or single people with children.
2. These figures represent the number in each category as a percentage of the total number of families in the population which is based on the number of Child Benefit recipients.
3. There are no overlaps between the categories of recipients shown, except for a small element of double counting between the SB/IS and FIS/FC figures.
4. There are no comparable statistics available for schemes similar to Housing Benefit and Community Charge Benefit that existed in 1979.
5. The FIS figures for 1979 are for November of that year. All other figures are for May of the respective years.
6. All figures have been rounded to the nearest thousand.
7. In 1988 Income Support replaced Supplementary Benefit and Family Credit replaced Family Income Supplement.
8. This category includes a small number of people who were in remunerative work and receiving FC prior to being awarded IS. Family Credit will remain in payment until the end of the current award, but will not be renewed if IS remains in payment.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

State Veterinary Service

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many state veterinary service staff there were on 1 January as (a) qualified veterinarians, (b) technical and scientific staff, (c) administrative staff and (d) others.

Mr. Gummer: The following details relate to the veterinary field and veterinary investigation services and the veterinary staff of the Tolworth policy group.

The administrative staff of the Tolworth policy group (306·5 staff) are not included.

	Number
Qualified veterinary surgeons	420
Technical/scientific	382
Administrative	488
Other	73·5

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the most recent estimates of closure dates of the veterinary investigation centres; and if he will list the closure dates of those that have already closed since 1979.

Mr. Gummer: A veterinary investigation centre located at the Central Veterinary Laboratory, Addlestone closed in December 1980. In November 1985 the Liverpool centre was relocated to a new purpose built centre at Barton hall, Preston. As a result of the recommendations of the efficiency study of the veterinary investigation service carried out in 1984-85, the Cardiff centre closed in March 1986, the Gloucester and Leeds centres closed in June 1986 and the Northampton centre in July 1986. A small laboratory at Chester was also closed in April 1986.

As a result of the 1991 review of the veterinary investigation service, the Wye centre closed in July 1991 and the Bangor and Lincoln centres closed in September 1991.

The Cambridge and Norwich centres closed on 30 January 1993 and 6 February 1993 respectively, when these two centres were amalgamated in a new purpose-built centre at Bury St. Edmunds. With the completion of the new purpose-built centre at Luddington, Warwickshire, the Worcester centre closed on 20 March 1993. The Reading and Winchester centres will be amalgamated on the Winchester site when the enhancement of the Winchester centre is completed in mid-1994.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many qualified veterinarians were employed by the state veterinary service in each year from 1979.

Mr. Gummer: Since 1980 the structure of the state veterinary service has changed several times. For example, the central veterinary laboratory (CVL), which formed part of the state veterinary service attained agency status in April 1990. The CVL figures are incorporated in this return for the years 1 January 1980-1 January 1990. As from 1 June 1990 the figures do not include the CVL.

Agriculture and Food Research Council

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the projected expenditure by his Department on the Agriculture and Food Research Council for each year from 1993-94 to 1996-97.

Mr. Gummer: MAFF's commission with the Agriculture and Food Research Council amounts to £34·8 million in 1993-94. The allocation of funds for 1994-95 to 1996-97 is still under consideration and the council will be notified as soon as decisions have been reached.

Deregulation Initiative

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 16 March, Official Report, column 211, if he will list all the environmental, consumer and animal welfare organisations he (a) has consulted and (b) intends to consult about his deregulation initiative; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Since February 1992 I have been seeking the views of interested organisations on measures that impose a burden on businesses in the food and agriculture sectors. This process has culminated, as I announced on 2 February in my decision to prepare deregulation plans for each sector of my Department responsible for regulatory activity. A deregulation plan for the area of food law was published by my Department on 24 February 1993. It was sent to 240 organisations, including consumer bodies, for comment. A copy of the list of organisations has been placed in the Library of the House. I hope that any organisation inadvertently not approached will feel free to comment; I want to know the views of all groups with an interest. Deregulation plans for other key areas of my Department's work, including the areas of the environment and animal welfare, are to be completed very shortly. A decision will be taken then about arrangements for consultation.

Food Bans

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to ensure that the Action Group for the Relief of Pain and Distress and the Society for the Promotion of Nutritional Therapy are in future consulted before decisions are taken to ban the sale of foods.

Mr. Soames: It is the policy of the Department to consult widely on the whole range of food safety issues. However I cannot give an unqualified guarantee which could hamper the Department's ability to take immediate action to protect consumers.

Codex Alimentarius

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will set out his policy on the desirability of reforming the Codex Alimentarius.

Mr. Gummer: The United Kingdom Government are in agreement with proposed changes to procedures to be discussed by the Codex Alimentarius Commission later this year.

RAF Aston Down

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what work is currently being carried out by his Department at the former Royal Air Force station Aston Down; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: One wildlife unit is based at the station.

Tobacco Quotas

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the policy he will be adopting at the meeting of agriculture Ministers on the allocation of tobacco quotas to Greece.

Mr. Curry: The Council of Agriculture Ministers in December 1992 requested the EC Commission to re-examine the distribution of quotas attributed to the various varieties of tobacco in Greece with a view to taking better account of the way the production of Virginia has developed on the basis of investments decided before 30 December 1991 and to report its conclusions as soon as possible. The Commission issued its report in March 1993, and indicated its intention to propose the following measures:

- 20 million ecu (£16 million) of Community aid and 5 million ecu (£4 million) of national aid to assist Greek producers who invested before the end of 1991 in equipment to produce flue cured tobacco and whose investment was subsequently adversely affected by the imposition of quotas;
- Unutilised Greek quota from other varieties to be made available to Virginia producers;
- Discretionary powers to enable Member States to give preference to new producers when allocating national tobacco quotas.

These measures were discussed at the March Agriculture Council and presented to the Tobacco Management Committee as Commission regulations where they were approved. This issue is not expected to be considered further by the Council.

Butter

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his Department's policy on the sale of butter at reduced prices to persons receiving social assistance.

Mr. Curry: In common with all EC member states, with the exception of the Republic of Ireland, the United Kingdom has not implemented the discretionary EC scheme for sales of butter at reduced prices to persons receiving social assistance.

Quantock Staghounds

Mr. Meale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many formal meetings were held between Forestry Commission officials and hunt officials of the Quantock Staghounds in 1990, 1991 and 1992; and how many warden checks were carried out on Forestry Commission land to ensure the Quantock Staghounds adhere to the terms and conditions of their permit in 1990, 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Curry: Forestry Commission officials and hunt officials of the Quantock Staghounds met formally once in 1990, twice in 1991 and once in 1992. In addition, a number of informal meetings were held each year, and Commission and hunt officials usually meet every two months as members of the Quantock deer management and conservation group.

Forestry Commission staff carry out random checks on hunt days to ensure that the conditions of the permits are being followed, but these routine inspections are not recorded.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Khmer Rouge

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has of the number of (a) civilian and (b) UN personnel killed by the Khmer Rouge in March.

Mr. Goodlad: One member of the United Nations transition authority in Cambodia's—UNTAC—military component was killed by the Khmer Rouge in March. UNTAC has no figures for civilian casualties throughout Cambodia. In view of the difficulties involved in identifying the culprits, it is not possible to specify which murders were perpetrated by the Khmer Rouge, although there is a strong likelihood that they were involved in the recent attacks on ethnic Vietnamese.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reconsideration the Government have undertaken of their views on the inclusion of the Khmer Rouge in the Cambodia peace process.

Mr. Goodlad: Our views on the inclusion of the Khmer Rouge in the peace process remain unchanged. The civil war in Cambodia could not have been brought to an end if the comprehensive political settlement had excluded any of the main parties to the dispute. To have done so would only have prolonged the conflict and condemned the Cambodian people to indefinite misery. We deplore the failure of the Khmer Rouge to live up to its commitments under the Paris agreements.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has of the percentage of Cambodian territory controlled by the Khmer Rouge (a) at the commencement of the UN mandate and (b) at present.

Mr. Goodlad: Because of the dispositions of the factions in Cambodia, it is difficult to determine precisely how much territory is held by each. We do not believe, however, that the Khmer Rouge since October 1991 has been able to extend to any marked degree the villages and territory under its control.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what current estimate he has made of the military threat posed by the Khmer Rouge to the peace process in Cambodia; and what will be the British contribution to resisting it.

Mr. Goodlad: UNTAC estimates that the current strength of the Khmer Rouge armed forces is somewhere in the region of 12,000 front-line troops. They have shown their ability to carry out guerrilla operations, but their strength lies in the western and north western provinces. The United Kingdom has contributed 122 personnel to UNTAC's military component to enable it to implement its mandate under the terms of the Paris agreements.

Whaling

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration he has given to making further discussions with Norway on EC membership conditional on that country reversing its decision to resume the killing of great whales.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Norway would be expected to respect the terms and conditions of existing Community legislation on whales should she accede to the Community. This policy has been made clear to the Norwegians.

Cambodia

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his counterparts in the EC, Japan and the United States of America regarding international help to Cambodia after the proposed elections in May.

Mr. Goodlad: The main forum for international assistance to Cambodia will be the International Conference on the Rehabilitation and Reconstruction of Cambodia—ICORC. The framework for ICORC was agreed at the ministerial conference in Tokyo in June 1992 at which member states of the European Community, Japan and the United States of America were present. A follow-up meeting was held at official level in Phnom Penh on 25 February 1993. The Japanese Government will be arranging further meetings after the May elections.

Many United Nations agencies and programmes, including the United Nations Development Programme, will retain personnel in Cambodia after the end of the UNTAC mandate in August.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the number of mine-clearing units operating under the UN mandate in Cambodia; and how many mines have been lifted as a result of those operations.

Mr. Goodlad: On the basis of the most recent UNTAC figures, 12 mine clearance training teams and 16 supervisory teams were operating in Cambodia. UNTAC's mandate does not include the actual lifting of mines. This is to be done by Cambodians trained by UNTAC. The clearing of mines is being co-ordinated by the Cambodian mine action centre which is, in part, funded by UNTAC.

ENVIRONMENT

Radioactive Substances

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many prosecutions Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has made this year under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960; and if he will give details of the outcome of each prosecution.

Mr. Maclean: Information on prosecutions taken by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 from 1 April 1992 to 16 April 1993 is set out in the table.

Cotgrave Colliery

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what planning applications he has received in respect of the future use of Cotgrave colliery and the use of the pit shafts themselves; and if he will make a statement on the environmental considerations which will be made about future site use.

Mr. Baldry: Planning applications are made to the relevant local planning authorities in the first instance, not to the Secretary of State. However, I understand that neither of the local planning authorities has received any planning applications in respect of this site. If any applications are received the local planning authorities will be expected to take into account all material environmental considerations.

Housing Statistics

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of homes owned by each local authority in Northamptonshire on 31 March for each year since 1978.

Mr. Baldry: Local authorities report the numbers of dwellings they own in their annual housing investment programme returns—HIP1. The figures for 1 April 1978 and 1979 are listed in column B11 of the "HIP1 All Items Print" for those years. For 1 April 1980 and all subsequent years up to 1 April 1992, the latest available, the information is shown in column A11 of each year's "HIP1 All Items Print". Copies of the "HIP1 All Items Print" for each year are in the Library.

Squirrel Monkeys

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what laws govern the use by zoo operators engaging in street photography using squirrel monkeys as props.

Mr. Maclean: Under the Zoo Licensing Act 1981, zoo operators must have a valid zoo licence and any animal removed from zoo must be in their personal possession or that of competent persons acting on their behalf. All zoo licences require the operator to notify the local licensing authority before removing a squirrel monkey, or any other animal listed in the schedule to the Dangerous Wild Animals Act 1976. The operator must provide details of the destination and method of transportation of the animal and the arrangements for its well-being and public safety.

A zoo keeper would also be bound by the provisions of the Protection of Animals Act 1911 which makes it an offence to cause or, in the case of an owner, permit any unnecessary suffering to a captive animal.

Orimulsion

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will announce the measures Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution will take to ensure the control of emissions from power stations burning orimulsion.

Mr. Maclean: The burning of orimulsion or any other fuel in power stations is subject to control by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution under integrated pollution control—IPC—legislation. All IPC authorisations require the operator to use the best available techniques not entailing excessive cost—BATNEEC—to prevent or minimise and render harmless the release of prescribed substances to any environmental medium.

The chief inspector of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution is currently considering two applications from PowerGen to burn orimulsion at Ince power station in Cheshire and Richborough power station in Kent. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has agreed with PowerGen an extension to the determination period for both applications until the end of July allowing further time for consideration of the economic and environmental impact of this new fuel.

Council House Sales

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each district authority in Northamptonshire the total discounted value of houses and flats sold in each year since 1988-89.

Mr. Baldry: The total discounted values of dwellings sold by local authorities in Northamptonshire in the years 1988-89 to 1991-92 are given in the table. Actual cash receipts in any year will depend on the extent to which sales were financed by loans from the authorities. Figures for 1992-93 are not yet available.

	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92
Corby	9,036	6,764	2,508	2,421

Business Rates

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the estimated increase in business rates for firms in the west midlands as a result of the 1995 rating revaluation.

Mr. Robin Squire: It is too early to speculate about the outcome of the 1995 revaluation, the results of which will not be available until next year.

Mineral Workings

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to issue the updated version of the minerals planning guidance note on the reclamation of mineral workings.

Mr. Baldry: Revision of the minerals planning guidance note on the reclamation of mineral workings is in hand. A consultation draft will be available at the end of this year, with publication of a revised version in 1994.

Opencast Coal Mining

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce changes in planning guidance relating to opencast coal mining in the light of the recent White Paper on coal.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. and learned Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Erewash (Mrs. Knight) on 25 March, Official Report, columns 714-15.

Rent Reviews

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding upward-only rent reviews; and what action his Department is proposing to take.

Mr. Baldry: Representations have been received from a number of individuals and interested bodies. My hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning announced on 31 March, in answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Bromsgrove (Mr. Thomason)—Official Report columns 293-94—that the Government will consult widely on this aspect of commercial leasing and carefully consider the outcome in relation to new leases.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many hours officials at his Department are expected to spend in reviewing the method of calculation of standard spending assessments; and what staff levels will be involved.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department is at present planning to devote about 10 man years to work on the SSA review in this financial year. Officials in other Government Departments will also be involved. The amount of work will depend, in part, on the representations made to us by local authorities and others.

Green Belt

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what time limits exist for local authorities to take enforcement action against non-conforming uses within the green belt, from the time that the alleged non-conforming use commenced.

Mr. Baldry: Section 171B of the Town and Country Planning Act—inserted by section 4(1) of the Planning and Compensation Act 1991—effectively provides that, where a breach of planning control involves a "material" change of use of land, no enforcement action may be taken after the end of the 10-year period from the date of the breach. Where the breach of control involves the change of use of any building to use as a single dwellinghouse, section 171B(2) of the 1990 Act provides that no enforcement action may be taken after the end of the four-year period from the date of the breach. These provisions apply regardless of whether the land is in a green belt.

House Building

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the number of houses built for (a) local authorities, (b) housing associations and (c) private enterprise in the west midlands in each of the last three years.

Mr. Baldry: Permanent dwellings completed in the last three years are:

	1990	1991	[1]1992
Private enterprise	13,123	13,383	12,418
Housing associations	2,118	1,517	2,324
Local authorities and new towns	1,133	979	377
All	16.374	15,879	15,119

No breakdown between local authorities and new towns is held for individual regions.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide a table showing by region (a) the number of house building starts and completions and (b) the number per head of population for each year since 1980.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 9 March 1993]: Estimates of housebuilding starts and completions by region and by number per head of population are shown in the publication "Housing and Construction Statistics". Figures for 1980 for starts and completions by region are in table 6.4, and figures per thousand population are in table 6.6 of the 1980 to 1990 edition and revised figures for 1981 to 1991 are in the same tables in the 1981 to 1991 edition. Copies of these publications are in the Library.

Hadrian's Wall

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is to meet ramblers or their representatives to discuss the proposed footpath along the length of Hadrian's wall; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: No. The Countryside Commission submitted the report which details the results of its consultation, on 31 March, and I shall be considering this as soon as possible.

Open Spaces Society

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much notice the Open Spaces Society received of the reduction in its grant for 1993-94; what were the reasons for the reduction; and which of its activities will be reduced or abandoned.

Mr. Maclean: The Open Spaces Society was advised in January 1992 that future funding for its urban project should be found from outside Government sources and that 1992-93 was the last year of agreed funding for their rural work.

Given the large number of worthy voluntary groups eligible for support from the fund, it would not be right for any one group to expect full support for an unlimited period. However, the society's work in protecting common land and town and village greens is highly regarded by the Department and I have therefore decided that the society should receive some further support for another three years towards its work in this area. This will amount to £15,000 in 1993-94 reducing to around £10,000 in 1995-96, giving time for the society to seek alternative sources of funding after that.

The society received formal notice of this on 19 March.

Empty Properties

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action has been taken by the task force on vacant Government-owned dwellings.

Mr. Howard: The task force on Government Departments' empty houses has held two meetings, and is due to meet again on 28 April. It has commissioned detailed information from Departments on actual numbers of surplus and empty residential property. It is currently negotiating with Departments firm targets for disposal or occupation, to deliver its remit of helping to bring this property back into housing use.

Waste Water Treatment

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to issue for public consultation a draft of the implementing regulations for the EC urban waste water treatment directive.

Mr. Maclean: We have today issued for consultation a draft of the Urban Waste Water Treatment (England and Wales) Regulations 1993. My right hon. and learned Friend and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales consider that it will be useful, particularly for the National Rivers Authority and for the water service companies and other dischargers, to have available to them some guidance on the implementation and interpretation of these regulations. A draft of a proposed guidance note to accompany them has therefore also been published for consultation today.

EDUCATION

College Fees

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what role his Department exercises in the setting of college fees in respect of undergraduates at collegiate universities; and if he will set out the total payments for college fees made by his Department to each college in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Boswell: The level of fees set for the constituent colleges of the universities of Oxford and Cambridge is determined through discussions between the Department and representatives of the colleges. The negotiations take account of the change in the unit of public funding of student places in higher education. The Department does not currently exercise any role in the setting of college fees for other collegiate universities.

The total payment of college fees was £38 million in 1990-91 in respect of Oxford and Cambridge colleges, and £8 million in respect of colleges in other collegiate universities. Information on the total payment of fees in respect of each college is not available centrally.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 19 January, Official Report, column 154, if he will publish the current level of college fees agreed with his Department in respect of undergraduates in each college at the universities listed in his answer.

Mr. Boswell: The current level of fees set for each college is as follows:

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is his policy towards institutions of higher education wishing to reorganise on a collegiate basis in respect of payment of college fees from public funds.

Mr. Boswell: The internal organisation of universities and colleges is a matter for the institutions alone to decide. My right hon. Friend does not intend to extend the list of institutions in the mandatory awards regulations for which local education authorities are obliged to meet college fees.

Contracted-out Services

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if it is his Department's policy not to allow in-house bids when a service which has already been contracted out is retendered.

Mr. Boswell: It is the Department's general policy not to allow in-house bids when contracted out services are retendered. The Department would consider such a bid only when it could be made as part of a larger in-house bid, in a market test also covering services currently done in-house.

Education, Greater Manchester

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on participation rates in further and higher education in the Greater Manchester area.

Mr. Boswell: Data on participation in higher education by those domiciled in Greater Manchester are not readily available. A statistical bulletin will be published in May, covering participation in education at ages 16 and 17.

For Greater Manchester the figures are as follows:

Percentage of Age-group in Education: 1991-92

	Number
Age 16[1]
School	34
Full-time further education	25
Part-time further education	11

Sex Education

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education whether he has any plans to update the guidance on sex education in schools contained in circular 11/87.

Mr. Patten: I am today issuing for consultation a draft revised circular on sex education and have placed copies in the Library of the House.

We are clear that all sex education should take place within a framework which encourages pupils to consider the moral dimension of their actions. They should recognise the value of family life and understand the importance of loving relationships and mutual respect.

This draft advice seeks to guide and support headteachers and other classroom teachers in a sensitive, but important, aspect of children's education. It rightly recognises that parents are the key figures in helping their children to cope with the physical and emotional aspects of growing up and in preparing them for the challenges and responsibilities which sexual maturity brings. The teaching offered by schools should be complementary and supportive to the role of parents.

The circular also explains how the provisions for sex education in the Education (No. 2) Act 1986 work together with those in the Education Reform Act 1988. This requires all pupils to study aspects of sex education within national curriculum science.

Our new draft guidance will offer appropriate advice to teachers, governors and others who are responsible for providing such education.

Universities (Child Care)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of state for Education what statutory provisions govern the use of public funds by universities to support child care facilities for university students and staff.

Mr. Boswell: Public funds for universities in England are administered by the Higher Education Funding Council for England. Section 65(2) of the Further and Higher Education Act 1992 defines the activities eligible for funding. This definition does not exclude the funding of child care facilities.

Universities are autonomous bodies and it is for them to decide their own priorities, including any provision or support of child care facilities for staff and students, from within the resources available to them.

WALES

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will undertake a survey of all local education authorities in Wales to determine which of them, on being responded to provide an assessment under section 5 of the Education Act 1981, responded by providing an informal assessment, rather than a statutory assessment for those children who hitherto have not been statemented.

Sir Wyn Roberts: No. The provision for parents to request an assessment of their child's needs, where the child does not already have a statement, does not differentiate between a formal or an informal assessment. The Education Bill makes it clear that parents may ask a local education authority to arrange a statutory assessment.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he has taken to ensure that local education authorities do not refuse a statement for a child of statutory secondary school age, whose statutory assessment has indicated special educational needs, on the grounds that the funding of such statementing is the responsibility of individual schools under the system of local management of schools.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Local education authorities have a statutory duty to prepare a statement, if following a formal assessment of needs, they conclude that they should determine the special educational provision that should be made for a child. LEAs have a further duty to maintain a statement and to ensure that the provision it specifies is delivered. Local management of schools' arrangements do not affect LEAs' statutory duty in that respect.

Parents have a right of appeal to my right hon. Friend if, following a formal assessment, LEAs decide not to issue a statement. They may also make a complaint to him if they consider that an LEA is defaulting on a statutory duty.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many out-county places are provided by each local education authority in Wales for (a) children with special educational needs, and (b) for children suffering from dyslexia.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information is available only in respect of children with statements of special educational needs. Information on statemented pupils by the authority where they are registered and place of education at January 1992 is given in table 12.01 of the Welsh Office publication "Statistics of Education and Training in Wales: Schools, No. 1 1993".

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what review he has undertaken of the additional educational facilities in each local education authority in Wales required to meet the special educational needs of children who are being educated bilingually;

(2) if he will carry out a survey of the number of children in all local education authority in Wales who have been identified by the local education authority as having a specific learning difficulty in numeracy; and if he will arrange for these figures to be published.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend has not undertaken a review and does not propose any survey. It is the responsibility of the local education authority to identify children with special educational needs, including those with specific learning difficulties, and to make appropriate provision for them.

Tourism

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the tourism-related (a) reclamation and (b) environmental schemes (i) completed and (ii) in programme but not completed by the Welsh Development Agency in each year since 1987 indicating the cost of each project.

Mr. David Hunt: The information for tourism-related reclamation schemes is set out in the table. Information on environmental schemes is not readily available and I have asked the chief executive of the agency to write to the hon. Member. A copy of his reply will be placed in the Library of the House.

Heads of the Valleys Road

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list (a) planned improvements to the A465 heads of the valleys road between Abergavenny and the M4 at Llandarcy, (b) the next key stage in the preparation of each improvement and (c) the date he expects that stage to be completed.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Improvements to the A465 trunk road are planned between Abergavenny and Hirwaun and Glynneath and Aberdulais. The respective key stages in preparation involve public consultation on improvement proposals and invitations to tender. These stages are programmed to enable construction to start in accordance with the 1993 supplement to "Roads in Wales".

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to achieve his objective, announced in May 1991, of completing the dualling of the A465 heads of the valleys road between Abergavenny and the M4 at Llandarcy.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Plans for the sections to be improved are set out in the "1993 Supplement to Roads in Wales".

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what accident statistics he has for the A465 heads of the valleys road between Abergavenny and the M4 at Llandarcy for the latest convenient period; and what are the corresponding accident rates for other trunk roads within Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The numbers and rates of accidents involving personal injury on the stretch of the A465 between Abergavenny, junction with A4042, and Llandarcy, junction with A48, and also rates on all trunk roads in Wales, including the above stretch, in 1991 are given in the tables:

	Number of accidents on the A465	Number of accidents per km of A465	Number of accidents per km of all trunk roads
Fatal	5	0·07	0·03
Serious	13	0·19	0·25

Community Care

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures will be taken to provide support and direction for those Welsh councils that have difficulty in implementing their responsibilities outlined in the community care reforms.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh Office has given considerable guidance and support to local councils in Wales to help them prepare for the implementation of community care. An additional £37·5 million for community care has been made available through revenue support grant in 1993-94, much more than would have been spent by the Department of Social Security on new admissions of individual's to residential or nursing home care. The onus is now on local councils to manage the implementation, but we will monitor progress closely and will continue to offer guidance and direction as is considered necessary.

Hearing-impaired Support Groups

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has had from hearing-impaired support groups; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Such groups may approach any policy division in the Welsh Office according to the point they wish to raise. No central record is held of such approaches.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the Welsh Development Agency concerning the High Court writ served against the agency by NALGO on 22 March, and the agency's response.

Mr. David Hunt: None.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the Welsh Development Agency concerning the tendering procedure to be adopted for the sale of industrial estates by the agency during the present financial year.

Mr. David Hunt: None. The agency follows the procedures for the disposal of land and buildings set out in "Government Accounting".

Labour Statistics

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the five Welsh constituencies that have recorded the largest increases in unemployment figures in the year 1992-93; and if he will list the percentage changes involved.

Mr. David Hunt: The constituencies that have recorded the largest percentage increases in unemployment are listed in the table:

Constituency	Percentage change
Monmouth	22·4
Newport West	16·0
Brecon and Radnor	14·8
Alyn and Deeside	12·0
Cardiff North	11·6

PCB Contamination, Panteg

Mr. Roger Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will publish the report by the University of East Anglia on contamination by polychlorinated biphenyls in the Panteg area.

Mr. David Hunt: I have today published the report into PCB contamination in the Panteg area which I commissioned from the environmental risk assessment unit of the university of East Anglia. I have arranged for a copy of the report to be placed in the Library of the House.

I commissioned the study in January 1991 at a contracted cost of £432,000 and, in the two years during which it has been in progess, three interim reports have been produced and published.

The main conclusion of the study is that with the exception of a localised area close to the eastern boundary of the ReChem site, the measured concentrations of PCBs and dioxins in the Panteg area are not unusual or significantly different from those encountered in similar areas elsewhere in the United Kingdom. According to currently accepted criteria and guidance on health effects for these compounds, such levels should not generally give rise to concern.

The report also concludes that the distribution and gradation or PCBs and dioxins in the Panteg area suggests a common localised source or sources, possibly at or close to ground level within the ReChem plant. However, the report has not identified any specific source within the plant.

The study has found no evidence of significantly elevated levels of PCBs and dioxins in foodstuffs, including locally produced milk, in the Panteg area. The only exception is in relation to duck eggs at Pontyfelin House, which is immediately adjacent to the ReChem plant, where guidelines limits for human intake of dioxins could be exceeded if the eggs were consumed. The Government advised the occupants of this property in 1989 that their duck eggs should not be consumed and this advice still stands.

The report has been considered by the Government's expert advisers and I have also consulted the regulators of the plant—the Health and Safety Executive and Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. I have received an assessment of the report from my independent adviser, Professor Lewis Roberts, which I have also published today.

In the light of the advice I have received, I am satisfied that the report is comprehensive and thorough and shows no evidence of widespread contamination by PCBs and dioxins in the area. Although elevated concentrations were found close to the ReChem plant, with the exception of the duck eggs I have already referred to, these are not considered to pose any significant risk to public health or the food chain.

The report makes a number of recommendations for further work to clarify some remaining uncertaintes in relation to the small area of elevated PCB/dioxin concentrations near the ReChem plant, and to provide public reassurance. These recommendations have been endorsed by Professor Roberts and I accept them.

Work on four of the recommendations, for further testing of soil and air samples in the vicinity of the ReChem plant and more testing of grass and local egg samples, is already under way. Work is also in progress on the fifth recommendation for analysis of vegetables and meat from fowl in the small area of higher contamination.

All this supplementary work will be undertaken by the university of East Anglia and I will publish its results when they are available.

The report also recommends that there should be further investigation of the ReChem site to identify and quantify all current sources of emissions which may be contributing to off-site contamination. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and the Health and Safety Executive will be pursuing this matter with ReChem International Ltd. as quickly as possible. Their inquiries will also include the extent to which the PCB/dioxin levels found are due to past rather than current operational factors on the ReChem site.

The final recommendation is that there should be continued monitoring of the environment in the vicinity of the site and that this might usefully be developed from the joint survey carried out at present by Torfaen borough council and ReChem International Ltd. This is primarily a matter for Torfaen district council as the local environmental health authority. I commend the recommendation to it.

The work of the study has been overseen by a technical steering group on which Torfaen borough council, ReChem Ltd. and the European Commission have been represented. I have asked the group to study the final report and my statement in more detail and, once the results of the supplementary work are available, to give me their further views.

I hope that the publication of this report will help to relieve public anxiety and uncertainty about PCB and dioxin contamination in the Panteg area of Pontypool. It provides an opportunity for a fresh start in the relationships between the local authority, the local community and the company; one I hope that all will be willing to take. I am aware that past proposals for the establishment of a liaison committee have not progressed. I hope that the community and the company will give renewed thought to this as a forum for local debate and consultation.

Finally, I should like to express my thanks to the university of East Anglia for the meticulous and exhaustive manner in which it has undertaken this formidable and complex task; to Professor Lewis Roberts for the help and guidance he has given to my Department and the university team during the conduct of the study; and to the technical steering group which has overseen this work.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

South Africa

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will now make it his practice to list all nuclear trade, including technology and nuclear materials, conducted with the Republic of South Africa since 1973.

Mr. Eggar: Detailed information of this kind is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Arms Exports

Mr. Rogers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his policy in relation to the issue of end-user certificates for arms exports; and if he will place in the Library the instructions given to his civil servants.

Mr. Needham: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answers I gave to the House on 8 July 1992, Official Report, columns 333-34, and to the hon. Members for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) and for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on various occasions since then. Desk instructions to staff processing export licence applications indicate the circumstances in which an end-user certificate is required from the applicant in support of the application, and require the precise wording to be checked.

Clean Coal

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give the reasons for his Department's refusal of a loan to ABB for the development of a clean coal project in Britain.

Mr. Eggar: The project being promoted by ABB was one of several potential clear coal projects discussed informally with my Department during the coal review. The Government conclusion that support from public funds for a clean coal demonstration plant could not be justified at the present time was announced in the coal White Paper—Cm 2235, paragraph 15.18.

Tropical Timber

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent representations he has received on controls on the import of tropical timber; and from whom.

Mr. Needham: I have received representations on this subject from hon. Members, organisations such as Friends of the Earth and members of the public.

Nuclear Power Industry

Mr. Chris Smith: To as the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has for the future privatisation of the nuclear power industry.

Mr. Eggar: The Government currently have no plans to privatise either Nuclear Electric or British Nuclear Fuels. As regards the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, I announced in my reply of 1 April 1993, Official Report, column 407, to my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes) that, as a first step, I was commissioning independent consultants to consider the practicability of privatising the authority and to advise on the main options. Scottish Nuclear Ltd. is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Wales-Ireland Electricity Link

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 15 April, Official Report, column 718, when he expects the further studies to establish the viability of the Wales-Ireland electricity grid link-up to begin.

Mr. Eggar: Studies to establish the feasibility and commercial viability of the proposed Wales-Ireland electricity link are a commercial matter for the National Grid Company. I understand that studies are going ahead on a continuing basis.

New Houses (Structural Warranties)

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action is being taken to implement the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on structural warranty services for new homes.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The report on structural warranty services for new homes was published in March 1991 and the Monopolies and Mergers Commission—MMC—found that rule 12 of the rules of the National House Building Council—NHBC—operated against the public interest and was hindering the growth of competition in the market. The rule requires builders who are members of the NHBC to register all their new homes for cover under the NHBC structural warranty scheme. The MMC recommended that rule 12 should be amended to permit NHBC builders to use a comparable alternative warranty scheme. Therefore, I have today written to Sir Bryan Carsberg, requesting him, under section 88(1) of the Fair Trading Act 1973 to consult NHBC with a view to obtaining an undertaking to amend rule 12 in line with the MMC's recommendation.

The MMC also recommended changes to the rules on leaving and rejoining the NHBC scheme to make it easier for builders to transfer between schemes.

Action to implement the report has been delayed while NHBC sought judicial review of the MMC's findings on rule 12. The judgment delivered on 1 October 1992 upheld the MMC's findings on rule 12. Judicial review did not relate to the MMC's other recommendations concerning aspects of the rules on withdrawal and transfer from the NHBC scheme. Terms of undertakings on these recommendations are already being negotiated by Sir Bryan Carsberg, the Director General of Fair Trading—DGFT—and he will advise me of the outcome in due course.

The NHBC has lodged an appeal challenging the MMC's findings on rule 12, although no date has yet been set for the appeal. To avoid any further delay I have asked the DGFT to convene negotiations with NHBC with a view to obtaining the appropriate undertaking within three months.

I consider that the proposed amendment would open up a degree of competition, while providing consumer protection, in that competing house warranty schemes would conform to a broadly comparable standard, in terms of technical specifications, inspections and reserves set aside against future liabilities, to that established by the NHBC.

Used Tyres (Incineration)

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what reports he has commissioned on the waste-to-energy process involving the incineration of used tyres; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 21 April 1993]: In March 1990, my Department published a study it had commissioned from KPMG Peat Marwick McLintock entitled "The Recycling and Disposal of Tyres" which discussed, among other things, the prospects for scrap tyre incineration. A copy was placed in the Library of the House. The energy technology support unit earlier this year published an emissions audit of a chain grate stoker burning shredded tyres—report reference ETSU B1313–P6. Tyres-to-energy plants, using suitable incineration technology, can be an environmentally acceptable way of recovering value from this difficult waste.

TRANSPORT

Jubilee Line Extension

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations he has had with the European investment bank in relation to the terms for providing the loan towards the cost of constructing the Jubilee line extension to Canary Wharf; and if he will place a copy of such terms in the Library.

Mr. Norris: Discussions with the European investment bank, like those with the other banks concerned with private sector contributions to the Jubilee line extension, are commercially confidential.

London Transport Pension Fund

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning the future of the London Transport pension fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: We have received a small number of representations including an approach from the Transport and General Workers Union.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current value of the London Transport pension fund; and what proportion of its value is attributed to London Buses.

Mr. Norris: The value of the LRT pension fund as at 31 March 1993 was £2,022 million. Assets of the fund are not attributed to particular groups of employees.

M12

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the consultants' report on the proposed M12 to (a) be completed, (b) be published and made public and (c) a public inquiry to be held.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We expect our consultants to report later this year and their findings will be available when we consult the public on options early next year. Any public inquiry would be into objections to draft schemes and orders under the Highways Act. These would be published only when the need for a motorway has been established and a preferred route selected. An inquiry is therefore unlikely to take place before 1996.

Fuel-conditioning Devices

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what evaluation he has made of the effects on vehicle emissions of in-line fuel-conditioning devices based on tin alloys or magnetic cores; and what advice he is issuing to the public about the effectiveness of such products in reducing fuel consumption and emissions of regulated pollutants.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Department has not carried out any evaluations of in-line fuel-conditioning devices and does not endorse, approve or otherwise accept any product that claims to offer improvements in fuel economy and/or reductions in pollution. It is for the manufacturers to satisfy themselves that the product meets legal requirements.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

European Neutron Source

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proposals he has for persuading Britain's partners to agree to the siting of the proposed European neutron source in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Robert Jackson: Planning for a European pulsed neutron source is at a very early stage. Results of a feasibility study to examine requirements will be presented to an assessment panel of the European Commission on 24 April. Only if planning proceeds to the outline design stage will the question of a site for the source arise.

HEALTH

Mental Handicap

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average total cost per patient per week of providing in-patient care to residents of long-stay mental handicap hospitals in England.

Mr. Yeo: Information in the precise form requested is not available centrally. Specialty cost returns submitted to the Department by health authorities and national health service trusts for 1991-92 indicate the average cost per patient week for the mental handicap specialty was £665. This figure, which is provisional, is inclusive of treatment, accommodation and overhead costs.

Low-income Health Benefits Scheme

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what her Department is doing to draw attention to the NHS low-income health benefits scheme;

(2) whether a survey has been conducted to determine how many general practitioners know about the NHS low-income health benefits scheme;

(3) what measures she is taking to ensure that all general practitioners are informed of the NHS low-income health benefits scheme.

Dr. Mawhinney: Explanatory leaflets about the national health service low-income scheme are freely available to the public from post offices, doctors and dentists' surgeries, hospital out-patient departments, opticians and offices of the social security Benefits Agency. Information about the low-income scheme can also be found in leaflets about social security benefits published by the Benefits Agency. All general practitioners are informed of the scheme by means of circulars issued to them through family health services authorities. These circulars also draw general practitioners' attention to the availability of leaflets and posters about the scheme and ask them to display these prominently. In view of the wide availability of information, no survey has been deemed necessary.

Industrial Disease

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate she has of the number of people who died in 1992-93 from emphysema or bronchitis caused by pneumoconiosis or silicosis.

Mr. Sackville: The information for 1992 will not be available until July 1993.

GP Fund Holders

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on her Department's policy regarding the grouping of general practitioner fund holders.

Dr. Mawhinney: Guidance on general practitioners forming fund-holding consortia was issued in December 1992. A copy of this guidance—EL(92)92—is available in the Library.

Peripheral Nerve Damage

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list by year for the last 10 years and by (a) regional health authority and (b) district health authority the number of patients treated for peripheral nerve damage; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

GP Lists

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what statistics are kept for the numbers of patients struck off general practitioners' lists, both on an individual basis and by area; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

Doctors (Penalties)

Mr. Boyce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 25 February, Official Report, column 679, what steps are taken to ensure that the Medical Advisory Committee is in possession of all relevant information when advising on a penalty to be imposed on a doctor.

Dr. Mawhinney: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State passes to the Medical Advisory Committee the evidence that was available to the committee which heard the complaint, the recommendations of that committee and the reasoned decision of the family health services authority, any further information presented on appeal and where appropriate the report of the findings of the persons appointed to hold an oral hearing.

Health Promotion

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to publish the Family Health Service Authority guidelines for health promotion.

Dr. Mawhinney: Guidance for national health service regions and family health service authorities on implementation of the new general practitioner contract health promotion arrangements, which take effect from 1 July 1993, was issued on 12 January 1993 under cover of FHSL(93)3, copies of which are available in the Library.

Advisory Committee on Drugs

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the terms of reference of the extended advisory committee on drugs.

Dr. Mawhinney: The terms of reference for the Advisory Committee on National Health Service Drugs announced by the Secretary of State for Health on 21 December 1992 are:

"To advise the UK Health Ministers about the composition of Schedules 10 and 11 of the NHS (General Medical Services) Regulations 1992, and the corresponding Schedules in the Regulations in Scotland and Northern Ireland (except those items which are in such Schedules because the Advisory Committee on Borderline Substances has advised that they should not be treated as drugs for the purpose of the GMS Regulations) in order that drugs to meet all real clinical needs can be provided as economically as possible under the NHS for the following categories and purposes:

mild to moderate pain-killers indigestion remedies laxatives cough and cold remedies vitamins tonics benzodiazepine sedatives and tranquillisers anti-diarrhoeal drugs drugs for allergic disorders hypnotics and anxiolytics appetite suppressants drugs for vaginal and vulval conditions contraceptives drugs used in anaemia
topical anti-rheumatics drugs acting on the ear and nose drugs acting on the skin

For these purposes a drug will be treated as falling within one of those categories according to the purpose for which it is, or will be, prescribed even if the drug is not licensed for those purposes."

Departmental Plans

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are her plans for the work of her Department in 1993-94 and beyond.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have agreed a statement of the aims, goals and priorities for my Department for 1993-94 and the following three years. It covers the whole range of the Department's work relating to health and social services, European Community and other international issues, and internal management. It includes our specific priorities for the national health service management executive, which are taken forward in more detail in the management executive's statement, "The Goal and Strategies of the Chief Executive and the Management Executive of the NHS and their Objectives for 1993-94", approved by the NHS policy board. Copies of both statements have been placed in the Library.

Skin Disease

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 16 February, Official Report, column 159, if she will place in the Library the list of the 1,776 drugs that are currently available on the national health service for the treatment of skin complaints.

Dr. Mawhinney: A list of the drugs dispensed for the treatment of skin complaints, by community pharmacists, dispensing doctors and prescribing doctors for personal administration, in England in 1991, has been placed in the Library.

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received about the proposed selected list for prescribable medications used in the treatment of skin disease; and what consultations are taking place with clinicians.

Dr. Mawhinney: A number of representations have been received from patients and organisations representing those who suffer with skin diseases. This information will be available to the independent advisory committee that provides advice on which drugs should not be prescribable by general practitioners under the National Health Service. The committee, whose members include experienced clincians, is free to seek whatever advice it wishes.

Breast Cancer

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research her Department has commissioned into the effectiveness of three-yearly breast scans for women aged over 50 years; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: In 1985 the Government commissioned a working group chaired by Professor Sir Patrick Forrest to consider evidence of the effectiveness of breast screening by mammography. The group's report concluded that three yearly screening for women aged 50 to 64 would have a substantial impact on mortality; the national screening programme was established on the basis of the Forrest recommendations.

In the financial year 1990-91, the Department spent approximately £370,000 on research into breast cancer screening including the funding of the cancer screening evaluation unit which is currently measuring the extent to which population based programmes of screening and education can reduce mortality from breast cancer.

The Department is also funding with the Medical Research Council, the health Departments and the major charities, the United Kingdom Co-ordinating Committee for Cancer Research five-year programme of breast screening trials. This programme includes a multi-randomised trial of yearly versus three-yearly breast screening for women aged 50 to 64.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to change the interval between breast scans for women aged over 50 years; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: We have no such current plans. The Department is contributing to a randomised five-year trial, begun in 1990, of some 100,000 women aged between 50 to 64, to look at the potential benefits of yearly versus three-yearly breast screening mammography. When the study is concluded, the results will be considered against the current screening policy.

Drug Addicts

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on guidance presently given to general practitioners on treatment of drug addicts.

Dr. Mawhinney: In December 1991 the Health Departments issued "Guidelines on Clinical Management of Drug Misuse and Dependence" to all doctors, including general practitioners. The guidelines highlight the importance of the role of the non-specialist doctor in the treatment and care of drug misusers. A copy is available in the Library.

Vacant Dwellings

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 11 January, Official Report, column 615, if she will list the full address of each site with 20 or more dwellings which are vacant.

Mr. Sackville: Analysis of the December 1992 survey that covered some 75 per cent. of the national health service showed only one site with 20 or more vacant dwellings. All but four of those dwellings have since been put to use, and there is a waiting list for the four, which are being redecorated.

From the survey we estimate that across the national health service 1,800 dwellings are vacant. This figure, which excludes places in hostels for nurses and other staff, indicates an average of our four vacant dwellings for each health authority and trust.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

East Timor

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what conditions were attached to the recently announced aid to Indonesia for a power project in relation to improvements in human rights or agreement to abide by United Nations resolutions on East Timor.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The most effective approach to influencing Indonesia on human rights at the present time is through constructive dialogue, rather than through attaching particular conditions to our aid.

Eastern Europe (Food Production)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his assessment of the changes in the last 12 months of food production in the Baltic states, the Ukraine, Poland, Hungary, Khazakhstan, Georgia, Mongolia and Romania; and what effect these changes will have on the operation of British aid programmes, including the know-how fund.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 20 April 1993]: Food production has declined throughout the region due to drought, changes in land ownership, loss of guaranteed markets and subsidies, currency depreciation, inflation and the worldwide farming recession. The severity of the situation varies from country to country. In the long term, they all have considerable agricultural potential.

The know-how fund will continue to assist the region where practicable in reorganising its food industries along modern, market-oriented lines.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Taxation

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update his answer of 15 December 1992, Official Report, column 120, to provide similar estimates of the burden of direct and indirect taxes for 1993-94.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested in given in the table.

Notes:

1. Income tax payments are calculated on the assumption that the households receive no tax reliefs other than the standard allowances and only have income from employment. All earners, including wives, are assumed to pay Class I National Insurance contributions at the contracted-in rate.
2. Since 1990-91, husbands and wives have been taxed independently. Previously the tax liability of couples depended on their joint income. To permit comparisons with earlier years, the table therefore shows income tax and National Insurance Contributions paid by a married couple as a proportion of their joint income, assuming, as in the earlier years, that where both partners are earners, the husband and wife share the relevant multiple of earnings in the ratio 60:40.

3. In order to provide comparability with 1978-79, when support for children was given partly through child tax allowance, child benefit is treated as a negative income tax for the married couple with two children.
4. Average earnings are taken to be the average gross weekly earnings of all full-time males on adult rates with pay unaffected by absence. This is assumed to be £359·80 per week in 1993-94, based on the illustrative earnings growth assumption of 4 per cent. in 1993-94.
5. The estimates of indirect taxes apart from the Community Charge are based on equations derived from the 1985 Family Expenditure Survey, uprated to later years using forecasts of aggregate tax receipts. They are based on the illustrative assumption that 10 per cent. of disposable income is saved. There are wide variations in spending patterns between households with the same composition and similar incomes and estimated payments of VAT and other indirect taxes are therefore approximate, even within the income range for which figures are shown. Outside this range, the margin of error is even higher and reliable estimates cannot be made. Because of sampling variation, there can be substantial differences between estimates obtained from Family Expenditure Surveys for different years.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update his answer of 15 December 1992, Official Report, column 120, to provide similar estimates of the burden of direct and indirect taxes for 1994-95, based on the assumptions contained in the Financial Statement and Budget Report 1993-94.

Mr. Dorrell: Figures illustrating the hypothetical tax burdens that would take effect in 1993-94 if the tax rates announced for 1994-95 applied in 1993-94 are given in the table. The actual burden of tax in 1994-95 will depend on decisions taken on tax rates, allowances and thresholds in the November 1993 Budget as well as on changes in prices and earnings levels.

Notes:

1. Income tax payments are calculated on the assumption that the households receive no tax reliefs other than the standard allowances and only have income from employment. All earners, including wives, are assumed to pay Class 1 NI contributions at the contracted-in rate.
2. Since 1990-91, husbands and wives have been taxed independently. Previously the tax liability of couples depended on their joint income. To permit comparisons with earlier years, the table therefore shows income tax and National Insurance Contributions paid by a married couple as a proportion of their joint income, assuming, as in the earlier years, that where both partners are earners, the husband and wife share the relevant multiple of earnings in the ratio 60:40.
3. In order to provide comparability with 1978-79, when support for children was given partly through child tax allowance, child benefit is treated as a negative income tax for the married couple with two children.
4. Estimates have been provided on the illustrative basis that measures for 1994-95 announced in the Budget—the extension of the 20p income tax band to £3,000, an increase of 1 per cent. in employee NICs, restricting the rate of relief for married couples' allowance to 20 per cent., the introduction of VAT at 8 per cent. on domestic fuel and power and a real increase in fuel duties of 3 per cent.—are implemented in 1993-94, on the basis of 1993-94 levels of earnings and prices and with tax allowances, thresholds etc. at their 1993-94 levels.
5. Average earnings are taken to be the average gross weekly earnings of all full-time males on adult rates with pay unaffected by absence and are assumed to be £359·80 per week, based on the illustrative earnings growth assumption of 4 per cent. in 1993-94.
6. The estimates of indirect taxes apart from VAT on fuel and power are based on equations derived from the 1985 Family Expenditure Survey, uprated using forecasts of aggregate tax receipts. Estimates of VAT on fuel and power are based on an equation relating expenditure on fuel and power to total expenditure derived from the 1991 Family Expenditure Survey, uprated using forecasts of receipts of VAT on domestic fuel and power. The estimates of tax burdens do not include an estimate of the burden of the Council Tax. The estimates are based on the illustrative assumption that 10 per cent. of disposable income is saved.
7. There are wide variations in spending patterns between households with the same composition and similar incomes and estimated payments of VAT and other indirect taxes are therefore approximate, even within the income range for which figures are shown. Outside this range, the margin of error is even higher and reliable estimates cannot be made. Because of sampling variation, there can be substantial difference between estimates obtained from Family Expenditure Surveys for different years.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much extra a married couple with one earner will have to pay in tax from April 1994, if they earn (a) £14,000, (b) £19,000 and (c) £28,000; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: A one-earner married couple with no children, aged under 65, claiming the personal allowance and married couple's allowance would pay about £3·90 more per week in direct and indirect tax with earnings of £14,000 per annum; about £4·80 per week more in tax with earnings of £19,000 per annum and about £7·50 per week more in tax with earnings of £28,000 per annum. These estimates are on the standard specimen household basis, assuming households have no other income besides earnings and receive no tax reliefs other than standard allowances. The estimates are at 1993-94 prices and are based on the hypothetical assumption that the measures announced in the Budget for 1994-95 take effect in 1993-94.

Higher Rate Taxpayers

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of additional higher rate taxpayers in 1993-94 and 1994-95 as a result of changes announced in the Budget.

Mr. Dorrell: In 1993-94, it is estimated that there will be 120,000 more higher rate taxpayers under the Budget proposals compared with statutory indexation of allowances and the basic rate limit. Restricting the married couple's allowance to 20 per cent., as proposed for 1994-95, would increase the number by a further 210,000 at 1993-94 levels of income.

Animal Skins

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will conduct an inquiry into the disposal and sale of skins of dead farm animals which do not pass through slaughterhouses.

Mr. Dorrell: No central inquiry is planned, but the Inland Revenue is conducting a number of inquiries at local office level into possible failures to declare income from the sale of animal skins.

Venture Capital

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 6 July, Official Report, column 10, if he will update the table on venture capital by region for 1992.

Mr. Nelson: The figures are available in the British Venture Capital Association report on investment activity 1992—table 5—a copy of which is available in the House Library.

Empty Properties

Mr. Straw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information his Department collects on the number of vacant dwellings owned by Government Departments, agencies and public bodies.

Mr. Portillo: The Treasury conducts an annual survey of surplus land and dwellings owned by Government. This identifies vacant dwellings under the control of central Government Departments, executive agencies, the national health service, the Metropolitan police and local police authorities but excludes local authorities and non-departmental public bodies.

Intra-community Trade

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the compliance rate to date of traders in statistical submissions for intra-community transactions in January and February; and what percentage was received by the due date.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 14 April 1993]: To date, about 75 per cent. of the total returns expected for January and 68 per cent. of those for February have been received. In both months, about half the returns expected were received by the due date with a further substantial amount in the week following.

NHS Borrowing

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether borrowing by the NHS from private sources will be counted in the public sector borrowing requirement.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 19 April 1993]: The PSBR is defined to include borrowing from private sector sources by all organisations classified to the public sector, including the NHS.

VAT (Fuel)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the proportion of the expected revenue from the imposition of VAT at (a) 8 per cent. and (b) 17·5 per cent. on domestic fuel which will be raised from standing charges paid by retirement pensioners for gas and electricity.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 18 April 1993]: It is estimated that standing charges paid by retirement pensioners on electricity and gas account for around 3 per cent. of total expenditure on domestic fuel and power.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for how long Mr. Jim Robinson has been on the roof of HMP Gartree; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General for the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from I. Dunbar to Mr. Chris Mullin, dated 22 April 1993:

In the absence of Mr. Lewis, the Director General, the Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about Mr. Jim Robinson's roof top protest at Gartree prison.

Mr. Robinson has been on the roof of the central corridor building at Gartree since 23 February. He says that he is protesting about the Home Secretary's decision not to refer his case to the Court of Appeal. Staff are in daily contact with him and continue to monitor his state of health and well being.

The protest is entirely peaceful and, I understand, is not aired against staff at Gartree prison or conditions there: no damage has been caused to the building. Staff who are skilled in negotiating in such incidents are in touch with Mr. Robinson. I very much hope that he will be persuaded to end his protest.

Mr. Leslie Green

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are being taken to reopen the case of Leslie Green, hanged for the murder of Alice Wiltshaw; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: Mr. Green was convicted of the murder of Mrs. Wiltshaw on 5 December 1952. The jury made no recommendation as to mercy, and no appeal was lodged. There is no trace of any recent representations having been made to the Home Office concerning the safety of Mr. Green's conviction, and neither has any new evidence been presented to us which might bear on the matter. Accordingly, there are no current grounds for reopening the case.

Reginald Dudley and Robert Maynard

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration has been given to the safety of the convictions of Reginald Dudley and Robert Maynard; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: Our consideration of the safety of these convictions is at a fairly advanced stage. A final decision will be taken in the light of a recent judgment of the Court of Appeal—not yet available—which it is thought may have a bearing on the new linguistic evidence submitted by solicitors representing Mr. Dudley and Mr. Maynard.

Bosnian Refugees

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Bosnian refugees are being cared for by the Scottish Refugee Council in North Berwick; when they arrived there; what funding arrangement has been made by his Department to provide for these people and to pay the staff at the temporary hostel; for what reasons no money has yet been paid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Nine ex-detainees from the camps in Bosnia and their families—a total of 27 people—are being cared for by the Scottish Refugee Council in a reception centre in North Berwick. They are part of a group who arrived on 31 March under the Government-sponsored scheme to bring to the United Kingdom up to 1000 ex-detainees and their families. The Scottish Refugee Council is being funded by the Home Office to run the reception centre. The council was notified on 6 April that an interim payment of £75,000 would be made pending the outcome of discussions on the budgets. A payable order was dispatched on 16 April. As this had not arrived by 20 April, and in view of the financial difficulties being faced by the Scottish Refugee Council, arrangements have been made for the money to be paid directly into the council's bank account in North Berwick.

Coroners Courts (Jurors)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance is given to the coroners' courts on selection, challenges and declarations of intent by jurors and potential jurors.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The only applicable guidance is Home Office Circular 108/1983 on the Coroners' Juries Act 1983 (Commencement) Order 1983—SI 1983 No. 1454 (c43)—and the Coroners (Amendment) Rules 1983 —SI 1983 No. 1539. This referred, among other matters, to the selection of coroners' juries, which since 1 January 1984, has been made by the same machinery as the selection of jurors for other courts.

European Parliament

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he has taken to enable EC nationals resident in the United Kingdom to vote in the 1994 European Parliament Elections under the terms of the Maastricht treaty.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Once the Maastricht treaty has been ratified in all the member states of the Community, we will bring forward legislative proposals to give effect to the new voting rights.

Fire Brigades (Pay)

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he intends to maintain the fire brigades pay formula in the next reassessment of the pay for firemen;

(2) what assessment he has made of the impact upon the morale of fire service officers of the departure from fire brigade pay formula during the forthcoming pay negotiations.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government are not a party to the firefighters' pay agreement, and have no role in the negotiation of firefighters' pay. My right hon. and learned Friend has however made it clear that he expects the council to comply with the Government's policy on public sector pay that any increases in the 1993 pay round should not exceed 1·5 per cent. and the increase in the fire service's share of total local authority standard spending for the current year has been based on that assumption. It would in our view be manifestly unfair to treat fire service employees differently from other public sector employees in respect of the policy.

Wolds Prison (Director's Salary)

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the director's salary at the Wolds prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Andrew Robathan, dated 20 April 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to write to you in response to your Parliamentary Question about the salary of the Director at Wolds prison.

I am unable to supply the information requested as this is a matter between the Director and his employer.

Ethnic Minorities

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment has been made on the effect of the proposed cuts in section 11 funding on the educational standards achieved by all pupils in schools.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Grant will continue to be available to support all projects approved for funding. The assessment of local needs is primarily a matter for local authorities, but we are in close touch with local authorities and others in order to ensure that the available funding achieves maximum benefit for members of ethnic minorities.

Child Sexual Abuse

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) allegations to the police of, (b) prosecutions for and (c) convictions for child sexual abuse there have been in each year since 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: Information is not collected centrally on the number of allegations of child sexual abuse. A special survey carried out in May 1988—see Home Office statistical bulletin 42/89 "Criminal proceedings for offences involving violence against children, May 1988" —copy available in the Library—showed that about 7 per cent. of all prosecutions for offences of violence against the person or sexual offences were against children aged 16 or under.

The available information on the number of prosecutions and convictions for sexual offences against children in England and Wales for the years 1980 to 1991 is given in the tables. 1992 data will not be available until the autumn. It is not possible from the information held centrally to identify all sex offenders where the victim is known to be aged 16 years or under.

Escaped Prisoners

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners on temporary leave from prison have escaped in each of the last five years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Dr. Robert Spink, dated 20 April 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to write to you in response to your Parliamentary Question asking how many prisoners on temporary leave from prison have escaped in each of the last five years.

Prisoners who are released temporarily on the authority of the governor under Prison Rule 6 are deemed to be lawfully at large. If they fail to return to the prison at the time stipulated by the governor they are then unlawfully at large and classified as temporary release failures but are not considered to have escaped, which requires overcoming physical or mechanical restraint or overpowering escorting staff.

I regret that information on the number of prisoners who are temporary release failures was not recorded centrally prior to 1 January 1990. Information derived from the number of incidents reported to the Incident Management Support Unit, a part of the Directorate of Custody, indicates the following number of prisoners who failed to return from approved temporary release:-

	Numbers
1991	2,290
1992	3,280
[1]1993	791

[1] To 31 March 1993.

The majority of temporary release failures either return to custody or are apprehended.

Prisoner Escort Services

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what provision has been made for private sector employees undertaking court escort duties to be subject to the terms of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974; what training is given in the duties and by whom; and what ratio of staff to prisoner Group 4 provides when escorting prisoners to and from court.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 20 April 1993:

Court escort: Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974; Training given; Ratio of prisoner custody officer staff to prisoners.

The Secretary of State has asked me to write to you directly in reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what provision has been made for private sector employees undertaking court escort duties to be subject to the terms of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974; what training is given in the duties and by whom; and what ratio of staff to prisoner Group 4 provides when escorting prisoners to and from court.

Prisoner Custody Officers (PCOs) are required to be certified as such by the Home Secretary as provided by Section 89 of, and Schedule 10 to, the Criminal Justice Act 1991. PCOs are exempt from the terms of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974, and therefore, like Prison Officers, all previous convictions are taken into consideration in assessing their fitness for certification.

Schedule 3 of the Court Escort Service Operational Specification, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House, sets out the requirement for the training of Prisoner Custody Officers. In the East Midlands and Humberside training has been overseen by the Prisoner Escort Monitor and his deputy.

In general, prisoners are transported in cellular vehicles. As for the Prison Service, the staffing normally consists of a driver, and an escort who is located in the cells area of the vehicle and is able to monitor the prisoners during the journey.

This basic staffing level is the same regardless of vehicle size but can be increased should intelligence deem it necessary. Where non-cellular vehicles are employed, a minimum of one PCO to each pair of prisoners or singleton prisoner, plus one additional PCO must be used.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what requirement there is for those tendering for transporting prisoners or managing prisons to declare (a) contributions to political parties, (b) relationships of directors to members of the Government and (c) membership of directors of organisations which could be construed to be subversive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Tenders are sought from companies which have the required capabilities, facilities and resources to deliver the required services. Evaluation is carried out by a panel consisting of officials and outside experts co-opted for the purpose. Tenderers are not required to declare any information about contributions to political parties, as this does not form part of any evaluation process; it would be against the public interest for the level of contributions to be a factor in the evaluation process.

Similarly, the quality of both personnel and management of tenderers is evaluated on the merits of their experience and skills, and the matter of relationships to members of the Government whether of directors or other staff is irrelevant to the evaluation process, and the information is not sought.

Prior to the issue of invitations to tender, prequalification assessment is carried out on potential bidders. During this process, reference is made to a range of sources and agencies for financial, security and commercial aspects.

Prisoners (Drug Offences)

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison inmates at each prison in Britain have been put on report for drugs offences in (a) 1991, (b) 1992 and (c) 1993 up to the latest available date.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General for the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 20 April 1993:

Drugs offences in prisons

The Secretary of State has asked me to write to you directly in reply to your Parliamentary Question about drugs offences in prisons. The available information for each prison in England and Wales is in the enclosed table and is published annually in "Statistics of offences against prison discipline and punishments, England and Wales" (Tables 9-11 of the 1991 issue, Cm 2066). It relates to actual and attempted drugs offences which were punished under the prison discipline system during 1991, 1992 and the first quarter of 1993. The data for 1992 and 1993 are provisional and subject to revision.

Drugs offences[1] proved at adjudications in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales, 1991 to March 1993: by establishment at which punished.

Gwent Police

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received up to 17 April (a) in favour of and (b) against the amalgamation of the Gwent police force with another force.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 20 April 1993]: Up to 17 April, my right hon. and learned Friend received 13 representations about the future of Gwent constabulary. All these were against its amalgamation with another force. My right hon. and learned Friend made a statement about the future of the police service in England and Wales on 23 March. As he said then, he has no plans at present for any amalgamations.

DEFENCE

Blue Circle Cement

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he was first told of the radioactive contamination of the Blue Circle Cement headquarters at Aldermaston house arising from the Atomic Weapons Establishment at Aldermaston; and what action he has taken over the contamination.

Mr. Aitken: Ministers were first told of the contamination of land at Aldermaston court in April 1991. The contamination is well below levels which could cause any harm to individuals, but the Ministry of Defence is making arrangements with the owner of the land to remove the affected soil.

Russian Forces

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest estimate of the number of Russian forces stationed in (a) Germany, (b) Poland, (c) the Baltic Republics and (d) Georgia.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is estimated that there are approximately 97,000 Russian personnel in Germany, fewer than 4,000 in Poland, 42,000 in the Baltic republics and 20,000 in Georgia. This is a major reduction over the last 12 months.

Ports and Airports

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those ports and airports, or portions of ports and airports, in the United Kingdom over which he has jurisdiction.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The ports in the United Kingdom that are subject to dockyard port orders and are administered by the Secretary of State for Defence are: Portsmouth, Plymouth, Pembroke Dock, Clyde—Holy Loch/Gareloch and Loch Long—Cromarty and Rosyth.

Commercial airport-type operations are conducted at the following military airfields in the United Kingdom for which the Secretary of State for Defence has authority:

RAF Machrihanish (Campbeltown Airport)
RAF Manston (Kent International Airport)
RAF St. Mawgan (Newquay International Airport)
RAF Stornoway (Stornoway Airport)

Munitions Shipments

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements were made by his Department's agencies, or third parties acting on his Department's behalf, for shipping munitions in the eastern Mediterranean in each year from 1981 to 1989.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Properties (Sales)

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many houses owned by his Department are eligible to be bought by their occupants; how many sales have taken place; how many applications are being processed; what proportion of the total these figures represent; and if he will make a statement on his Department's plans for increasing the number sold.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As part of a continuous programme, all Ministry of Defence civilian houses that are surplus to requirements and are not within a secure area may normally be purchased by their occupants. In the last financial year, 360 such sales were completed and 190 further sales are currently under negotiation. The remaining 700 properties are currently being retained to house key staff. The possibility of future sales is being kept under review.

In addition, my Department operates a scheme for selling surplus and vacant married quarters to service personnel at a discount.

Aston Down

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 2 March, Official Report, column 110, what work is currently being carried out by his Department's six civil servants at his Department's establishment at Aston Down; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The six civil servants at Aston Down control and monitor the depot operating contract to ensure that the required standards are maintained by the contractor. They also manage the depot budget and associated buildings and estate matters.

Cambodia

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British military personnel are based in Cambodia; and for what reason.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are currently 122 British service men based in Cambodia. All are serving with the United Nations as part of the United Nations transitional authority in Cambodia.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contribution the United Kingdom is making to mine-clearing operations in Cambodia; where and with which faction the British unit is based; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United Kingdom is providing 14 mine clearance training experts as part of the United Nations transitional authority in Cambodia—UNTAC—including the overall commander of the UNTAC mine clearance training unit—MCTU. The headquarters of the MCTU is in Phnom Penh and British mine clearance training personnel are located at a number of different locations in Cambodia.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many mines have been lifted in Cambodia by the British mine-clearing unit since it commenced its operations.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: United Kingdom personnel are not directly involved in mine clearance in Cambodia. They provide training for indigenous personnel and an element of supervision of mine clearance operations.

Departmental Properties

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 11 January, Official Report, column 633, if he will list the full address of each site with 20 or more dwellings which are vacant.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the empty Ministry of Defence houses in Mantle gardens, Barne Barton, Plymouth.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of the discussions with Devon and Cornwall housing association to acquire empty Ministry of Defence dwellings at Raglan barracks, Mount Wise, Plymouth.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The sale of the former married quarters estate at Raglan barracks has been agreed in principle but the Devon and Cornwall housing association —DCHA—has been unable to secure the necessary funding for completing the purchase. In order to ensure that the empty properties are brought back into early use and with DCHA agreement, the properties have now been placed on the open market.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many dwellings owned by his Ministry are currently unoccupied.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As at 31 March 1993, a total of 9,291 Ministry of Defence-owned houses and flats were unoccupied, of which 9,166 were service married quarters. Of these, 2,153 were either undergoing or awaiting major maintenance work or modernisation, 2,493 were already allocated to service families who were due to move in shortly and 870 were being held for agreed deployment or deployments under study. In addition, some 2,433 vacant service married quarters and 265 civilian houses, most of which were occupied, were in the process of being sold.

Mr. Stephen Kock

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Prime Minister what the official duties of Mr. Stephen Adolphus Kock have been since 1990.

The Prime Minister: None.

Incomes Policy

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to introduce an incomes policy.

The Prime Minister: The Government have no such plans.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 22 April.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 22 April.

The Prime Minister: This morning, I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Serbia (Sanctions)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister to what extent the new sanctions against Serbia Montenegro prevent or limit British nationals, or public relations consultancies based in the United Kingdom, from promoting or representing in the United Kingdom the interests of (a) the Government of Yugoslavia, (b) the Government of Montenegro, (c) the Government of Serbia and (d) the Bosnian Serb leadership.

The Prime Minister: United Nations Security Council resolution 820 of 17 April 1993 prevents British nationals or public relations consultancies based in the United Kingdom from promoting or representing in the United Kingdom the interests of the Governments of Serbia and Montenegro.

Western Goals Institute

Mr. Hain: To ask the Prime Minister which Downing street policy advisers have spoken at meetings of the Western Goals Institute (a) from 1979 to 1990 and (b) since 1990; and what meetings Government Ministers have had with officers of the Western Goals Institute since 1979.

The Prime Minister: The activities of the Western Goals Institute are wholly incompatible with the policies of the Government and the Conservative party. I am not aware of any contacts between Government Ministers or officials and the Western Goals Institute.

South African Conservative Party

Mr. Hain: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions Ministers have had with representatives of the South African Conservative party since 1979.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary visited South Africa in September 1992 as leader of the EC troika. He met leaders of all major groups including the Conservative party. The Government have kept in contact with all the main parties in South Africa in the context of encouraging progress towards a democratic, non-racial constitution.

Bosnia

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what is his current assessment of the results of the London accord on Bosnia of last summer; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The statement on Bosnia resulting from the London conference on the former Yugoslavia in August 1992 set out a number of provisions to be included in a peace settlement and called upon the parties to resume negotiations. The international conference on the former Yugoslavia, under the co-chairmanship of Lord Owen and Mr. Vance, has since worked tirelessly to establish a peace plan building on these principles. The Bosnian Muslims and Croats have signed all the elements of the peace plan. But the Bosnian Serbs continue to refuse to agree the interim government arrangements and the maps. The United Nations Security Council has now adopted a further resolution setting out extremely tough sanctions which will be imposed on the Serbs if they remain intransigent.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what position his Department has taken on the meeting of agriculture Ministers regarding the importation of frogs' legs, with particular reference to Indonesia.

Mr. Curry: EC Council directive 92/118/EEC lays down animal health and public health requires governing trade in and imports into the Community of a wide range of animal products. The directive provides for specific health conditions applicable to trade in, and import of, frogs' legs to be established by the EC standing veterinary committee by 1 January 1994. The Commission has not yet presented a proposal.

Sheep Dips

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library full details of the research supplied by the manufacturers (a) Battle, Hayward and Brewer, (b) Ciba Agriculture, (c) the Cross Vetpharm Group Deosan, (d) Grampian Pharmaceuticals and (e) Pitman-Moore when they applied to his Department to sell sheep dips based on organophosphorus compounds; and if he will make a statement.

Integrated Administration and Control System

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will simplify the annual June returns in view of the amount of information provided by farmers on the IACS form.

Mr. Curry: As my right hon. Friend the Minister made clear in the letter that accompanied the IACS documentation, we are reviewing the forms that farmers are required to complete, including those required for the agricultural census, to see whether they can be made shorter and easier for farmers in future years.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) when he expects the European Commission to complete its report on the application of the integrated administration and control system in the various member states of the European Community;

(2) if he will place in the Library a copy of the European Commission's report on the application of the integrated administration and control system in the various member states of the European Community, as soon as it is available.

Mr. Curry: The European Commission is undertaking a series of visits to examine how the integrated administration and control system is being applied in each EC member state. The visits will not be completed until about the end of July. I intend to press the Commission to provide a report of its findings.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library copies of the forms and related documents sent to farmers and others by other member states of the European Community under the integrated administration and control system.

Mr. Curry: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for North Cornwall (Mr. Tyler) on 2 April 1993, Official Report, col. 456.

Comfrey Products

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which alkaloids with known toxicity have been found in samples of comfrey products sold in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Soames: The following Pyrrolizidine alkaloids have been found in samples of comfrey products sold in the United Kingdom:—

lycopsamine/intermedine;
acetyl lycopsamine/acetyl intermedine;
symphytine/symlandine and;
echimidine isomers.

Chemically similar alkaloids were determined together as indicated. Symphytine has been shown to be positive in carcinogenicity and mutagenicity studies.

International Whaling Commission

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his oral statement of 2 April, Official Report, column 810, what information he has on the attempts being made by some members of the International Whaling Commission to influence the voting in the Commission of some of its less important members; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I am aware of reports, including those from published sources produced by various non-governmental organisations, that suggest that certain members of the Commission have been seeking to unfairly influence others. The Government deplore any action designed to subvert democratic discussion and decision making within international fora such as the International Whaling Commission.

Lambs (Embryotomy)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to enforce the law outlawing embryotomy on lambs in the womb; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Embryotomy is sometimes performed on dead lambs in the womb in the welfare interest of the ewe. However, the Department is not aware of any evidence to suggest that embryotomy is performed on live lambs.

Should anyone have such evidence, it should be reported immediately to the state veterinary service.

Whales

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to support the French proposal to declare the entire southern ocean south of 40 deg S as a sanctuary for whales.

Mr. Curry: As I made clear to the hon. Member in my statement on 2 April 1993, Official Report, column 81[illegible]we are keenly interested in the proposal for an Antarctic whale sanctuary south of 40 deg S. This is due for detailed consideration by the International Whaling Commission when it meets in Japan next month. We have put forward a strong case for twinning this proposal with the as yet unquantified but very important issue of environmental changes, such as global warming, ozone depletion and pollution, and how these may impact on whale stocks. We intend playing a full part in the Commission's further deliberations on this basis.

Veterinary Investigation Centres

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many veterinary investigation centres were in operation in 1979; what is the current number; and how many are projected for 1996.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 21 April 1993]: Since 1979, the veterinary investigation service has undergone two very thorough and carefully considered reviews which were designed to produce significant improvements in the quality, efficiency and cost-effectiveness of the service and to reflect changes in national requirements and methods of operation of the veterinary investigation service. Advances in diagnostic technology, automated analytical equipment, information technology and improvements in road transport systems have meant that a larger proportion of services provided by the veterinary investigation service can now be carried out more efficiently in a reduced number of locations.

As a result of the reviews there are currently 14 full veterinary investigation centres in operation and following the amalgamation of Reading and Winchester centres on the Winchester site in mid-1994 it is expected that 13 full veterinary investigation centres will be in operation in 1996. The position of the veterinary investigation service unit at Truro will be reviewed in the interim period. In 1979 there were 25 veterinary investigation centres in operation.

Agriculture and Food Research Council

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the amounts spent by his Department on the Agriculture and Food Research Council for each year since 1978-79 to 1992-93 in (a) cash and (b) constant prices.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 21 April 1993]: Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food commissions with the Agriculture and Food Research Council, together with my Department's total expenditure on research and development, in both cash and constant prices, are set out in the table.

	Commissions with the Agriculture and Food Research Council		Total research and development expenditure

NORTHERN IRELAND

Manufacturing Industry

11. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what specific steps he is taking to assist manufacturing industry in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Atkins: Government provide a wide range of assistance, financial and other, to manufacturing industry in Northern Ireland through the Department of Economic Development and its businesses. The various programmes of assistance are designed to encourage inward investment, to promote the competitiveness of local industry, to build up management and work force skills and to support innovation.

Talks

12. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the latest position over talks regarding Northern Ireland.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The Government trust that further political talks will commence as soon as practicable, and I am in contact with the other talks participants about that. A fair and widely acceptable political accommodation in relation to Northern Ireland would bring very substantial benefits to all the people of Northern Ireland, and more generally.

Electricity

13. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has to assist electricity users in the Province; and if he will make a statement.

25. Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what further steps he intends to take to reduce the cost of electricity in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. and learned Friend announced on 25 March that he had agreed to additional relief on prices for monthly billed industrial users.

Public Expenditure

14. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total amount of public expenditure incurred in 1992-93 in Northern Ireland; and what proportion of this was spent through the Northern Ireland Office.

Mr. Mates: The estimated outturn for 1992-93 is £7,092 million. Of this total, the Northern Ireland Office estimated outturn is £857 million.

Race Relations Legislation

15. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to extend race relations legislation to cover Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: On 16 December 1992, my right hon. and learned Friend published a consultative document which seeks views on the scope for legislation on racial discrimination and on any additional action which the Government might take to promote equity of treatment for ethnic groups in Northern Ireland. The consultation period ends on 30 April and Government will then consider carefully the various views expressed and will publish their findings.

"Making Londonderry Work"

16. Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much his Department is spending on the "Making Londonderry Work" campaign; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The Department is spending £3·064 million on the "Making Londonderry Work" campaign in the 1993-94 financial year. This involves an intensified town centre development programme to restore the built environment, a community action programme to improve the social, economic and environmental conditions of people in the most disadvantaged areas of the city and a promotional strategy emphasising the more positive aspects of life in Londonderry. By the end of March 1994, a total of almost £15 million will have been spent on this initiative.

Security

17. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on security in Northern Ireland.

24. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a further statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: Since my hon. Friend answered a similar question on 18 March seven murders have occured in circumstances to which my hon. Friend's question relates. All the victims were civilians.

The security forces will continue to oppose all terrorism implacably, with the full support of the Government. It is our overriding purpose to defeat and eradicate all terrorism, and we shall do all in our power to encourage the practical help of the public, who undoubtedly share our concern.

19. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received about the future security of Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mates: I frequently receive representations from a wide range of bodies and individuals on the security of Northern Ireland. These representations are carefully considered.

Our security policy is founded on the maintenance of the rule of law, the defence of democratic principles against those who try to promote political objectives by violence or threat of violence, and the creation of conditions in Northern Ireland in which a just, peaceful and prosperous society can develop. It is our first priority to eradicate terrorism from whatever quarter it comes; for so long as violence continues, it will be met with a firm and resolute response.

Homelessness

18. Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the latest numbers of people who are homeless in Northern Ireland; and what action his Department is taking.

Mr. Atkins: It is not possible to give a figure for the total number of homeless people in Northern Ireland at any specific point in time. However, I am advised by the chief executive of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive that at 6 April 1993 the number of households living in temporary accommodation secured for them under the homeless provisions of the Housing (Northern Ireland) Order 1988 was 327.

The Housing Executive has statutory responsibility for dealing with homelessness and arranges both temporary and permanent accommodation throughout Northern Ireland. Its housing selection scheme gives top priority particularly to families accepted as homeless. In addition, the Housing Executive and other local bodies provide extensive advice to those who are homeless, or are threatened with homelessness.

Standard Assessment Tasks

20. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the progress of SATs at key stages 1 to 4.

Mr. Hanley: At key stages 1 to 3 assessment will be, as in England and Wales, by a combination of teacher assessment and external tests. In Northern Ireland these tests are called common assessment instruments. Assessments at key stages 2, aged 11, and 3 (aged 14) are being piloted this year. The key stage 2 pilot CAIs, in English, mathematics and Irish in Irish-medium schools, were administered in mid-February; the key stage 3 pilot CAIs, in English, mathematics and science, will be administered in May. The pilot arrangements this year are being fully evaluated by NISEAC, and whilst the findings are not yet available early feedback indicates that schools did not find the key stage 2 CAIs to be as onerous as expected.

The key stage 1 CAIs, in English, mathematics and Irish in Irish-medium schools, will be piloted next year. Assessment at key stage 4 will be mainly via GCSE: the first year of the new arrangements at key stage 4 will be in 1995.

Republic (Relations)

21. Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has any plans to meet representatives of the Irish Government to discuss the relationship between the Province and the Republic.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I am in frequent contact with Irish Ministers, and expect to meet them again shortly at a meeting of the intergovernmental conference.

Water Privatisation

22. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he intends to introduce domestic water meter trials in any areas of Northern Ireland prior to the Government's privatisation of water services.

Mr. Atkins: The Department of the Environment has since 1992 been installing meters in randomly selected domestic properties in Northern Ireland. This is a sampling exercise to obtain an assessment of the rate of domestic water consumption. The assessment will be used as a basis for estimating future domestic needs as part of an overall water resource strategy for Northern Ireland. There are no plans to introduce other domestic water meter trials.

Northern Ireland Sports Council

23. Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to reform the Northern Ireland Sports Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave the hon. Member for Belfast, East (Mr. Robinson) on 14 April, Official Report, columns 635-36.

Northern Ireland Care Homes Association

26. Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he or his colleagues have met recently representatives of the Northern Ireland Care Homes Association; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Senior officials in the Department of Health and Social Services have met representatives of the association on several occasions, most recently on 10 March 1993 at the request of my noble Friend Lord Arran.

Unemployment

27. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the current level of unemployment in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Atkins: At 11 March 1993, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 106,016 unemployed claimants in Northern Ireland, representing 14·1 per cent. of the work force.

Political Parties (Meetings)

28. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent meeting he has had with representatives of political parties in Ireland regarding the future of Northern Ireland.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I am in frequent contact with representatives of the main constitutional parties in Northern Ireland, and with the Irish Government, over the prospects for future political talks.

Invalidity Benefit

29. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the exercise designed to identify all those women whose invalidity benefit was reduced at the age of 60 years has been completed; what is the estimated number of such women; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The exercise to identify women whose invalidity benefit was reduced at age 60 has been completed. The estimated number of such women is 2,700. A case involving the payment of invalidity benefit to women aged 60 to 64 is at present with the Court of Appeal in England, but no date has been set for the hearing. The Department of Health and Social Services will give full consideration to the judgment of the Court of Appeal when it is delivered.

Irish Constitution

30. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions he has had with the Irish Government about the repeal of articles 2 and 3 of the Irish constitution.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I have met the Irish Tanaiste, Foreign Minister, Mr. Spring, several times since his taking office, and on each occasion constitutional issues were among the subjects we discussed.

Rural Development Council

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland at which locations there are projects in which the Rural Development Council is involved; and at which locations the Rural Development Council is considering future projects.

Mid-Ulster Enterprises (Creggan Ltd.), Omagh, Co. Tyrone.
The Seeconnel Initiative, Castlewellan, Co. Down.
South West Fermanagh Development Organisation Ltd.

Further applications under the LEADER programme are being considered by the council, but no final decisions have yet been taken.

The Rural Development Council is also assisting 120 projects under the farm diversification action research programme which it operates in South Armagh and West Fermanagh on behalf of the International Fund for Ireland.

Terrorists

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons wanted by the police in Northern Ireland in connection with (a) terrorist murders and (b) other terrorist offences are now reported to be in the Republic of Ireland; how many in other foreign countries; what requests for extradition have been made; and what proceedings have been started under the criminal law jurisdiction legislation.

Mr. Mates: It is not possible to give meaningful figures in relation to the first part of the question. We are currently seeking the extradition of three persons from the United States to Northern Ireland and one person from the Republic of Ireland to Northern Ireland. There are two prosecutions proceeding under the Criminal Law (Jurisdiction) Act.

Armed Robberies

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many armed robberies took place in Northern Ireland in each year since 1990; and what was the total amount stolen in each year.

Number of armed robberies[1]	579	686	866
Amount stolen[2] (£ million)	1·5	1·7	2·7

[1] Including attempted armed robberies.
[2] Approximately.

Stolen Cars

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cars were stolen in Northern Ireland in each year since 1990.

Mr. Mates: Police statistics on vehicle theft do not distinguish between cars and other vehicles. The total number of vehicles stolen was 7,026 in 1990, 8,565 in 1991 and 9,175 in 1992.

University Funding

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the annual cost to the Government of funding for (a) Queen's university, Belfast and (b) the University of Ulster.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the size of Northern Ireland civil service on 1 January in each year since 1981.

Mr. Mates: Northern Ireland civil service staff in post figures at 1 April for the years 1981-93 are as follows:

Mr. Mates: Provisional figures for the main areas of public sector debt—housing, rates, water, electricity and gas supplies—currently put the level of such debt at some £29·6 million. This represents a decrease of £4·1 million from 31 March 1991. Information for May 1991 is not available.

Health and Social Services Boards

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the budgetary allocation to each of the health and social services boards in Northern Ireland for the 1993-94 financial year.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Elderly People

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the consequences for retirement pensioners of the United Kingdom's opt-out from the social chapter.

Miss Widdecombe: Assuming the Maastricht treaty is ratified, the protocol on social policy which has annexed to it an agreement on social policy—also known as the social chapter—between the other 11 member states of the European Community will come into effect. The United Kingdom's negotiated exclusion from this agreement is not expected to result in any direct consequences for retirement pensioners.

European Court Judgment

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans there are to seek an early listing of Commissioners' decision C. S. 27/91 (Mrs. Graham) at the Court of Appeal following the European Court of Justice judgment in case C328/91; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Officials of the Court of Appeal have already contacted the Department with a view to arranging the listing of this case.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether, in the case of Mrs. Vera Vogel, on behalf of the late Mrs. Ivy Garrett, ZP 379254 C (a) the letter from Mrs. S. Scholfield dated 9 March or (b) the letter dated 12 March from the attendance allowance unit represents the correct position.

Mr. Scott: The administration of attendance allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write shortly to my hon. Friend and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from David Riggs to Mr. Robert Jones, dated 2 April 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is the responsibility of Mr. Michael Bichard to answer questions about relevant operational matters. However, as Mr. Bichard is away at the moment I am replying on his behalf to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking whether, in the case of Mrs. Vera Vogel, acting on behalf of the late Mrs. Ivy Garrett, ZP379254C (a) the letter from Mrs. S. Scholfield dated 9 March or (b) the letter dated 12 March from the Attendance Allowance Unit represents the correct position.

Following Mrs. Garrett's death, Mrs. Vogel who is Mrs. Garrett's daughter has been in correspondence with the Attendance Allowance Unit in Blackpool to determine whether her late mother could establish either statutory or extra-statutory title payment to Attendance Allowance (AA).

The letters to which you mention were with regard to this subject but were for entirely different purposes. Due to the confidential nature of this matter I have written to you separately and in greater detail about it.

I hope that you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Income Support

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the most recently available figure for the income support live load of each of his Department's offices in Northamptonshire; and what are the costs involved.

Mr. Burt: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. William Powell, dated 20 April 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the most recently available figure for the Income Support live load of each of his Department's offices in Northamptonshire; and what are the costs involved.

The Benefits Agency offices covering Northamptonshire are Corby, Northampton and Wellingborough. I have given below the latest figures for the Income Support live load by office. The information has been provided by the Income Support Management Information Statistics. Information regarding the costs of benefit involved are not available. This is because information if only held on a National basis and it is not possible to estimate costs for local areas.

Office	Live Load
Corby	6,051
Northampton	25,576
Wellingborough	16,057

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this letter will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Invalidity Benefit

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the Benefits Agency has now completed its exercise to identify those women in receipt of invalidity benefit whose benefit was reduced at age 60 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The administration of invalidity benefit is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Dr. Norman A. Godman, dated 21 April 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking if the Benefits Agency has now completed its exercise to identify those women in receipt of Invalidity Benefit whose benefit was reduced at age 60 years.

On 1 April 1992 the Social Security Commissioner decided that Invalidity Benefit rules linked to pension age breach the EC Equal Treatment Directive; that women aged 60-64 should receive standard rate invalidity Benefit instead of the Retirement Pension rate; and that women should receive Invalidity Allowance if incapacity begins between 55 and 59 years of age.

The Chief Adjudication Officer and Secretary of State (jointly) have appealed against this decision to the Court of Appeal. Meanwhile payment of any additional benefit resulting from the Commissioner's decision is being suspended by the Secretary of State until this appeal has been resolved.

Instructions have been issued to District Offices to identify the women affected by the Commissioner's decision. This will enable the Agency to act promptly once the decision of the Court of Appeal is known. The Agency's initial estimate of the numbers of cases involved is a maximum of 82,500. The exercise to identify the cases and establish a more accurate figure is continuing but should be concluded shortly.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

EMPLOYMENT

Social Affairs and Labour Council

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what matters will be discussed at the next meeting of the EC Social Affairs and Labour Council; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The agenda for the next meeting of the EC Labour and Social Affairs Council on 1 June has not yet been fixed.

However, at the last meeting on 6 April, the Danish presidency indicated that it hoped to bring the proposals for directives on European works councils, on the protection of young people at work, and on working time to that meeting.

Employment Creation

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment her Department has made as to a link between improved environmental protection and employment creation.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Department has made no such assessment.

May Day Holiday

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what representations she has received on the Government's proposals to end the May day holiday;

(2) when she expects to introduce legislation to end the May day holiday.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: An announcement will be made in due course.

Unemployment Benefit Disqualification

Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list for each standard region and for the United Kingdom as a whole, for the quarter to December 1992, the number of claimants subject to unemployment benefit disqualification broken down on the same basis as in the answer of 26 March, Official Report, columns 849-51.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. M. Fogden to Ms Angela Eagle, dated 22 April 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to her about the number of claimants subject to unemployment benefit disqualifications listed for the quarter to December 1992 for each standard region and for the United Kingdom as a whole. This is something which falls within the responsibilities she has delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The tables attached to my reply of 26 March showing the number of claimants subject to unemployment benefit disqualification were compiled in the form requested by means of a special exercise. This information is, in fact, available in a published document, the "Analysis of Adjudication Officers' Decisions", copies of which are held in the Library. The analysis for the quarter ending 31 December 1992, for each standard region and for Great Britain as whole, has been published and, as indicated in Mr. Turner's reply of 2 April, copies were sent to the Library on 29 March.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Explosives

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the implications of the European directive on explosives for civil uses for individuals who make their own ammunition for sporting or recreational purposes.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Health and Safety Commission is considering how to implement this directive with a view to putting proposals to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State in the summer.

This directive is primarily concerned with the safety of explosives for civil uses. It also covers controls on the movement of explosives which require the recipient to obtain prior approval from a competent authority. This provision was originally intended to address the loss of systematic checks of imports, previously undertaken by Customs and Excise, following the abolition of border controls on 31 December 1992.

As finally agreed, the directive also applies to movements of explosives within member states, and it does not exempt individuals acquiring components of small arms ammunition for sporting and recreational purposes. However, the Government do not believe that transfer of components of small arms ammunition to and by individuals for their own sporting or recreational purposes was intended to be covered by this directive.

As soon as the United Kingdom identified this problem it was brought to the attention of the European Commission, which has since agreed, in a minutes statement made when the directive was finally adopted at the Internal Market Council on 5 April 1993, that it will urgently consider what measures can be adopted to resolve the problem. In the meantime the United Kingdom will be seeking the support of other member states.

Taking the minutes statement made by the Commission into account, and subject to HSC's advice, the Government are not at present proposing to apply the approval to transfer requirements to such individuals in Great Britain.

TRANSPORT

Traffic Pollution

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce measures to reduce the noise and pollution resulting from increases in the amount of road traffic.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: There is a wide range of measures already in place or planned which will reduce noise and pollution from road traffic. These include the recently adopted European Commission directive 92/93, which will introduce lower noise limits for cars, lorries and coaches by 1995. Lower noise limits for motor cycles are also being considered in the European Community.

Tight new emission standards for both cars and lorries throughout the European Community are coming in over the next few years. Since the beginning of this year most new cars have to be fitted with catalytic converters. These reduce harmful emissions by about 80 per cent.

The MOT emissions check introduced for cars in November 1991 is helping to reduce emissions of carbon monoxide and hydrocarbons. Since 1 September there has been a metered smoke test in the annual test for heavy diesels.

The Government have recently issued a consultative document seeking views on ways of limiting CO_2 emissions. Transport must certainly play its part. We are particularly keen to encourage more economical use of fuel by road transport. We have already taken steps to do this. In the Budget speech, the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced a 10 per cent. increase in road fuel duties. He also announced that in future Budgets he will increase duty on all road fuels by at least 3 per cent. in real terms. We are also discussing with our EC partners how best to encourage manufacturers to produce more fuel efficient cars.

Measures to reduce congestion in urban areas will also help—these involve a mix of traffic management, parking controls and better public transport. We are also looking at a number of other initiatives which could have the effect, in the longer term, of reducing the rate of traffic growth including road pricing in urban areas and using the planning system to reduce the need for travel.

British Rail

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of British Rail to discuss the level of spending on maintenance of BR track.

Mr. Freeman: The Secretary of State regularly meets the BR chairman and board members to discuss a wide range of matters relating to the railways. It is for the board to decide on its expenditure on track maintenance within the overall external financing limit.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 31 March, Official Report, column 301, what estimate he has made about the number of miles of British Rail track which are, or are likely to be, subject to speed restrictions caused by reduced maintenance resulting from reductions in the planned level of public service obligation grant in 1993-94.

Mr. Freeman: Speed restrictions, for maintenance and other reasons, are constantly changing. It is therefore not possible to give any estimate of such restrictions for 1993-94.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what conclusions he has come to about liability for injuries caused by railway accidents after rail privatisation.

Mr. Freeman: I have concluded that the basis of liability—negligence—should be the same as it is for all transport accidents so as not to disadvantage rail in relation to competing modes of transport. I shall shortly appoint insurance advisers to make recomendations about effective insurance arrangements in the industry, taking into account the position on liability. Operators will be required by licence to have in place adequate insurance.

EMPLOYMENT

Training Consultants

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will issue guidance as to the means by which training consultants gather information about their past students, in connection with Government-funded schemes.

Mr. McLoughlin: Training and enterprise councils, which deliver Government-funded training locally, are private companies and are free to gather information about students in the manner that best suits local circumstances.

We have issued a training and enterprise council management information guide, which may be passed on to training providers and specifies when information about past students should be gathered.

Training Companies

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will bring forward proposals to ban the practice of a training company offering financial rewards to former trainees on an employment training course who inform them that they now have a job.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Employment Department partly funds training and enterprise councils by payments for trainees who gain jobs after leaving ET. TECs and their training providers are free to use their own methods to gather information about the employment status of former trainees so that they can claim these payments. We do not intend to ban the offer of financial rewards to former trainees as an incentive to provide this information.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Forestry

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will make a statement on the findings of the recently published evaluation of six forestry projects funded by the Overseas Development Administration and the Commonwealth Development Corporation;

(2) if he plans to take action on the basis of conclusions reached in the recent evaluation of British Government-funded forestry projects in developing countries.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: A copy of the recently published evaluation synthesis report on six forestry projects, including one co-funded by the Commonwealth Development Corporation, was placed in the Library of the House earlier this year, together with copies of the individual evaluation reports.

Independent consultants played major roles in each of the individual project evaluations and in the evaluation synthesis study. The evaluators judged five of the projects to be partially successful and the sixth successful. Large areas of trees were successfully established and the environmental impact was generally positive. But institutional achievements were mixed and rarely sustainable, while there were also some problems with timber utilisation. These projects were started during the 1970s and early 1980s and lessons drawn from the evaluations are being applied to current programmes.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he plans to publish the results of work to expand and revise the World Conservation Monitoring Centre's database on timber tree species of conservation concern.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have no plans to publish this work, which forms part of a continuing process of developing the World Conservation Monitoring Centre's timber database. I shall place a copy of WCMC's report to ODA in the Library of the House.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many environmental impact assessments have been completed in the last 12 months with respect to Overseas Development Administration or CDC-funded forestry projects.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Environmental appraisal is a standard element in the examination of all project proposals following the procedures set out in the Overseas Development Administration's "Manual of Environmental Appraisal", a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Full environmental impact assessments have been undertaken on one ODA and one CDC forestry project in the last year.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the United Kingdom's position with respect to the renegotiation of the international tropical timber agreement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Along with other tropical timber-consuming countries, the United Kingdom has proposed focussing the objectives of the new agreementt on the sustainable production of tropical timber. We have also proposed measures to improve the operational performance of the International Tropical Timber Organisation. We aim to enhance its capacity to meet its target for all internationally traded tropical timber to come from sustainable sources by the year 2000.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will provide details of the funding so far allocated to implement the tropical forestry action plan from loan compared to grant sources.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: All the Overseas Development Administration's aid related to the tropical forestry action programme is provided on grant terms.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what relationship exists between the Overseas Development Administration project to expand and revise the World Conservation Monitoring Centre's database on threatened timber species and work funded by the Government of Japan into the conservation status of trees species of conservation concern carried out under the auspices of the same organisation.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The work financed by the Overseas Development Administration was undertaken as preparation for the proposed future development of the initial study which was financed by the Government of Japan. The results were considered at a workshop held in Cambridge in March, under the auspices of the International Tropical Timber Organisation, on methodologies for the assessment of the commercial and biological conservation status of tropical timber trees. The future of this work will be discussed at the International Tropical Timber Council meeting in Kuala Lumpur next month.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will commit long-term funding to support for monitoring of timber species of conservation concern.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are considering providing funds for this purpose.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement regarding progress made in Geneva on the renegotiation of the international tropical timber agreement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Progress is slow. A further meeting will take place from 21 to 25 June.

El Salvador

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the World bank consultative group meeting on El Salvador on 1 April in Paris.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Kingdom was not represented at the World Bank consultative group meeting on El Salvador. We understand that representatives pledged their continuing support for El Salvador's peace process and economy recovery, and indicated pledges totalling some $800 million for 1993.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Market Testing

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the introduction of market testing throughout the civil service: and what effect this will have on current employees' prospects.

Mr. Waldegrave: The "Citizen's Charter First Report", Cmd 2101, published in November 1992, set out the Government's programme for market testing in central Government up to September 1993. Rolling programmes for subsequent years are being prepared. Generally, the opportunity to bid will be given to employees currently doing the work concerned. The effect on their employment prospects will depend on the individual circumstances of each market test, including their success in winning the work and, where the work is awarded to outside contractors, to contractors' own plans, as well as the scope for redeployment within the civil service.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Car Unlocking Devices

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to counter the use of electronic devices which record and can replicate remote control car unlocking systems; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: We are aware that devices which are capable of recording and replicating remote controlled car locking systems have recently been advertised on the British market. We are actively looking into their availability and effectiveness with a view to assessing what action may be required.

The motor manufacturers and the vehicle security industry are also aware of the capabilities of these devices and are working to improve the security of their products to counter the threat posed by this technology.

It may reassure my hon. Friend to know that it is already an offence under section 25 of the Theft Act 1968 to carry equipment for use in any burglary or theft. This would cover the use of these particular devices by car thieves and, upon conviction, an offender is liable to imprisonment for up to three years.

Group 4 Security

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will publish the conclusions of the inquiry his Department has required from Group 4 into escapes from their prison escort services;

(2) what conclusions he has drawn from the recent prison escort escapes from those in the custody of Group 4 Security; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the prison service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tony Blair, dated April 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions about escapes by prisoners in the custody of Group 4 Court Services Limited.

The Prisoner Escort Monitor has yet to complete the detailed investigations into these escapes. When he has done so, I shall write to you again.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if the contract with Group 4 to manage the Wolds prison contains any clause prohibiting the employment of convicted criminals; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if the prisoner transportation contract with Group 4 contains a clause prohibiting the employment of convicted criminals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the prison service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated April 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to write to you directly in reply to your recent Parliament Questions asking if the contracts with Group 4 on prisoner transportation and the management of the Wolds Prison contain a clause prohibiting the employment of convicted criminals.

The contracts with Group 4 do not contain such a clause, but they do require all Prisoner Custody Officers (PCOs) to be certified by the Home Secretary in accordance with Section 89 of, and Schedule 10 to, the Criminal Justice Act 1991. PCOs are exempt from the terms of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974, and therefore, like Prison Officers, all previous convictions are taken into consideration in assessing their fitness for certification and the same assessment criteria apply.

Escaped Prisoners

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to prevent dangerous prisoners from escaping while on temporary leave from prison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the prison service who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Dr. Robert Spink, dated 22 April 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to write to you in response to your Parliamentary Question asking what steps are taken to prevent dangerous prisoners from escaping while on temporary leave from prison.

Any prisoner who presents a risk to public safety either by absconding or re-offending will not be granted temporary release. Before granting an application to be released temporarily for any purpose a very careful and detailed assessment is made of the risk involved. Any prisoner who has been temporarily released may also be recalled to prison at any time whether the conditions of his licence have been broken or not.

Guidance on the procedures and arrangements for granting temporary release are set out in Circular Instructions 12/1988 (for young offenders), 36/1989 (for adult prisoners) and 43/1992 (home leave), copies of which are in the Library.

Refugees

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy regarding the issuing of United Kingdom travel documents to refugees on exceptional leave to remain.

Mr. Charles Wardle: People who have been refused asylum in the United Kingdom but granted exceptional leave to remain, in common with others who are not settled here, have no entitlement to Home Office travel documents. However, it is our practice to look at such applications sympathetically and to issue a certificate of identity to those who can show that they are unable to obtain a passport from their own authorities.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many refugees currently in the United Kingdom have been granted exceptional leave to remain; what proportion of these were issued with brown United Kingdom travel documents in (a) 1990, (bv) 1991 and (c) 1992; and if he will analyse these figures by ethnic origin.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The available information is that during the years 1986-92 a total of 29,000 asylum applicants, excluding dependants, not recognised as refugees were granted exceptional leave. Information on the number who have left the United Kingdom, or been granted leave to stay on another basis, is not readily available.

Information on the number and nationalities of these cases issued with a certificate of identity is not available. Persons with exceptional leave are not identified separately in the statistics of issues of these certificates.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many metropolitan police officers made applications to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board for injuries incurred on duty since 1987; and how much was paid each year;

(2) what percentages of total awards made by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board in each year since 1987 were made to (a) police and (b) non-police.

Mr. Jack: I regret that the available records do not separately identify applications from, or payments made to, the police or other occupational groups.

Metropolitan Police Vehicles

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many metropolitan police vehicles were damaged beyond repair as a result of chasing suspect vehicles in each year since 1987; and what were the costs of their replacement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information is not held in the form requested.

Prisoner Transfers

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the average number of prisoners being transferred from prison to court and from police station to court in the Greater London area on any day when the courts are sitting;

(2) how many prisoners in custody were transferred between police stations and prisons to the London courts in each year since 1988.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the prison service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Jeremy Corbyn, dated 22 April 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions about the numbers of prisoners escorted to the London courts.

I am afraid that the information which you requested is collected neither centrally nor routinely by the establishments now responsible for this work. We are in the process of collecting such information covering the last few months for inclusion in the invitation to tender for the court escort service in London, but as yet this work is incomplete. Our best guess is that in excess of 200,000 prisoner movements to and from court are performed each year.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners escaped from custody whilst being transferred from police stations and prisons to courts in the Greater London area in each year since 1988.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the prison service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Jeremy Corbyn, dated 23 April 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked to me to reply to your Parliamentary Question asking how many prisoners escaped from custody whilst being transferred from police stations and prisons to courts in the Greater London area in 1988, 1989, 1990, 1991 and 1992.

I regret that information is not available centrally on escapes from escorts staffed by the police. This information could only be gathered at disproportionate cost. The information provided relates only to escorts staffed by the Prison Service. Additionally, this information is recorded against individual prison establishments and not by geographical area. The information relates to court escorts manned by the Greater London prisons and refers to escapes between 20 June 1988 and 31 December 1992. This information was not collected centrally until June 1988.

Escapes from court escort (London Prisons)

	Number
1988	4
1989	3
1990	6
1991	12
1992	8

The information above is derived from incidents reported to the Incident Management Support Unit, a part of the Directorate of Custody.

Civil Damages Claims

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much has been paid from the Metropolitan police fund to members of the public in settlement of civil damages claims for (a) false imprisonment, (b) assault and (c) malicious prosecution in each year since 1987; and for each category how many cases were (i) settled out of court and (ii) settled at trial.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information is not available in the form requested.

Sam Kulasingham and Prem Sivalingham

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what considerations have been given in to the safety of the convictions of Sam Kulasingham and Prem Sivalingham; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: Following a number of representations about the safety of these convictions, Essex police were asked to make some further inquiries. A report was received last month. It is now being considered, together with all other relevant factors, in order that my right hon. and learned Friend may decide whether grounds exist for a reference back to the Court of Appeal.

Betting Office Association

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how far the application of the British Betting Office Association for membership of the Bookmakers' committee of the levy board has progressed.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The association's request for representation on the Bookmakers committee is under consideration. We will write to the association quite soon.

EDUCATION

Primary Education

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was spent per primary school pupil in England in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what the comparable figure was in 1978-79, at constant prices.

Mr. Forth: Figures for expenditure on nursery and primary pupils are not collected separately. In 1990-91, the latest year for which figures on actual spending are available, average spending per pupil in nursery and primary schools in England was £1,437 in 1992-93 prices. This compares to £1,131 for 1978-79 in 1992-93 prices. For 1991-92, it is estimated to rise to £1,467, also in 1992-93 prices. This figure includes estimates of expenditure for six LEAs and is subject to final checking by the Department of the Environment and the Department for Education.

Pupils, Staffordshire

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) how many children were being educated in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in Staffordshire in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what the comparable figures were in 1978-79;

(2) what was the pupil-teacher ratio in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in Staffordshire in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what the comparable figures were in 1978-79.

Mr. Forth: Information on pupils and pupil: teacher ratios in maintained schools in Staffordshire local education authority in 1979 and 1992 is shown in the table.

Pupils and pupil: teacher ratios in maintained primary and secondary schools in Staffordshire LEA: 1979 and 1992

Secondary	86,670	68,192	16·72	16·00

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much was spent by Staffordshire county council on education in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what the comparable figure was in 1978-79, at constant prices.

Mr. Forth: In 1990-91, the latest year for which figures on actual spending are available, spending on education in Staffordshire was £387·382 million, and estimated for 1991-92, £411·589 million at 1992-93 prices. In 1978-79, Staffordshire spent, at 1992-93 prices, £371·209 million on a comparable basis. This figure excludes expenditure on what is now Staffordshire university.

Secondary Pupils

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much was spent per secondary school pupil in England in the most recent year for which figures were available; and what the comparable figure was in 1978-79, at constant prices.

Mr. Forth: In 1990-91, the latest year for which figures on actual spending are available, spending per pupil in secondary schools in England was £2,170 in 1992-93 prices. This compares to £1,742 for 1978-79, in 1992-93 prices. For 1991-92, it is estimated to rise to £2,273, also in 1992-93 prices. This figure includes estimates of expenditure for six LEAs and is subject to final checking by the Department of the Environment and the Department for Education.

Spending

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much was spent per (a) primary and (b) secondary school pupil in each of the local education authorities in England and in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what the comparable figures were in 1978-79, at constant prices.

Mr. Forth: Figures for expenditure on nursery and primary pupils are not collected separately. Spending per pupil for each English local education authority in nursery and primary schools combined and in secondary schools in 1978-79 and 1991-92 at 1992-93 prices is as shown in the table. The figures for 1991-92 are subject to final checking by the Department of the Environment and the Department of Education.

Fitzherbert School, Brighton

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the cost to date of providing security at the former Fitzherbert school, Brighton; and which security firm has been awarded the contract.

Mr. Forth: The cost to date of security at the former Fitzherbert school, Brighton has been some £199,000. Security is provided by Group 4 Total Security Limited.

Law Society Finals Course

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will extend the mandatory grant regulations so as to cover the Law Society finals course; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: No. The Government have no present plans to change the scope of the Education Act 1962. That Act requires local education authorities to make mandatory awards only in respect of attendance on designated full-time courses up to first degree level and on designated initial teacher training courses. It also permits authorities to make discretionary awards for other courses, subject to certain exclusions. Where postgraduate law courses are eligible for discretionary awards, the decision whether to make such an award is a matter for the authority.

National Exclusions Reporting System

Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will give details of the final analysis of the information obtained over the two years of the national exclusions reporting system.

Mr. Forth: Analysis of the returns made to the Department under NERS over the two-year period 1990-92 shows that a total of 6,743 permanent exclusions were reported; there was an increase from 2,910 in year one to 3,833 in year two; exclusions in the primary phase accounted for 13 per cent. of the total in year one and 14 per cent. in year two; pupils with statements of special educational needs accounted for 12·5 per cent. of the total in year one and 15 per cent. in year two; many more boys than girls were excluded—a ratio of 4:1 in year one and 5:1 in year two; 15 was the peak age for exclusions for both boys and girls; Afro-Caribbean pupils appeared to be disproportionately represented within the excluded pupil population—8·1 per cent. of the overall total in year one and 8·5 per cent. in year two; aggression against other pupils and disobedience in various forms were the main reasons for pupils being excluded; decisions taken to exclude a pupil were not often over-turned. Over the two years, 170 decisions taken by heads to exclude pupil permanently were reversed by local education authorities and 160 by governors and 213 parental appeals were lodged, of which 37 were successful; information about the alternative educational provision made for excluded pupils was not always included in the returns. Such information as was made available shows that 45 per cent. of those permanently excluded were said to be receiving home tuition, 30 per cent. had secured a place in another mainstream school, 19 per cent. were in units, and 6 per cent. had gone to a special school or changed special school: there were often lengthy delays in completing exclusion procedures and in securing alternative educational provision for permanently excluded pupils, either by admission to another school or otherwise.

PRIME MINISTER

Taxation

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 18 March, Official Report, column 325, why no information on the potential effects of a change of the law on taxing United Kingdom assets of overseas owners is available.

The Prime Minister: It is not practicable for the Inland Revenue to maintain information on all the very wide range of changes which could, in theory, be made to the tax system.

Nuclear Materials

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will set out responsibilities of each Government Department regarding the import and export of (a) plutonium and (b) other nuclear materials, to and from the United Kingdom.

The Prime Minister: The Department of Trade and Industry is responsible for the issuing of import and export licences for controlled plutonium and other specified nuclear materials. The controls are implemented under the Import, Export and Customs Powers (Defence) Act 1939 as amended by the Import and Export Act 1990. The current controls are contained in the Import of Goods (Control) Order 1954 and the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1992. HM Customs and Excise are responsible for taking action as necessary under the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979 to enforce these controls.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Items in Lieu of Tax

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the objects and property accepted in satisfaction of inheritance tax during the financial year ended 31 March; and if, in listing these, he will specify (a) the amount of tax satisfied in each case, (b) whether any offers of objects carried conditions as to destination, (c) the dates in each case of the recommendations received by him from the Museums and Galleries Commission for the acceptance of objects, (d) the total for the financial year of the tax thus satisfied and (e) how much of this total was covered in the public accounts by means of resort to the reserve in accordance with Government policy as announced on 26 July 1985, Official Report, column 779.

Mr. Brooke: The information the hon. Member requests is as follows:

Item	Tax satisfied (£)	Conditions or wishes	Date of MGC recommendation

Two Hepworth-Nicholson sculptures	156,750	Conditional	5 February 1993

The total expenditure for the 1992-93 financial year was £6,324,875·13. This includes a further payment for the Statham porcelain collection which was accepted in 1991-92. Of this £4,324,875 was met by access to the reserve.

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage whether he will specify the amounts of inheritance tax satisfied in connection with the acceptance of objects and property, which have been covered in the public accounts by means of resort to the reserve in respect of each of the three financial years 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93; and whether, taking account of the answer of 30 April 1990, Official Report, columns 439-40, he will indicate the average annual figure of such resort to the reserve which would arise from a breakdown of the total amount of tax satisfied which was thus covered during the eight financial years ensuing since the answer on 26 July 1985 on behalf of the then Minister for the Arts, Official Report, column 779.

Mr. Brooke: The amount of tax satisfied by means of resort to the Reserve in the last three financial years is as follows. Due to underspends in each financial year on the annual provision of £2 million for the acceptance in lieu of objects and property, the amount actually spent from the reserve was less than the original call. The actual spend from the reserve for 1992-93 was lower as it was partly offset from savings elsewhere in the Department—Official Report, 4 February 1993, columns 250-51 I list the actual money spent from the reserve for the hon. Member's information.

Year	Amount of tax Satisfied/Call on the Reserve £	Amount actually spent from the Reserve £
1990-91	Nil	Nil
1991-92	2,144,172	1,430,445
1992-93	4,324,875	3,281,875
Total	6,469,047	4,712,320

The annual average figure of such resort to the reserve which would arise from the total amount of tax satisfied thus covered during the last eight financial years is £3,881,885·24—tax satisfied—and £3,360,989·74—actually spent.

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what offers in lieu of tax have been accepted or allocated since his last announcement of 31 March, Official Report, column 235.

Mr. Brooke: Since my last announcement on 31 March, I am pleased to inform the House of the acceptance of three offers in lieu of taxation. The offers consist of a collection of glass which will satisfy £99,974 tax, two sculptures entitled "Parent" and "Young Girl" by Dame Barbara Hepworth-Nicholson which will satisfy £156,750 tax and a portrait of Lady Rouse Boughton by George Romney which will satisfy £105,000 tax. The collection of glass will be allocated to the Victoria and Albert museum and the sculptures will be allocated to Wakefield district council. Those allocations are in accordance with conditions on which these offers were made. No decision has yet been made on the allocation of the portrait by Romney.

Music Libraries

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what discussions he has held with Westminster city council on the maintenance of support for the central music library and the music library service both in Westminster and nationally.

Mr. Key: The central music library service is a matter for Westminster city council. The Government believe that library authorities themselves are best placed to decide on the detail of their service provision, and my statutory responsibility to ensure that library authorities meet their duty to provide comprehensive and efficient library service does not give me the right to intervene in the day-to-day management of services.

Although Westminster city council plans to reduce the opening hours of the central music library and make commensurate staff savings, its service will remain exceptional even when the reductions have been implemented.

There are particular problems in relation to the provision of music scores and information in libraries, which it is unreasonable to expect any single local authority to solve. For this reason, we are investigating alternative possibilities.

My Department is already jointly funding a study for a library and information plan for music. This study is investigating the provision of music scores and music information across the country, and is expected to be completed this June. It will produce an action plan for improvements in service.

One of the current applications for funding from the Department's public library development incentive scheme is for the establishment of a national music lending service, based on the present collections of the Yorkshire and Humberside joint library service and the British Library. A final decision on the application will be taken in September.

National Lottery

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards allowing the sale of national lottery tickets in pubs and other licensed premises; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: At Second Reading and in Committee we indicated that we were minded not to allow the sale of national lottery tickets in pubs. This was primarily to protect the image of the National lottery, and to avoid confusion with other forms of soft gambling which might take place in pubs. I have since received a number of representations on this matter, and I met the Brewers' Society on 23 March.

Engagements

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what public costs were incurred in his attendance at a meeting at the Redcliffe hotel, Paignton on 16 April.

Mr. Brooke: None, other than the cost of security precautions which are required for all my engagements.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list his official engagements for 16 April.

Mr. Brooke: My official engagements for 16 April comprised visits to Sheepstor church; Buckland abbey; Westcountry Television studio, in order to open it; BBC Radio Devon studios; the Dartington Hall estate; the Plains conservation area, Totnes; and Follaton house for a meeting with South Hams district council.

English Heritage

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is his response to English Heritage's recent proposals for the transfer of certain conservation responsibilities in London to the boroughs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I gave my full support to the broad objectives of English Heritage's forward strategy at the time of its publication in October last year. The recent consultation exercise has, I believe, achieved a better general understanding of English Heritage's objectives for London, and a useful refinement of the proposed means of moving forward.

In the light of that, I am happy for English Heritage to proceed to the next stage, of direct negotiations with individual boroughs, with a view to defining the scope for flexible authorisation of certain categories of grade II casework from 1994-95. In this initial period, any transfer of responsibiities must be by agreement with the individual boroughs concerned. Similarly, any question of assistance to the boroughs to strengthen their conservation expertise must be a matter for bilateral agreement with English Heritage, which has made clear its willingness to provide support for the boroughs concerned during this stage, for instance through help with training, through funding of conservation posts, and through joint grant schemes and jointly funded conservation studies.

English Heritage has stated its intention to review progress in four years' time. Clearly agreements with individual boroughs which by that time are working satisfactorily will continue. The financial impact will vary from borough to borough. Only at the end of the four-year period will it be possible to quantify the long-term costs, as well as the benefits and savings, both to the individual boroughs and to English Heritage.

If at that stage English Heritage satisfies my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and myself that we should take the further step of a general and permanent transfer of responsibilities, we shall need to consider, in consultation with the boroughs and their associations, the case for an appropriate transfer of resources to reflect the additional responsibilities which the boroughs would be asked to undertake.

BCCI

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General what has been the cost of the Serious Fraud Office inquiry into BCCI to date.

The Attorney-General: The cost of the Serious Fraud Office inquiry into BCCI to date has been £6,203,000

SCOTLAND

Mental Handicap Hospitals

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is the average total cost per patient per week of providing in-patient care to residents of long-stay mental handicap hospitals in Scotland;

(2) what is the average total cost per patient per week of providing in-patient care to residents of Gogarburn hospital and St. Joseph's hospital in Lothian.

Mr. Stewart: The average cost at 31 March 1992 per patient per week of providing in-patient care to residents of NHS long-stay mental handicap hospitals in Scotland was £527. The corresponding figure for Gogarburn hospital was £448. The cost to Lothian health board per patient per week at St. Joseph's hospital was £286.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what further work he is carrying out after taking into account responses made to the consultation document on local government reform.

Mr. Stewart: We are studying carefully the 3,300 responses received. Thereafter we shall come to a decision about the best shape for the single-tier system in Scotland and will announce our conclusions in a White Paper before the summer recess.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he is taking to refine the Touche Ross figures in local government reform costs.

Mr. Stewart: The provisional estimates made by Touche Ross of the financial implications of restructuring are, in a number of specific areas, being examined in the light of the comments received as part of our recent consultation exercise. When we announce our proposed new structure we will set our forecast of the likely cost implications, in the light of this further work.

Health Board Employees (Transfer)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 14 April Official Report, column 590-91, what information he has on the wage rates offered to new employees of companies which also employ staff transferred from employment with health boards.

Mr. Stewart: This information is not held centrally. Wage rates are a matter between the individual employees and the companies concerned.

HEALTH

Doctors (Retirement)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provision has been made for a central fund to pay for early retirement of doctors following implementation of proposals in "Making London Better".

Dr. Mawhinney: There is no specific central fund for meeting the costs of early retirement of doctors in London. Where early retirements occur as part of the implementation of "Making London Better," providers may be able to claim against the overall resources allocated for implementing the proposals.

GP Fund Holders

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her estimate of the percentage of general practitioner fund holders underspend in 1991-92 resulting from hospitals not operating in the last four months of the financial year.

Dr. Mawhinney: Nil.

Community Health Councils

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will increase the funds available to community health councils.

Mr. Sackville: Regional health authorities are responsible for ensuring that community health councils are properly resourced.

Brook Advisory Centres

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what public funding is made available to the Brook advisory centres; for what purpose those funds are made available; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what has been the net change in percentage terms in the real level of the funding made available by her Department to the Brook advisory centres in each year since such funding commenced; if she will indicate the net percentage change in the number of conceptions to girls under the age of sixteen which occurred in each of those years; and if she will make a statement on the effectiveness in terms of impact on teenage pregnancy rates of Government funding for the Brook advisory centres;

(3) what restrictions are placed on the extent to which the grant to the Brook advisory centres may be used for costs of legal actions.

Mr. Sackville: The information available is given in the tables. The core grant funding that the Department gives to Brook is a contribution towards the organisation's headquarters administrative costs. It may not be used for any other purpose. All 10 Brook branches receive income from local health authorities on whose behalf they provide clinic and counselling services to young people. Only 5 per cent. of Brook's clients are under 16. They have a key role to play in providing the responsible information and advice that young people need in relation to their sexual health generally, and in helping to achieve the "Health of the Nation" target of reducing the rate of conceptions amongst the under 16s by at least 50 per cent. by the year 2000.

Community Care

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will ask the NHS advisory board to review its 1986 report "Bridges Over Troubled Waters" and to update its recommendations to take account of the changes in the funding and management of care in the community.

Mr. Yeo: The national health service health advisory service is conducting a thematic review of child and adolescent mental health services. This takes into account the changes in funding and management arrangements flowing from both the NHS and community care reforms as well as other relevant developments, such as the "Health of the Nation" intiative.

Mental Illness Survey

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will ask the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys to pay special attention in its survey of mental illness in Great Britain to the problems of people between the ages of 16 to 25 years with mental illness and the services which are available to them.

Mr. Sackville: The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys will record the age of respondents making it possible to analyse separately the results for people aged 16 to 25.

Hospital Episode System

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to publish data from the hospital episode system.

Dr. Mawhinney: A publication containing hospital episode system figures for 1989-90 is in preparation, and is expected to be published in a few weeks. Further publications are planned to follow later this year.

Research

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answers of 2 December 1992, to the hon. Member for Waveney (Mr. Porter), Official Report, column 230 and of 3 December 1992, Official Report, column 321, what progress her Department is making in its review of the research units it funds; and when it expects to announce details of its plans for setting up a larger research centre as a pilot project.

Dr. Mawhinney: A programme of peer review including site visits has now been arranged for all 13 units and should be completed by early 1994. I expect to announce details for setting up a pilot research centre shortly.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total cost of the research projects her Department has commissioned for each of the past five years; and what was the total cost of projects undertaken by staff employed by (a) universities and polytechnics, (b) independent research institutes, (c) health authorities, (d) management consultants and (e) other organisations in each of those years.

Dr. Mawhinney: The total cost of the research projects commissioned under the Department's centrally commissioned programme for health and personal social services research, for each of the last five years is shown in the table:

Year	Total cost of research £ million
1988-89	12·9
1989-90	15·4
1990-91	18·3
1991-92	22·3
1992-93	23·4

The majority of research projects commissioned in this way is undertaken by staff employed by universities. Of this, about 10 per cent. is carried out under the auspices of the Medical Research Council. About 3 per cent. of the research is carried out by independent research institutes, health authorities or management consultants: details of this research are not readily available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether research projects commissioned by her Department from management consultants are subject to peer review in the same way as those commissioned from universities and research institutes.

Dr. Mawhinney: Most projects commissioned in the centrally commissioned research programme undergo scientific/peer review, irrespective of whether the research is being carried out by management consultants, universities or research institutes.

Management consultants are used in many capacities by the Department. When not engaged for research purposes, they are selected by commercial competitive tendering rather than subject to peer review.

Disturbed Adolescents

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information disturbed adolescents, who have had their liberty restricted, receive on their rights to judicial review.

Mr. Yeo: The form in which such information is made available is a matter for individual local authorities. A local authority wishing to keep a child in secure accommodation beyond 72 hours must seek the authority of the court. A child is entitled to be legally represented when such applications are considered and has a right to apply for legal aid for such purposes. The Department's guide for children and young people "The Children Act and the Courts" explains the arrangements for placing children in secure accommodation and their right to legal representation.

NHS Review

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answers of 11 November 1992, Official Report, column 850, 23 November 1992, Official Report, column 503 and 27 November 1992, Official Report, column 875, when she will publish the report of the review of centrally collected NHS statistics which she has commissioned from Touche Ross management consultants; what consultations she has had about its conclusions; which data series it has been decided to discontinue; and if she will place a copy of the report in the Library.

Mr. Sackville: As I stated in my reply on 11 November the study by Touche Ross management consultants was only one component in the current review of the Department's requirements for information from the national health service. For the conclusions of the review, I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Duncan) on 21 April at col. 126.

Hospital Admissions

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will update her answer of 22 October 1992, Official Report, columns 369-70, on patients waiting for admission in each six months period since that ended March 1988 to include the figure for the six months period ended September 1992.

Mr. Sackville: Information on the number of patients waiting for admission at 30 September 1992 is given in table 1 of the Department of Health's "Statistical Bulletin" (ISBN 1 85839 083 4) a copy of which is available in the Library.

Comfrey

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what consideration was given by the committee on the toxicity of chemicals in food in preparing its recent report on comfrey to studies which have demonstrated a regression of tumours in rodents fed upon comfrey or comfrey extracts; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what consideration was given by the committee on the toxicity of chemicals in food in preparing its recent report on comfrey to studies which have demonstrated either no adverse effects or a thriving effect upon the health of populations of rodents fed upon comfrey; and if she will make a statement;

(3) what consideration was given by the committee on the toxicity of chemicals in food in preparing its recent report on comfrey to the review of the literature in this area undertaken by the British Medical Journal in 1978; and if she will make a statement.

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research findings he has on the relative toxicity of comfrey tablets and capsules to that of saccharine tablets.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 21 April 1993]: The Committee on the Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment reviewed the available research data on the toxicity of saccharin in 1990 and recommended an acceptable daily intake (ADI) of 0-5 milligrams per kilogram body weight per day. It advised that provided intakes do not regularly exceed this ADI, saccharin is safe to use. In comparison, when the committee recently reported on its review of comfrey and preparations made from it, it advised that it was not possible to identify an ADI for comfrey nor for its pyrrolizidine alkaloid constituents, some of which research studies have shown to be potentially carcinogenic. The committee therefore recommended that concentrated forms of comfrey such as capsules and tablets should no longer be available.

Copies of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food's analysis of comfrey products, the advice of the Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment and the Food Advisory Committee together with the draft information note are available in the Library. A list of key studies considered by the committee are included in its advice.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Student Nurses

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons are in training as student nurses; how many of them come from the Republic of Ireland; and if he will make a statement about job prospects in the nursing profession.

Mr. Hanley: At 19 April there were 2,624 student nurses in training in Northern Ireland of whom 264 came from the Irish Republic.

In recent years the nursing workforce in Northern Ireland has stabilised, in part due to to the nurse clinical grading system introduced in April 1988. This improved retention of staff has reduced the employment opportunities for nurses completing their training. Changes in patterns of service and proposals for rationalisation of services will impact on nurse employment in the future. However, until discussions are completed and decisions are taken by the health boards and trusts, it is not possible to assess accurately the scale of change. The management executive of the Department of Health and Social Services is monitoring the situation carefully and is currently discussing with the National Board for Nursing and Midwifery and health boards future requirements for student nurse training.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Severe Hardship Payments

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when his Department plans to announce the outcome of its review of simplifying procedures for claiming severe hardship payments.

Mr. Burt: We are keeping the subject under active consideration.

Social Fund

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when his Department plans to respond to the social policy research unit's research on the social fund.

Mr. Scott: We are currently carefully considering the operation of the social fund in response to the research commissioned from York university's social policy research unit, along with a number of other reports and our own close monitoring of the fund.

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, in respect of the Birmingham south-east district office social fund budget, (a) how many people were refused community care grants, budgeting loans and crisis loans in 1992-93, (b) how many people were refused each payment on priority grounds, (c) by what amount the grants and loans were underspent, (d) why social fund officers did not use their powers under Direction 31 to review the decisions of some of those previously refused to prevent the underspend and (e) what steps will be taken to prevent an underspend in the future.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Ms Estelle Morris, dated 22 April 1993.

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the operation of the Social Fund at Birmingham South East District.

Information on the number and reason for refusals of Social Fund applications is held by application, rather than by applicant. Details of the number of refusals and the number refused on grounds of insufficient priority in the financial year 1992-93 for Birmingham South East District are given in Annex A.

Area Social Fund Officers (ASFOs) are obliged by Direction 41 to manage their District's allocations so that the planned level of expenditure is not exceeded in the financial year. In addition, they aim to meet consistently the highest priority needs throughout the year. ASFOs closely monitor expenditure throughout the year to ensure that any underspending of the District budget is kept to a minimum. These are standing arrangements which will continue. The outstanding allocation in the Birmingham South East District at 31 March 1993 was £11,028 for loans and £12,012 for grants. These figures represent 1·4 per cent. of the gross Social Fund allocation for the District. The number of decisions reviewed by Social Fund Officers (SFOs) under Direction 31 is not collated as a matter of routine. It is, however, known that no such reviews were undertaken in Birmingham South East District during March 1993 when, under the standing arrangements mentioned above, the ASFOs were monitoring claims intake and priorities closely with the aim of achieving a total Social Fund spend as close as possible to the annual budget figure.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this letter will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Mrs. Sylvia Marin

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects a decision to be reached in the case of Mrs. Sylvia Marin's application for disability living allowance (ZM 706889C).

Miss Widdecombe: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write shortly to my hon. Friend and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from David Riggs to Mr. Robert B. Jones dated 2 April 1993.

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is the responsibility of Mr. Michael Bichard to answer questions about relevant operational matters. However, as Mr. Bichard is away at the moment I am replying on his behalf to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about when a decision is expected to be reached in the case of Mrs. Sylvia Marin's application for Disability Living Allowance.

Mrs. Marin's case is at present being reviewed by the Adjudication Officer and the outcome will be notified to Mrs. Marin as soon as possible. I have written to you further and in greater detail about this matter.

I am grateful to you for bringing this mater to my attention. I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Automatic Credit Transfer

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what expansion of the number of benefits paid by automatic credit transfer is assumed in his Department's planning.

Miss Widdecombe: The method of payment of Social Security benefits is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from David Riggs to Mr. Jim Cousins, dated 1 April 1993.

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is the responsibility of Mr. Michael Bichard to answer questions about relevant operational matters. However, as Mr. Bichard is away at the moment I am replying on his behalf to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking what expansion of the number of benefits paid by automated credit transfer is assumed in his Department's planning.

By the end of 1994 enhanced computer systems will enable payments to be made by ACT for Income Support, Invalidity Benefit, Sickness Benefit, Severe Disablement Allowance and Unemployment Benefit in addition to those benefits already paid by this method.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Local Offices

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what reasons underlay the decision by the district manager of the north Gwent and Brecon area to reduce the Abertillery office from its current full status to that of a caller office;

(2) what provision will be made in the new arrangements for the Abertillery benefits office to allow customers to receive emergency payments on the loss or destruction of order books and benefits cheques, or on their failure to arrive by post;

(3) if he will extend beyond 30 April the consultation period for trade unions to reply to the plans to change the status of the Abertillery benefits office;

(4) what was the most recent efficiency ranking awarded to the Abertillery benefits office before the league tables on operational efficiency of benefits offices ceased to be compiled;

(5) what arrangements he will make for the transport of benefit claimants to the Ebbw Vale benefits office from Abertillery on the change of status of the Abertillery office from a full processing office to a caller office.

Mr. Burt: The operation of benefit offices is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from David Riggs to Mr. Llew Smith, dated 2 April 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits agency it is the responsibility of Mr. Michael Bichard to answer questions about relevant operational matters. However, as Mr. Bichard is away at the moment I am replying on his behalf to your five recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security, concerning the proposed new arrangements for the Abertillery Benefits Agency Office.

The intended reorganisation of the Abertillery office has been devised in order to further enhance the level of service provided for customers. The proposed changes would enable the District to further improve the speed and quality at which claims and payments are processed.

The report containing the proposals to change the status of the Benefits Agency's Abertillery office was circulated on 19 March for consultation and comment before decisions are taken. A deadline of 30 April has been set for responses from all interested parties and is regarded as reasonable.

The Abertillery office will continue to provide the full range of personal advice and information to customers, regardless of its status. Should the reorganisation take place as envisaged, facilities for dealing with customers in urgent need, for example those requiring emergency payments on the loss or destruction of order books and benefits cheques, or on their failure to arrive by post, would remain unchanged. For these reasons it would not be necessary for customers to visit the Benefits Agency's Ebbw Vale office to obtain a comprehensive service.

An overall efficiency league table has never been maintained for local offices.

I hope that you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official report and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Income Support

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when his Department intends to review the present levels of income support.

Mr. Burt: Income support is reviewed annually. The next uprating is due in April 1994. Details will be announced in the autumn.

Terrence Higgins Trust

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the answer from the Minister for Social Security and Disabled People of 24 February, Official Report, column 619, on his reply to a letter sent to him by the Terrence Higgins Trust on 4 February, if he will now give the date of his reply to the trust.

Mr. Scott: A reply was sent on 22 April.

Overlapping Benefits

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to review the operation of the Social Security (Overlapping Benefits) Regulations 1979, particularly in respect of the legislation giving entitlement to the higher pensioner premium; and whether it is proposed that the effect of the Overlapping Benefits Regulations should be disregarded for the purposes of assessing whether a qualifying benefit is paid.

Mr. Burt: We have no plans to review the relationship between the Social Security (Overlapping Benefits) Regulations 1979 and entitlement to income support premiums. For the purposes of maintaining entitlement to the higher pensioner premium, in common with other premiums, a person can be treated as being in receipt of any benefit which would be payable if it were not for the provisions of the overlapping benefits regulations.

Anti-discrimination Directive

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what plans he has to introduce common rules for men and women in respect of non-contributory benefits so as to comply with EC directive 79/7;

(2) what plans he has to review the forms of discrimination currently existing within the social security system, particularly those linked to different pensionable ages, so as to comply with EC directive 79/7;

(3) what plans he has following the decision of the Court of Justice of the European Communities in the case of R v. Secretary of State for Social Security and Thomas et al (Case C-328/91) to review which forms of discrimination are not necessarily and objectively linked to the differences in retirement age and, therefore, not covered by the exceptions listed in article 7(1) of the directive;

(4) what plans he has to change the rules relating to men and women's rights to defer entitlement to a retirement pension so that there is no discrimination between the sexes so as to comply with EC directive 79/7.

Miss Widdecombe: Directive 79/7 permits unequal state pension ages. The European Court, in case C9/91, confirmed that where different pension ages are maintained under article 7(1) of EC directive 79/7, other forms of discrimination in the benefits system are also permissible if they are necessarily linked to that difference. This would include the rules on deferring entitlement to a retirement pension.

The application of the various derogations in article 7 of the directive is regularly reviewed in the light of developments, including the rulings of the European Court.

Case C328/91 has been referred by the European Court back to the House of Lords for final determination. We propose to consider that particular matter further when the result becomes available.

Working Population

Dr. Liam Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are in full-time employment for each recipient of state pension; and what predictions have been made of these numbers for 1995 and every fifth year thereafter.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is not available in the form requested. The latest estimates of the future numbers of basic retirement pensioners and people paying national insurance contributions are in the table.

Year	Number of contributors (thousands)[1]	Number of pensioners (thousands)[2]	Ratio
1990-91	21,650	10,460	2·1
1995-96	22,800	10,700	2·1
2000-01	23,280	10,940	2·1
2010-11	24,030	12,070	2·0
2020-21	24,260	13,410	1·8
2030-31	23,690	15,190	1·6

DEFENCE

Faldingworth Range

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what countries had the use of Faldingworth range for training their gun crews between 1980 and 1989.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Faldingworth is a former RAF station. Following its closure, the site was sold to the British Manufacturing and Research Company in January 1975. I understand it is now owned by Royal Ordnance plc.

Astra plc

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he has taken to return papers removed from Astra plc to the DTI inspectors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The Ministry of Defence police took possession of a number of papers from Astra plc in connection with an inquiry into possible corruption. In the event the MDP were unable to pursue this matter to a conclusion. They subseqently wrote to Cork Gully, the company receivers, who are now the legal owners of these papers, listing what is held and seeking advice on its disposal. DTI inspectors never had possession of these papers although they were allowed access to them by and in the presence of the MDP in pursuance of their own separate investigations.

PRB, Belgium

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the products which his Department purchased from PRB of Belgium from 1983 to 1990; and if he will list the value of such purchases in each of those years.

Mr. Aitken: Complete records of MOD dealings with companies during the whole of the period covered by the hon. Gentleman's question are no longer available. However, one contract with PRB has been identified, placed in 1984, for artillery shells for training purposes. The value of the contract was approximately £600,000.

Stonefish Mine

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the Government gave consent to the transfer of the plans for the Stonefish mine to a Chilean arms manufacturer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: It has been the policy of successive Governments not to give details of such matters, as they are governed by commercial confidentiality.

IMS

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those banks and financial institutions recognised as acceptable sources of finance for deals arranged by IMS between 1980 and 1989.

Mr. Aitken: The information requested is not held by the Ministry of Defence, and is a commercially confidential matter for IMS. IMS publishes its accounts for public scrutiny in accordance with the requirements of company law. The company ceased trading with effect from July 1991 and is in the process of rundown.

Helicopter Carrier

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Tynemouth (Mr. Trotter), of 29 March, Official Report, column 16, whether he has now received full clarification from the tenderers of their bids for the amphibious helicopter carrier; when he expects his Department to complete the evaluation of bids; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: We received full clarification of bids from the tenderers yesterday. The evaluation of these final bids will be completed this summer and we expect to award the contract later in the year.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the expenditure by his Department in financial year 1992-93 on military operations in former Yugoslavia, distinguishing between forces in Croatia under UNPROFOR I, those in Croatia and Bosnia under UNPROFOR II, and operations afloat in the Adriatic; how much of each such item of expediture has been or will be reimbursed to his Department by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office; whether the costs of British forces in UNPROFOR II are now reimbursed by the United Nations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The extra cost of operations for UNPROFOR in Croatia and Bosnia is assessed at £606,000 and £63,700,000 respectively for the financial year 1992-93. The additional cost of operations in the Adriatic was some £4,200,000. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has reimbursed all UNPROFOR costs. The cost of operations in the Adriatic, however, falls to the Defence budget. From 1 April 1993, the United Nations has accepted financial responsibility for operations in Bosnia and reimbursement will be sought to the maximum extent possible.

Tornados

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the estimated original and running costs of the deployment of seven F3 Tornados from RAF Leeming to Italy; from which budget these will be met; how many ground crew have been deployed, categorised as appropriate; what ground support will be made available by the Italian Air Force; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The RAF has deployed six Tornado and two VC-10 tanker aircraft. The additional annual operating cost of these aircraft, which is borne against the Defence budget, is currently assessed as some £20,000,000. As at 21 April, there were 227 ground personnel, but this figure can change from day to day. Italian and other allied forces are providing a wide range of ground support, mostly under NATO arrangements. This, too, varies with requirements.

Exercise Quicksaver

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the purpose of the recent Quicksaver exercise at RAF Lossiemouth; and what it revealed about the cost of providing a civilian search and rescue service.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Quicksaver exercise conducted in 1987 was a review of the engineering manning levels in support of search and rescue flights. No direct cost comparison was made with the provision of a civilian SAR flight.

RAF Brawdy

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give a detailed breakdown of the estimated operatoring costs of B flight 202 squadron at RAF Brawdy in 1992-93.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The detailed breakdown requested is as follows:

	£ million
Manpower Costs	1·30
Station Support Costs	0·04
Aircraft operating Costs	1·20
Total	2·54

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to discuss security guarantees at the meeting of the preparatory committee for the non-proliferation treaty extension conference to be held in New York in May; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Non-nuclear weapon states which are parties to the non-proliferation treaty benefit from positive and negative British security guarantees. In our view, the first preparatory committee for the non-proliferation treaty extension conference should concentrate on procedural matters. We have no plans to discuss security guarantees at that meeting.

Macedonia

Mr. Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will now recognise the former province of Yugoslavia, Macedonia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have already done so. The United Kingdom's support for an application for United Nations membership means that the United Kingdom recognises the applicant as a state. Macedonia's application was accepted by the General Assembly on 8 April.

Turkey

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is currently taking to ensure that the Turkish Government protects their Kurdish population.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We regularly raise with the Turkish authorities the human rights situation throughout Turkey, including the south-east of the country.

We welcome the recently improved security situation in south-east Turkey and the reported indefinite extension of the PKK, Kurdish Workers' Party, ceasefire. We also welcome Mr. Demirel's statement that the state of emergency in the south-east will not be extended beyond its expiry on 19 July provided that the present calm situation continues.

North Korea

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what actions have been taken by Her Majesty's Government to ensure that representations are made to the Government of North Korea concerning the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have supported resolutions in the International Atomic Energy Agency. The co-depositaries of the non-proliferation treaty—Britain, the United States and Russia—issued a statement on 1 April calling on North Korea to reconsider its announcement to withdraw from the non-proliferation treaty and comply with its safeguards agreement. We fully supported the president of the Security Council's statement of 8 April which encouraged the International Atomic Energy Agency to continue to seek a settlement of the issue. The Twelve have issued statements and the Presidency, on behalf of the Twelve, has made representations to the Government of North Korea. We will remain active.

Armenia

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the Republic of Armenia with regard to its military invasion and occupation of a large part of Azerbaijan.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have condemned the recent invasion by local Armenian forces of the Azerbaijani region of Kelbadjar and have called for the withdrawal of forces and an end to hostilities. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has written to the President of Armenia urging him to do everything in his power to bring about a ceasefire and to resume talks through the CSCE peace process. I also made our views known to the Armenian ambassador at a meeting on 6 April. The United Kingdom has also supported statements by the President of the United Nations Security Council on 6 April and the European Community on 7 April, both of which expressed concern at the escalation of fighting in Azerbaijan and called for an urgent ceasefire. Both statements also called for an early resumption of talks on the Nagorno-Karabakh conflict through the CSCE. We are glad to see that the Presidents of Armenia and Azerbaijan reaffirmed their commitment to these talks when they met for the first time in Ankara on 21 April.

Bosnia

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his oral statement of 19 April, Official Report, column 22, if he will list the three vessels which have entered Montenegrin ports since November 1992, showing the countries of registration and ownership, the estimated cargo in each case and information available to him on the current whereabouts of the vessel; if he will set out in respect of each vessel the actions taken by NATO or the Western European Union monitoring forces and the reason for their failure to divert the vessel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Since November 1992 the NATO and Western European Union ships in the Adriatic have challenged over 9,000 vessels, boarded 599 and diverted 137. The operation is making a most valuable contribution to efforts to block illegal trade to Serbia and Montenegro.

As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs told the House on 19 April, a small number of vessels have managed to get through to Montenegrin ports. The three vessels he referred to are the Dimitrakis, a Maltese-flagged vessel believed to be carrying around 5,000 tonnes of petroleum coke, Novotsak II, a Greek-flagged tanker believed to be carrying over 20,000 tonnes of oil, and the East River, a Greek-owned tanker believed to be carrying around 50,000 tonnes of gas oil. We also believe that there may have been a fourth in December, early on in the NATO/WEU operation. Since my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs made his statement to the House, we have received information that a further three vessels may have got through. This information is being followed up urgently.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place with the Government of Sierra Leone covering human rights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: When my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development saw the Sierra Leone Foreign Minister on 23 March, she made clear our wish to see a major improvement in human rights in Sierra Leone and the establishment of a programme for the return of civilian rule.

Liberia

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what diplomatic exchanges have taken place with forces in Liberia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Kingdom has played an active role in consideration of Liberia at the United Nations and maintains regular diplomatic contacts with those West African states contributing troops to the ECOMOG—Economic Community of West African States Monitoring and Observing Group—peace-keeping force.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Government of Nigeria concerning the operation of the Economic Community of West African States Ceasefire Monitoring Group forces in Liberia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have regular exchanges with the Government of Nigeria and have expressed our support for the important role which Nigeria is playing in the efforts being made by the Economic Community of West African States, ECOWAS, and by the ECOWAS Monitoring and Observing Group, ECOMOG, forces to bring an end to the conflict in Liberia.

Gambia

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Government of the Gambia concerning arbitrary arrests and abuse of human rights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Gambia has a good record of human rights and there is no evidence to suggest that arbitrary arrests and abuse of human rights are taking place. No recent representations have therefore been made to the Government of the Gambia.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Company Car Tax

Mr. Mills: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his assessment of the effect of his proposals on company car tax on the sale of cars at the upper end of the price range.

Mr. Dorrell: The switch from scale charges to 35 per cent. of list price as the basis for personal tax liability on company car use will remove distortions in the new car market. Each car will be taxed on the basis of its individual list price, in response to the weight of views expressed during consultation. Our assessment is that these changes coupled with the abolition of car tax, the lowest interest rates in the EC, a competitive exchange rate, low inflation and sustainable economic recovery—will have a positive effect on sales of United Kingdom manufacturers' cars across the whole price range.

VAT

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out the thresholds in each of the member countries of the EEC before registration for VAT purposes is required.

Sir John Cope: The latest available information is as follows:

Registration threshold as at 1 April 1993

Inland Revenue

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of pay-as-you-earn packs distributed by private companies following tendering procedures have been successfully delivered; and what cost has been incurred by the Inland Revenue (a) on checking the process and (b) providing replacements.

Mr. Dorrell: The Inland Revenue's inquiries indicate that the vast majority of employers annual PAYE guidance packs have been safely delivered and those that have not carry an Inland Revenue return address allowing them to be reissued. The Inland Revenue does not have a central record of the cost of checking the process or providing replacements. Although there have been some additional postage and other costs in reissuing employer code notices to employers, overall there will still be substantial savings this year compared with the cost of issuing last year's annual pack.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what privacy clauses were included in the contracts issued for the delivery of pay-as-you-earn packs by private sector companies.

Mr. Dorrell: The tender document that formed part of the contracts for assembly and distribution of the employers annual PAYE guidance pack contained the standard Inland Revenue confidentiality clause which makes reference to the provisions of section 182 of the Finance Act 1989.

European Monetary Institute

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the implications of no decision being made on the seat of the European Monetary Institute by the end of 1992 in accordance with article 13 of the protocol on the European Monetary Institute of the treaty on European union, page 108, Cm. 1934.

Mr. Nelson: None.

Income Tax Forms

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the failure of the Inland Revenue to ensure dispatch before the end of the 1992-93 tax year of PAYE forms and tax tables to employers in the Oxford area; how many employers are affected; which other areas of the country are affected; what action is being taken to rectify the situation; and if he will allow employers who have not received forms by the usual date an extended period in which to complete their returns before the imposition of penalties.

Mr. Dorrell: Despite the printing errors which resulted in some of this year's annual PAYE guidance and stationery packs for employers being wrongly addressed, the Inland Revenue's inquiries indicate that the vast majority of employers throughout the country received their packs before the end of the 1992-93 tax year. All packs carry an Inland Revenue return address allowing those which are not delivered to be reissued. To ensure that all employers can operate the correct PAYE codes for their employees from the start of the new tax year, notices giving details where these codes have changed were reissued before 6 April 1993. Employers have until 19 May to send in their 1992-93 end of year returns but will not face penalties provided these are received by 19 June. This later cut-off date has nothing to do with the issue of the annual pack—the summary end of year return form is issued separately—but is in keeping with the previously announced approach of allowing employers time to get up to date before 1995 when automatic penalties may be taken for any return not sent in by 19 May.

Banks (Charges)

Mr. Byers: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will commission a report from the Bank of England into the extent to which the clearing banks raise charges to their customers in a co-ordinated way; and what steps he will take to stop this practice.

Mr. Nelson: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor has no plans to commission such a report and is not aware of any evidence that banks are raising charges in a co-ordinated way. The decision by a bank to increase its charges is a matter for its own commercial judgment. The then Director of Fair Trading, Sir Gordon Borrie, announced on 24 October 1991 that, after considering material relating to banking practices passed to him by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor, which covered fees and charges, he had concluded that there were no grounds to justify any further action under the competition legislation. The Bank of England's recent review of bank lending to small businesses also showed that there were divergences between individual banks both in the level of their charges and in their attitude to implementing them.

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what representations he has received concerning the practice of high street banks charging customers for certificates showing annual interest and tax paid required by the Inland Revenue in order to claim for tax rebates;

(2) if he intends to introduce measures to compensate individuals charged by high street banks for certificates showing annual interest and tax paid required by the Inland Revenue in order to claim for tax rebates.

Mr. Dorrell: Following a number of representations last year, the British Bankers Association and the Building Societies Association were asked to remind their members that they have a statutory duty to provide tax deduction certificates on receipt of a written request. No charge should therefore arise. There have been no recent reports of institutions continuing to charge.

North Sea Oil Tax

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which bodies his Department consulted prior to his announcement of changes in the North sea oil tax regime.

Mr. Dorrell: My officials keep in regular contact with representative bodies and individual oil companies. But they were not consulted on specific Budget proposals. Advance consultation on budgetary measures of this sort would have created uncertainty likely severely to have disrupted investment and tax yield.

EC Economic and Finance Council

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the latest meeting of the European Community's Economic and Finance Council.

Mr. Lamont: The Economic and Finance Council of the European Community—ECOFIN—met in Luxembourg on 19 April. I represented the United Kingdom.

The main agenda item was follow-up to the Edinburgh European Council declaration on promoting economic recovery. The Council discussed a paper prepared by the Commission containing a summary of the action taken both by member states and at Community level. Council conclusions were agreed on the results of the Edinburgh declaration and on the importance of economic relations between the EC and the United States to promoting economic recovery internationally. I highlighted the significant measures taken by the United Kingdom consistent with the Edinburgh declaration, including in particular those in the Budget and Autumn Statement, and welcomed progress made by other member states and with the Community measures. I stressed the importance of early progress towards a GATT agreement and drew attention to the favourable growth prospects in the United Kingdom by comparison with those of other major EC member states.

The Council discussed progress in negotiations with the European Parliament on a new inter-institutional agreement on budget discipline and agreed that the presidency should continue to work towards an agreement consistent with the conclusions of the Edinburgh European Council.

There was a brief discussion of the draft seventh VAT directive which covers the VAT treatment of second hand goods. The main outstanding United Kingdom objective remains to secure a final text which protects the essential interests of the United Kingdom art market.

The Commission urged progress with its proposed directive abolishing withholding tax on interest and royalty payments between companies in different member states. The Council agreed to have a substantive discussion of the directive at a future meeting.

Following a brief discussion of possible European investment bank lending to Albania, it was agreed that the Council would return to this issue at a later meeting.

The Council took no formal votes. The conclusions on promoting economic recovery and economic relations with the United States were agreed by consensus.

Although not part of the formal Council proceedings, there was also a meeting of Finance Ministers from EC and EFTA countries in Luxembourg on the same day. There was general agreement on the value of dialogue on economic issues between EC and EFTA countries. Discussion centred on promoting economic recovery in Europe and the results of the joint meeting of Foreign and Finance Ministers from G7 countries on 14 and 15 April.

House Prices/Earnings Ratio

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 27 January, Official Report, columns 751-2, if he will publish figures for the average house price to earnings ratio for each region for the lastest quarters.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 22 April 1993]: Estimates for the fourth quarter of 1992 are given in the following table:

European Bank for Reconstruction and Development

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will itemise British expenditure on the European bank for reconstruction and development.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 19 April 1993]: I have been asked to reply.

By the end of March 1993, United Kingdom expenditure on the European bank for reconstruction and development since its inauguration in April 1991 was about £90 million. A breakdown of this figure is shown in the table. As a shareholder of the bank, the United Kingdom will contribute £255 million to its capital: £53·4 million has already been contributed; the remainder will be paid in the period to the end of 1995-96 by a combination of cash and promissory notes.

The European Community has a 6 per cent. shareholding in the bank and contributes 6 per cent. of the capital. In addition, the EBRD manages technical assistance funds for the EC. The United Kingdom share of this Community expenditure is 16 per cent.

Mental Handicap Hospitals

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average total cost per patient per week of providing in-patient care to residents of long-stay mental handicap hospitals in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The average total cost per patient per week is not available.

Patient treatment services for in-patients and day cases in mental handicap hospitals in Wales in 1990-91—the latest comprehensive figures available—averaged £45·80 per person per day, or £320·60 per week. Figures for general services such as catering, laundry, building and engineering maintenance, etc., which are estimated to add around a further 40 per cent. to the cost, are not included because, although they are available as an overall figure, they cannot be disaggregated into patient types.

Tourism

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish figures showing the origin of British domestic holidaymakers to Wales according to each United Kingdom standardised region for each year since 1985; and if he will indicate in each instance the percentage from each region embarking on (a) all holidays, (b) short stays of one to three nights and (c) long stays of four nights and over.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the spending by each local education authority in Wales on special educational needs in the latest available year.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information is available in respect of expenditure on special education in special schools, home teaching, individual teaching in hospitals and expenditure in social services establishments charged to education. Current expenditure in special education units attached to primary and secondary schools is excluded and not available separately.

The information is given in the following table.

Expenditure on special education[1] 1990-91

	Net current expenditure[2] £000	Gross capital expenditure[3] £000
Clwyd	7,810	75
Dyfed	4,164	20

Mid Glamorgan	7,898	3
Powys	2,006	33
South Glamorgan	6,641	35
West Glamorgan	3,703	0
Total Wales	41,773	296

[1]Information taken from local education authority revenue and capital outturn forms.

[2]Net current expenditure is defined as expenditure on employees and running expenses, less sales, fees, changes, internal recharges and other non-grant income but gross of specific government grants.

[3]Gross capital expenditure is defined as the provision, acquisition and enhancement of tangible fixed assets which continue to be of value long after their acquisition.

*Includes expenditure in special education units attached to primary and secondary schools.

Public Buildings (Disabled Access)

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to acquire Welsh local authorities to make public buildings accessible to disabled people if these buildings are currently inaccessible; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: It is for owners of public buildings including local authorities, to use their own judgment as to the need for access and the extent to which it is practicable and affordable to improve it.

Statutory powers in respect of existing buildings are limited. Where planning permission is required for development, section 76 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 places a duty on local planning authorities to draw applicants' attention to their statutory obligations in this regard under sections 4, 7, 8 and 8A of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970.

The building regulations require that access and facilities for the disabled are provided in all new non-domestic buildings including extensions. Research is in progress to see how similar measures might be applied when non-domestic buildings are being altered.

Community Care

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures are being taken to ensure that Welsh local authorities correctly allocate and spend the money they are receiving to provide community care.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Additional resources for local authorities' new community care responsibilities are included in the 1993-94 Welsh local government revenue settlement. Within those totals, the amounts in respect of the new duties for each county council have been identified in accordance with their own wishes. The Welsh Office has worked closely with each local authority in the preparation of their social care plans and will continue to do so in monitoring progress on the implementation of community care.

Sight Tests

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will ensure that all deaf and hard of hearing people in Wales have access to national health service sight tests; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There are no plans to extend the categories of those eligible for national health service sight tests which already provide free sight tests to those most in need, for example, children, those on low income and people most at risk at developing serious eye disease. These examination groups cover approximately 45 per cent. of the population of Great Britain.

South Glamorgan TEC

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consulations he has had with South Glamorgan training and enterprise council in relation to a proposed merger with the Cardiff chamber of commerce and the Cardiff and Vale Enterprise Agency.

Mr. David Hunt: None.

Pit Closures

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 20 October 1992, Official Report, columns 283-84, what progress he has made in allocating the £4·8 million he announced for employment and training measures in the areas affected by pit closures and job losses; how much of the £4·8 million has already been announced and on what it has been spent; what the residual amount unspent will be spent on; and what evaluation he has made of the best value for money schemes in improving employment and training prospects.

Mr. David Hunt: The introduction of special additional employment and training measures will depend on the future employment position at individual pits. No final decision has yet been taken to close any of the Welsh pits involved in the review.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Beer

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will be able to complete his assessment of the impact of the new duty-paid allowances on sales of beer in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: I have been asked to reply.

We are monitoring the impact of cross-border shopping in the single market, but seasonal variations in beer sales and the novelty of cross-border shopping make it unsafe to draw firm conclusions for the moment. Customs are meeting the Brewers Society to discuss the society's statistics on duty-paid beer imports. We shall continue to keep a close watch on the position through surveys and other relevant information sources.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Radio Telephones

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to have the conclusions from his Department's research study of the physical interaction of fields from hand-held radio telephones and the human head; which other organisations are assisting his Department in this study; whether the full results of the study will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: The project, called "Interaction of the Body with Radio Emissions from Hand Held Transceivers", is part of the LINK personal communications programme. Industry provides 50 per cent. of the funding; the Government contribution is provided by the DTI and the Science and Engineering Research Council. The project was launched in June 1992 and is due to complete by December 1995.

The four research organisations involved in this study are:

University of Bradford
Brunel University
University of Surrey, and University Microwave Ltd.

It is managed by a team including officials from my Department, the National Radiological Protection Board, and Multiple Access Communications Ltd. A panel of independent monitors has also been appointed. On completion of the project a document summarising the results will be made public.

Electricity Generation

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will seek a report from OFFER listing the type, scale, nature and ownership of electricity generation in Greater London, Kent and Essex.

Mr. Eggar: It is for the Director General of Electricity Supply to determine what reports to commission. The National Grid Company is required to produce a seven-year statement and update it at least annually. This includes information about existing generating capacity.

Markets Overt

Mr. Hutton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has to reform the law relating to the operation of markets overt.

Mr. Leigh: I hope shortly to issue a consultation paper on the law relating to transfer of title. This will invite opinions on whether reform is needed to the rule of sales in market overt.

Fuel-conditioning Devices

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what results have been achieved by Warren Spring Laboratory in tests of in-line fuel-conditioning devices based on tin alloys or magnetic cores; and whether he will issue guidance on the effectiveness of such products in reducing energy use.

Mr. Leigh: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to Warren Spring Laboratory under its chief executive, Dr. Cormack. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Doug Cormack to Ms Joan Walley, dated 21 April 1993:

Your written Parliamentary Question to ask the President of the Board of Trade what results have been achieved by Warren Spring Laboratory in tests of on-line fuel conditioning devices based on tin alloys or magnetic cones: and whether he will issue guidance on the effectiveness of such products in reducing energy use.

As your question relates to operational activities at Warren Spring Laboratory I have been asked to reply.

Over the past twelve months or so Warren Spring Laboratory has continued to be contracted by the motor vehicle industry to test and assess modifications to motor car designs in respect of fuel consumption and vehicle emissions., I regret that, as this work has been undertaken on a commercial-in-confidence basis, it is not possible for me to publicise the results. I do, however, enclose some background information about the work of our vehicle emissions team. You would be most welcome to visit Warren Spring Laboratory to meet the team and to see the facilities that we use in testing and assessing vehicle emissions.

Collieries

Mr. Cummings: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects the six mothballed collieries to be licensed to the private sector.

Mr. Eggar: The timing of possible licensing to the private sector of those pits being placed on a care and maintenance basis by British Coal is a matter for British Coal, but I expect progress to be rapid.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with representatives of private mining companies which have expressed an interest in the collieries scheduled for mothballing or closure.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade and I have recently had a number of discussions with representatives of the private mining sector about a range of matters. The licensing to the private sector of pits which British Coal no longer wishes to operate is, of course, the responsibility of British Coal.

Offshore Oil Exploration

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what sanctions he has at his disposal against oil companies which fail to carry out exploration and drilling commitments specified in licences granted by his Department in previous United Kingdom continental shelf licensing rounds; and on what occasion he has exercised these powers.

Mr. Eggar: The Secretary of State may revoke a licence if there is any breach or non-observance by the licensees of any terms and conditions of the licence, including exploration and drilling commitments. To date neither the Secretary of State nor his predecessors has exercised these powers.

Small Firms

Ms Quin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of economic activity is accounted for by small firms in each standard planning region.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 22 April 1993]: This information is not available.

Trading Standards Officers

Dr. Strang: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many vacancies existed for trading standards officer posts in each year from 1979 to the latest available date.

Mr. Leigh: [holding answer 21 April 1993]: Information provided to my Department by local weights and measures authorities in England, Wales and Scotland indicates that since 1987-1988 the numbers of vacancies for qualified trading standards officers have been:

	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92
England	211	255	287	257	211
Scotland	37	42	35	32	52
Wales	7	8	15	13	11
Total	255	305	337	302	274

Figures for preceding years are not readily available.

Orimulsion

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his policy with regard to the desirable level of orimulsion imports into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: The coal review White Paper, "The Prospects for Coal", states that the Government have been informed by the Venezuelan authorities that Orimulsion exports to the United Kingdom are likely to stay at their minimum contractual level for the foreseeable future. The minimum quantities specified in contracts are commercially confidential.

Steel Prices

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures he is taking to hold down steel prices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: None. Steel prices are a matter for the market.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Mental Incapacity

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to review legislation concerning the withdrawal of money from a bank account by a relative or carer on behalf of a mentally incapacitated adult; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Law Commission is reviewing the law and procedures relating to decision making on behalf of mentally incapacitated adults. The commission's initial consultation in 1991 produced a large number of responses in the light of which the commission decided to embark on a second round of separate consultations on particular topics before publishing final proposals. The commission has now published the first of three further consultation papers, "Mentally Incapacitated Adults and Decision-Making: A New Jurisdiction" (L.C.C.P. No. 128) which canvasses proposals for reform of the private law aspects, including financial decision making.

Police Stations, Northern Ireland

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer of 19 April, Official Report, column 28, if he will place in the Library the results of the survey carried out by the Northern Ireland court service into advice at police stations.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The survey referred to is not in a form which could readily be placed in the Library. However, I will write to the hon. Member enclosing a summary of the results of the survey for his information. The hon. Member will already have received some of this information in the answer provided to his earlier question on 21 April 1993, Official Report, column 93.

Boundary Commission for Wales

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he intends to appoint a deputy chairman for the Parliamentary Boundary Commission for Wales.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Neath (Mr. Hain) on 20 April, Official Report, column 45.

Lease Law

Dr. Spink: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what progress has been made on reform of lease law; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 31 March by myself to my hon. Friend the Member for High Peak (Mr. Hendry), Official Report, column 197, and to the answer given on the same date by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning to my hon. Friend the Member for Bromsgrove (Mr. Thomason), Official Report, columns 293-94.

PRIME MINISTER

Energy Bills (Pensioners)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Prime Minister if he will publish the reply he has sent to the letter of Mr. E. B. Glover QC, on the subject of the effect of VAT on energy bills for pensioners.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 14 April 1993]: A reply has been sent on my behalf by the Department of Social Security. It is not my normal practice to publish correspondence, but it explains that the annual uprating of benefits will in due course reflect the increases in fuel bills; that we will be making available extra help to people on income support and income-related benefits which we will announce in the autumn and which will be paid from April 1994 before the bills have to be paid; and that the Government are not taking back the extra help they gave to pensioners on income support to assist them in paying the community charge, even though the community charge has now been abolished.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Scott Inquiry

32. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Attorney-General what evidence the Law Officers have submitted to the Scott inquiry on exports to Iraq.

The Attorney-General: My Department has provided Lord Justice Scott with copies of all documents relevant to the range of issues which he has identified.

Phoenix Companies

35. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Attorney-General how many prosecutions in 1992-93 the Serious Fraud Office has launched in relation to possible offences involving the use of phoenix companies.

The Solicitor-General: None. Such cases are more likely to be handled by other prosecuting authorities.

Crown Prosecution Service (Recruitment)

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement about the recruiting policy of the Crown Prosecution Service.

The Solicitor-General: The Crown Prosecution Service continues to recruit on merit in open competition high-quality applicants for a comparatively small number of vacancies for lawyers.

Serious Fraud (Prosecutions)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Attorney-General what was the success rate in prosecutions by the Serious Fraud Office which were concluded within the last six months.

The Attorney-General: Eleven Crown court trials involving 22 defendants have been concluded since 1

October 1992. Seventeen defendants have been convicted and two acquitted and three were discharged without the jury having to return a verdict. In one further trial in the magistrates court the defendant was acquitted. This decision is the subject of appeal to the divisional court.

Prisons

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) to what extent prisons provide non-smoking recreation and eating areas; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether prisoners who do not smoke are required to share cells with those who do;

(3) what action his Department has taken to reduce the amount of tobacco smoking by prisoners in Her Majesty's prisons.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Mackinlay dated 22 April 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to the three Parliamentary Questions on this subject which you tabled for written answer on Wednesday 21 April.

Prison Standing Orders require governors to arrange as far as is practicable for non-smokers not to be compelled to share living accommodation with smokers, and for non-smoking areas to be available in visiting accommodation and association rooms as long as this does not reduce access to these areas. Smoking is prohibited in areas where food is being prepared or served. Practice in dining areas is a matter for individual governors.

We acknowledge the importance of measures to encourage prisoners who smoke to break the habit and this is reflected in our corporate plan. Medical advice is available in all prisons and structured health education and counselling facilities are increasingly being provided. A new health care standard for clinical and related health promotion services will be introduced later this year which will provide a further stimulus to the promotion of healthier lifestyles. We are also planning a number of pilot projects to develop models for co-ordinated health promotion programmes. I would expect measures to reduce smoking to feature in these.

Angling

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what studies his Department has made or plans to undertake about the policing difficulties arising in connection with the protection of anglers taking part in official and legitimate angling competitions from disruption from anti-angling demonstrations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The policing of any event is an operational matter for chief officers.

Wheel Clamping

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received about wheel clamping from persons in the Rochdale metropolitan borough and in the Greater Manchester area.

Mr. Jack: Since 1 April 1992, the Home Office has received 10 letters from hon. Members representing constituencies in the Greater Manchester area concerning the use of wheel clamps on private land. In the same period, five members of the public living in that area have written direct to this office on the same issue. Since the publication of the Home Office consultation paper on 23 February this year, we have received three requests for that document from individuals living in the Greater Manchester area.

Wheel clamping on the public highway currently takes place only in London, and we are not aware of any representations from people in Greater Manchester on that issue.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received from hon. Members regarding wheel clamping on cars; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: In the 12 months up to 31 March this year, I received 117 letters from hon. Members in relation to wheel clamping. One hundred and twelve of these concerned clamping on private land, the others related to clamping on public roads.

A Home Office consultation paper concerning wheel clamping on private land was published on 23 February this year and sent to all hon. Members. The closing date for comments is 31 May.

Cults

Mr. Dickens: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider setting up a working party to conduct a study of the recruitment methods used by secret cults in the United Kingdom and to advise if legislation would be appropriate.

Mr. Jack: The Government do not plan to set up such a working party. Nor do the Government consider it appropriate to legislate specifically in this area. The existing criminal law is adequate to deal with any offences committed by members of a new religious movement or sect.

Racial Assaults

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) in how many cases brought to court during the last year of assault involving racial motivation the defendants were juveniles;

(2) what information his Department has as to the numbers of reported or recorded racial attacks for the latest three years (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in London; and in how many of these cases a conviction was obtained;

(3) in how many cases brought to court during the last year involving racial motivation the defendants were granted bail; and how many of these were cases of murder.

Mr. Jack: The only information held centrally relates to the number of reported racial incidents in England and Wales and is given in the table.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Soviet Union

37. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will increase the proportion of the Overseas Development Administration's budget devoted to the problems currently being experienced in the former Soviet Union; what criteria he uses to allocate priorities between different parts of the world; and if the will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We provide substantial assistance to the former Soviet Union and recently announced the doubling of our bilateral aid for Russia.

Baltic States

40. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what new proposals he has to extend the scope of the know-how fund in the Baltic states.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The know-how fund is considering new proposals which will benefit the agriculture, finance and small business and energy sectors and promote good government.

Nagorno-Karabakh

42. Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what role his Department is playing in helping the Azeris of Nagorno-Karabakh.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: It is not possible to identify assistance specifically provided to the Azeris of Nagorno-Karabakh. However, since December 1992 the ODA has provided £750,000 in response to appeals by the International Committee of the Red Cross and the UN High Commissioner for Refugees. Through these organisations we have provided relief assistance to both Azeris and Armenians displaced by the conflict whether they be in Azerbaijan, Armenia or Norgorno-Karabakh itself.

Food Aid

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many people are estimated now to be receiving British food relief on a regular basis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Most United Kingdom food aid is for relief purposes and is not targeted to any group of people on a regular basis. In 1992-93 the United Kingdom supplied over 244,000 tonnes of food aid to developing countries, in addition to paying for our share of European Community food aid. This would in theory be enough to provide around 1·4 million people with their basic needs for a year. But in practice no single group is wholly dependent on food aid from the United Kingdom.

Yugoslavia

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans there are to send humanitarian convoys to Goradze and Zepa in Bosnia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), which co-ordinates the international relief effort to the former Yugoslavia, is making every effort to deliver relief supplies to Gorazde and Zepa. But over the last few months it has only been possible to reach these towns sporadically by road convoy because of the continuing hostilities. The United Kingdom has contributed 58 vehicles plus support staff to UNHCR's road convoys.

However, supplies are presently being airdropped to Gorazde, Srebrenica and Zepa. The United Kingdom has provided almost £600,000 of food for the air drops.

EDUCATION

Environmental Studies

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what plans he has to introduce environmental studies into the national curriculum;

(2) what initiatives promoting environmental awareness in schools his Department supports; and what funding is available for these initiatives.

Mr. Forth: All pupils receive education about the environment through the national curriculum core and foundation subjects, the terms of which are set out in the statutory orders and associated documents issued by the Department. The Government will support £85 million of local education authority expenditure on the basic curriculum and assessment in 1993-94 which will be mainly devolved to schools to spend either on training or on books and equipment; and a further £25 million on training to enhance primary teachers' knowledge in specific subjects, including geography which has particular relevance to environmental education.

Tests

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what rights under statute and remedy against failure parents of children at each of the key stages have to see that their children are tested this term; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Section 10 of the Education Reform Act 1988 imposes a duty on head teachers of maintained schools to secure the implementation of the national curriculum, including the assessment arrangements at the end of the key stages. Local education authorities and governing bodies are under a corresponding duty to exercise their functions so as to secure its implementation.

Teachers' conditions of employment require them to assess, record and report on the development, progress and attainment of pupils, under the reasonable direction of the head teacher, and having regard to the curriculum for the school.

Parents who believe that LEAs or governing bodies are failing to discharge a statutory duty associated with the national curriculum should in the first instance complain through the local complaints machinery, provided for in section 23 of the Education Reform Act. If their complaint is not satisfactorily dealt with, they may then complain to the Secretary of State who may give directions to the LEA or governing body concerned, under section 99 of the Education Act 1944, if he considers this is appropriate.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what action he is taking to ensure that children's special educational needs are being identified and met at the earliest possible stage;

(2) what action he is taking to improve the information and support available to parents during the full assessment and drawing up of statements on children with special educational needs.

Mr. Forth: The Education Bill, currently before Parliament, provides for the Secretary of State to issue a code of practice which will give practical guidance to which LEAs must have regard when fulfilling their duties towards children with SEN. The Government have tabled amendments in another place, which, if accepted, would ensure that the code applied to all LEA maintained and self-governing (GM) schools and offered those schools guidance on early action to identify, assess and monitor pupils with special educational needs. The Government envisage one of the guiding principles of the code will be that it should promote partnership between LEAs and parents, not least by ensuring that parents are kept fully informed of the authority's thinking and the reasons behind an authority's decisions at all stages of the process of making assessments and statements. The guidance will be tightly defined to ensure that all children who need an assessment and subsequently a statement are properly safeguarded and will ensure that full parental involvement is encouraged at all stages.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Road Schemes

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment has been made of the costs and benefits of (a) the Comber bypass, (b) the Balloo road stage 3 Bangor, (c) the A5 Burndenneth, (d) the Ann street/Thomas street, Dungannon, (e) the A5 Magheramason, (f) the A5 Leckpatrick, (g) the Antrim-Ballymena stage 2, (h) the Greenmount link, Coleraine, (i) the Omagh throughpass stage 2, (j) the Belfast urban area plan roads (95/96) and (k) the Belfast urban area plan roads (96/97) road schemes.

Mr. Atkins: Economic and environmental assessments of these road improvement schemes have been undertaken. The assessments showed that each scheme was good value for money.

House Conversion, Donaghadee

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what date Donaghadee urban district council, as planning authority, gave planning permission for the conversion of Warren house, Warren avenue, Donaghadee, into two flats.

Mr. Atkins: The Department does not have records of the planning decisions made by Donaghadee urban district council.

Rates

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the outstanding demand for rates unpaid in due time; and what steps are being taken for this collection.

Mr. Atkins: Responsibility for rate collection has been delegated to the Rate Collection Agency under its chief executive, Mr. D. Gallagher. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from D. W. Gallagher to Mr. Peter Robinson dated 26 April 1993:

You recently asked a Parliamentary Question about overdue outstanding rates and the steps that are taken to collect them. As I am responsible for the Rate Collection Agency the Secretary of State has asked me to reply.

Overdue outstanding rates in Northern Ireland at 31 March 1993 amounted to £6·71 million or 1·84 per cent. of a total collectable rate of £364·97 million. At 31 March 1992 overdue outstanding rates were £7·24 million or 1·99 per cent. of a total collectable rate of £364·8 million.

If rates are not paid on time by one of the prescribed payment methods a ratepayer will be sent a Final Demand following which he/she will be issued with a summons (Process in Debt Proceedings) for the Magistrates Court where the Agency will seek a Decree for the amount outstanding. Ratepayers who remain unwilling or unable to discharge their debts then become liable to enforcement action by the Enforcement of Judgments Office or to further legal action under Insolvency Legislation.

Copies of the Rate Collection Agency's 1991/92 Annual Report have been placed in the House of Common's Library. This report contains statistical information about rate collection and recovery activity.

Should you require further information please let me know.

Terrorism

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has sent copies of the consultation paper "Terrorist Exploitation of the Construction Industry in Northern Ireland" to the Northern Ireland Law Society and the Northern Ireland Bar Council.

Mr. Mates: I am not prepared to disclose to whom copies of this confidential consultative paper have been sent.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the consultation paper "Terrorist Exploitation of the Construction Industry in Northern Ireland" has been discussed by the Anglo-Irish secretariat.

Mr. Mates: I am not prepared to disclose with whom the Government have had discussions about this confidential consultative paper.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list those organisations which received copies of the consultation paper "Terrorist Exploitation of the Construction Industry in Northern Ireland", indicating the date which they were dispatched and the date and from whom responses were received.

Mr. Mates: No.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will now forward to the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights, NIACRA, the constitutional political parties in Northern Ireland and parties represented in this House, copies of the consultation paper "Terrorist Exploitation of the Construction Industry in Northern Ireland".

Mr. Mates: I will consider requests for copies from individuals and organisations as they arise.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland why the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights was not sent a copy of the consultation paper "Terrorist Exploitation of the Construction Industry in Northern Ireland".

Mr. Mates: I am not prepared to disclose whether or not a particular individual or organisation received a copy of the confidential consultative paper.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will place copies of the consultation paper "Terrorist Exploitation of the Construction Industry in Northern Ireland" in all the public libraries in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Mates: No.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will extend the period for responses to the consultation paper "Terrorist Exploitation of the Construction Industry in Northern Ireland" until 30 June to enable those bodies and persons previously unaware of the paper to make responses.

Mr. Mates: I will be grateful to receive responses at any time.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects to introduce legislation based on his proposals contained in the consultative paper "Terrorist Exploitation of the Construction Industry in Northern Ireland" and the responses to it.

Mr. Mates: Our ideas are at a formative stage, and it would be premature to announce our intention to legislate or to establish a timetable for possible legislation.

Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cormorants were killed under licence to prevent serious damage to fisheries in Northern Ireland in each year since 1985 and 1993 to date.

Rates

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table to show the rateable value of (a) each parliamentary constituency in Northern Ireland, (b) each council area in Northern Ireland, (c) each district electoral area in each council area and (d) each ward; and if he will indicate the rates due from each of the areas and the average sum due per elector in each such area or as much of such information as is conveniently available to him.

Mr. Atkins: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Rates Collection Agency under its chief executive, Mr. David Gallagher.

Letter from D. W. Gallagher to Mr. William Ross, dated 26 April 1993:

As I am responsible for the Rate Collection Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to reply to a Parliamentary Question recently put down by you. This related to rateable value, rates due and the average sum due per elector in each parliamentary constituency, district council area, each district electoral area and each ward in Northern Ireland.

Unfortunately all of the information you seek is not available. However I am able to provide statistics on a district council basis, and these are set out on the attached schedule.

Rateable values and the number of electors, but not rates data can be provided on a ward basis. However rating due is at present being revised to reflect the outcome of the recent Local Government Boundaries Commission Review and this information will become available during July.

I will write to you again at that time.

HEALTH

Medicines (Licences)

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many licences the Medicines Control Agency has (a) issued and (b) refused each year since April 1989; and how many licences have been issued each year since 1989 in response to applications from other EC countries.

Dr. Mawhinney: The figures shown in the table relate to product licences only for the three years up until March 1992. Figures from April 1992 to March 1993 are not yet available. Manufacturers' licences, wholesale dealer and parallel import product licences have been excluded. The numbers of refusals relate to formal refusals; in many cases, applicants chose to withdraw their applications rather than pursue them to a formal refusal. No separate records are maintained which would enable the Medicines Control Agency readily to identify product licence applications arising from other EC countries.

	Product licences issued	Applications refused
April 1989 to March 1990	663	3
April 1990 to March 1991	728	0
April 1991 to March 1992	883	5

Mental Health

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on her Department's forthcoming survey on mental health.

Mr. Yeo: The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys is carrying out the first national survey to assess the extent of psychiatric morbidity in Great Britain. The survey, due to be completed in 1995, will provide information on the nature and extent of psychiatric illnesses among adults and will enquire into any associated social disabilities; the variation in the use of health, social and voluntary care services; and the risk factors associated with mental illness. The survey information will form a baseline against which changes in the health and social functioning of people with a mental illness can be measured, thus providing a means of assessing progress towards achieving the targets set out in our White Paper, "The Health of the Nation" (Cm 1986).

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 5 February, Official Report, column 377-78, if she will give details of the ethnic origin of those detained under section 136 of the Mental Health Act 1983 during each year from 1984 to 1986 in the North West Thames, North East Thames, South East Thames and South West Thames areas; what assessment she has made of the extent of and the reasons for the discrepancy between such detentions in those areas compared with other regions; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: This information is not available centrally.

Hypnotherapists and Psychotherapists

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she will introduce regulations for the registration of hypnotherapists and psychotherapists.

Mr. Sackville: We have no such plans.

Community Care

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she is taking to improve access to community care services for elderly people of Asian origin and other ethnic minorities.

Mr. Yeo: Responsibility for ensuring proper access to community care services for all groups rests with local authorities. To help local authorities do this the Department:

(a) issued policy guidance about ensuring that assessment of community care needs is accessible to people from ethnic minority backgrounds and that services are appropriate (copies are available in the Library);
(b) issued practice guidance on care management and assessment which draws specific attention to the needs of ethnic minority communities and is developing further practice guidance on ethnic minority issues (copies are available in the Library);
(c) produced audio cassettes about community care in seven minority languages;
(d) grant aids the race equality unit, which advises local authorities on good practice in the delivery of personal social services to people from minority groups.

Psychologists

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received concerning the statutory registration of psychologists; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received concerning the statutory registration of psychologists; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: We have received representations from the British Psychological Society and are considering whether psychologists employed by the national health service should be required to be chartered.

Orthopaedics Units

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many small orthopaedic specialised hospital units have been closed in the past two years.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research she has commissioned on the effect of the closure of small hospital units that specialise in orthopaedics on waiting times for hip or knee replacements.

Mr. Sackville: None. The patients charter guarantees that all patients waiting for hip or knee replacement operations will be treated within a maximum of 18 months. Latest waiting time figures show that the number of orthopaedic patients waiting more than a year fell by over 45 per cent. in the year to September 1992.

Pharmacists

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will review the working practices of the Prescription Pricing Authority in respect of the remuneration of pharmacists; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: No.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received about the proposed changes to community pharmacists' pay.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have received a number of representations about our proposals for restructuring pharmacists' remuneration. We shall take these into account in the further discussions we shall be having with the pharmacists' representatives.

General Practitioners

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals she has to restrict the ability of general practitioners to work in single-handed practices; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

Dentistry

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many salaried dentists are currently employed within each health district in England.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information provided by the Dental Practice Board by family health services authority area at 31 December 1992 is shown in the table. The information relating to the first quarter of 1993 is not yet available.

Since 1989 when the scheme started, the Department has spent over £720,000 and 140 practices have benefited. An assessment of the scheme is being undertaken and any decisions about its future will be made in the light of the outcome of the assessment.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has on the number of dentists who offer NHS patients the option of a Denplan care programme as an alternative.

Dr. Mawhinney: None. Private dental treatment is entirely a matter between individual patients and dentists.

Child Migrants

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the present level of funding for the Child Migrants Trust; and what future support is envisaged;

(2) what action she will take to advise relatives of child migrants of the present locations of persons who left the United Kingdom prior to 1967; and if she will make a statement;

(3) what action she will take to assist child migrants living abroad to receive details of family background and to re-establish United Kingdom family contact.

Mr. Yeo: The Department has no information regarding the location of former child migrants. There are no plans to assist directly. The Department has provided funds to the Child Migrant Trust which provides a record tracing and advisory service. The trust has been awarded a grant of £25,000 for this year. Decisions about future funding will be taken at the appropriate time.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what dialogue she has undertaken with health departments in (a) Australia, (b) New Zealand and (c) Canada concerning the welfare of United Kingdom child migrants;

(2) what dialogue she has undertaken with the (a) Australian, (b) New Zealand and (c) Canadian Governments in order to identify and provide support services and advice to United Kingdom child migrants.

Mr. Yeo: None.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has available identifying the number of child migrants who have located and rejoined their families in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Yeo: None.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes are planned in the pay of the ambulance service in the 1993-94 financial year.

Mr. Sackville: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State set out in her letter of 12 November 1992 to national health service employing bodies, including NHS trusts, the limits she expected to be applied to pay settlements throughout the NHS in the year from that date, a copy of which was deposited in the Library. In that context, offers of an increase of 1·5 per cent. in pay and allowances for the 1993-94 year have been made for those ambulance personnel whose pay is negotiated centrally. Information is not available about pay settlements for staff on NHS trust-specific terms and conditions.

Drug Prescribing

Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what sources, independent of her Department and of the pharmaceutical industry, have been used by the Advisory Committee on National Health Service Drugs since 1985 to obtain advice on the costs of the products considered for inclusion on the selected list or on the impact of their actions on other national health service costs.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Advisory Committee on National Health Service Drugs is an independent body of experts whose members use whatever sources they consider necessary to obtain advice and information for their deliberations.

Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what are the elements of the costs of administering the selected list scheme;

(2) what has been the cost of the administration of the selected list in each year of its operation; and what is the estimated cost for 1993-94 and 1994-95.

Dr. Mawhinney: The cost elements of administering the selected list scheme are those incurred in running the Advisory Committee on National Health Service Drugs and of providing departmental administrative support for the Committee. This amounted to £55,000 in 1991-92. Figures for earlier years are not available but the costs have remained constant in real terms since the inception of the scheme in 1985. An increase of around 50 per cent. is forecast for 1993-94 to deal with the extra work of reviewing the 10 new categories of drugs. Costs thereafter are expected to reduce to the earlier levels.

Hepatitis and Dysentry

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of hepatitis and dysentery there have been in England for each year since 1987.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the tables.

Number of cases notified for Viral Hepatitis in England, 1987-1991

Health Authorities

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each family health services authority the remuneration paid to chief executives and non-executive directors.

Dr. Mawhinney: Chief executives of family health services authorities (FHSAs) are remunerated in range of £33,160 to £60,650 per year according to the size of the FHSA. All non-executive directors are remunerated at the rate of £5,000 per year.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give details of the remuneration paid to chief executives and non-executive directors of district health authorities.

Dr. Mawhinney: Chief executives of district health authorities (DHAs) are remunerated in the range of £41,830 to £69,990 per year according to the size of the DHA. All non-executive directors are remunerated at the rate of £5,000 per year.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will list for each family health services authority the names of the chief executives and all non-executive directors;

(2) if she will list for each district health authority the names of the chief executive and all non-executive directors.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally. The appointment of chief executives to family health services authorities (FHSAs) and district health authorities (DHAs) is not carried out by Ministers, but is a matter for the FHSAs and DHAs themselves. Non-executive directors of FHSAs and DHAs are appointed by the appropriate regional health authority.

AIDS

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people in the United Kingdom have developed AIDS.

Mr. Sackville: Up to 31 March 1993, 7,341 AIDS cases had been reported.

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the total Government expenditure on HIV/AIDS medical research; and if she will provide an estimate of total expenditure from all sources on HIV/AIDS medical research.

Mr. Sackville: The cumulative total of Government funding for AIDS research for the financial years 1986-87 to 1992-93 is £105,239,000. Information about expenditure from non-governmental sources is not available centrally.

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the total expenditure from her Department in support of HIV and AIDS counselling, awareness and education programmes.

Mr. Sackville: Between 1985-86 and 1993-94 the Government have allocated £85 million to the development of the national AIDS public education campaign, including the running costs of the national AIDS helpline and related telephone services. The sum of £11·5 million is being made available in 1993-94.

The table shows the Department of Health and health education authority spend for the development of the national HIV and AIDS public education work including the running costs of the national AIDS helpline and related telephone information services. Not shown in the table are the sums spent by other Government Departments on HIV prevention work within their own spheres of interest.

HIV and AIDS public education

	Department of Health (£ million)	HEA (£ million)
1984-85	Nil	—
1985-86	0·52	—
1986-87	7·60	—
1987-88	6·74	4·47
1988-89	—	10·00
1989-90	—	12·00
1990-91	—	10·00
1991-92	—	11·00
1992-93	—	11·225

Since 1989-90 contributions have also been made towards the costs incurred by regional and district health authorities in the development of local HIV prevention activities. Regional AIDS (Control) Act 1987 reports since 1989-90 record expenditure on local HIV prevention initiatives as follows:

	£ million
1989-90	13·4
1990-91	23·4
1991-92	27·95

Figures for 1992-93 are not yet available though they are expected to reflect a steady increase in the development of district based HIV prevention work.

Figures recording the total spent on all aspects of health promotion are not collected centrally. However, the Government continue to spend more on HIV and AIDS education than on any other single health promotion programme.

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many United Kingdom citizens are HIV positive.

Mr. Sackville: Up to 31 March 1993, 19,524 reports of persons testing positive for HIV had been received. The true number of infected people will undoubtedly be higher as some will not have been tested.

Immunisation

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the percentage uptake of immunisations in each year since 1980 by district health authorities and FHSAs for (a) MMR, (b) rubella, (c) under-two diphtheria, tetanus, pertussis, polio and (d) pre-school diphtheria, tetanus and polio and BCG, together with the source of this information.

Mr. Sackville: Information on vaccination and immunisation by family health services authority is not available centrally.

Figures for the two-year uptake of diphtheria, tetanus, pertussis and polio by district health authority have been published in the Department of Health publication "Vaccination and Immunisation" since 1987-88, copies of which are available in the Library.

Further information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will place in the Library the latest edition of "Vaccination and Immunisation" based on forms KC50, KC50A and KC51.

Mr. Sackville: The latest edition available is for the period 1990-91, a copy of which is in the Library.

Comfrey

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement indicating the total number of cases in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the world of human veno-occlusive liver disease attributable directly to comfrey consumption; and what percentage of the total incidence of this condition these figures represented in the years in which they arose.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally. However, table 15, pages 184-191, of the World Health Organisation's "Environmental Health Criteria 80", 1988, lists cases of pyrrolizidine alkaloid poisoning and human reports of veno-occlusive disease from the United Kingdom and many other countries. All these cases are linked to the consumption of plants, including comfrey, which contain the toxic pyrrolizidine alkaloids. The Committee on the Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment, in its recent statement on the safety-in-use of comfrey, refers to an additional two cases of veno-occlusive disease reported since 1988, one in the USA and one in New Zealand.

Copies of the World Health Organisation publication, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food's analysis of comfrey products, the advice of the Committee on the Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment and the Food Advisory Committee together with a draft information note are available in the Library.

WALES

Forestry Commission

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to change the existing status for the Forestry Commission in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. and learned Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland to my hon. Friend the Member for Staffordshire, Moorlands (Mr. Knox) on 30 March 1993, Official Report, column 150.

Unadopted Sewers

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make funding available to enable water public limited companies and local authorities to upgrade existing unadoptable sewers to adoptable standards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Responsibility for uprating unadopted sewers to adoptable standards rests with the owners. Sections 104 and 105 of the Water Industry Act 1991 (as amended) provide an adequate mechanism to allow unadopted sewers to be adopted by the relevant authority and include provision for appeals to the Director General of Water Services in the event that adoption is refused.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to set up and fund a programme of survey work designed to measure the extent of unadopted sewers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to how many households in Wales have unadopted sewers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not available centrally.

Water Disconnections

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give figures for the number of disconnections of domestic water supply for each year since 1987.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information the hon. Member requested is set out in the following table. Separate data for domestic disconnections are not available for 1987-88 and 1988-89. Information on statutory water company disconnections was not collected prior to 1988-89.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many careers services organisations of the eight county councils have opted to become (a) part of the nearest training and enterprise council, (b) free-standing organisations, (c) partnership organisations and (d) other; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Voluntary partnerships between training and enterprise councils and the careers services of local education authorities have been established in all Welsh counties. We shall be looking closely at the progress of these partnerships before deciding on what arrangements might apply in the future, as a result of legislation proposed in the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Bill.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Roger Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he intends to cap any Welsh authorities for 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Local authorities in Wales have now set their budgets and council tax for 1993-94. Almost all have budgeted within or very close to the limits implied by the provisional capping criteria I announced last December.

The provisions of the Local Government Finance Act 1992 require me to determine capping principles for a class of authority prior to announcing a decision to cap any authority of that class.

In the light of careful consideration of their budgets and all other relevant considerations I have now decided my capping principles for district councils.

The principles I have adopted broadly give effect to the provisional criteria I announced to the House last December with one modification. I have included a de minimis proviso to avoid designation in cases where the reduction which could be secured by capping would be less than £1·50 per band D household. Full details of my principles have, this afternoon, been placed in the Library of the House.

On the basis of these principles I have designated Aberconwy borough council for capping. Its 1993-94 budget is £8,734,695 and I have proposed a cap of £8,566,950. The original council tax for a two adult band D dwelling was £69. The reduction implied by the proposed cap is £8.

On the basis of all the information currently available to me, I am satisfied that my proposed cap is reasonable and appropriate in all the circumstances of the authority and that the reduction I propose is achievable this year.

If Aberconwy wishes to accept the amount proposed, it now has 28 days in which to do so. It can also challenge my proposal within 28 days, suggesting an alternative figure together with reasons for it, and in those circumstances it is open to me to set the final cap at a different level from the one I originally proposed. If Aberconwy does not accept my proposed cap, I will seek the approval of the House for a draft order confirming the cap.

Within 21 days of the final cap having been set, Aberconwy must set a new budget requirement reflecting the cap; and this will feed through to the council tax. I expect that by the end of June Aberconwy will have calculated a new budget requirement leading to a reduced level of council tax.

I propose shortly to apply to the High Court for leave to seek a judicial review of the council tax calculations made by Gwent county council for 1993-94. If leave is granted by the court, the judicial review could result in the authority making new budget requirement and council tax calculations. For this reason, I do not consider it appropriate to make a decision on my capping principles for county councils until such time as this matter is resolved. However, on the basis of the budgetary information available to me, I see no reason to pursue the matter of designation in respect of the other county councils in Wales.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Grey Herons

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many grey herons were killed under licence in England and Wales in each year since 1988, to prevent serious damage to fisheries.

Mr. Soames: The information requested is as follows:

1988	0
1989	0
1990	0
1991	5
1993	[1]1

[1] Returns of action taken under licence still awaited, so figures may not be final totals.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice on non-lethal preventive measures is given to those applying for licences to kill grey herons under section 16 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, to prevent serious damage to fisheries.

Mr. Soames: All applicants receive a site visit carried out by the Agricultural Development Advisory Service which advises on the appropriate use of methods to prevent or deter herons from feeding at the site. These can include the use of physical proofing, such as netting over of small ponds, and the use of audible and visual bird scarers, including pyrotechnic devices.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many licences were (a) applied for and (b) issued under section 16 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 to permit the killing of grey herons in England and Wales for each year since 1988, to prevent serious damage to fisheries.

Mr. Soames: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Applications received	Licences issued
1992	6	[1]4
Totals	15	7

[1] In two of these cases the applications were received in 1992 but the licences were not issued until January 1993.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence of serious damage to fisheries is required before a licence under section 16 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 to permit killing of grey herons is issued.

Mr. Soames: Applicants are required to demonstrate that herons are causing serious economic damage to their fishery enterprise and that other methods of preventing or reducing that damage have been tried or are impractical.

Fishery Inspectors

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many fishery inspectors have been employed in total in the United Kingdom in each of the last three years; and how many fishery inspectors or their equivalent have been employed in each of the other EC countries in each of the last three years.

Mr. Curry: The number of British sea fisheries officers employed by the fisheries Departments in the United Kingdom in each of the last three years is as follows:

	Number
1990	181
1991	182
1992	205

Comparable information is not readily available for other EC countries.

Comfrey

Ms Corston: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to meet in the near future representatives of the Action Group for the Relief of Pain and Distress or the Society for the Promotion of Nutritional Therapy to discuss the ban on the sale of comfrey products.

Mr. Soames: I met last month with representatives of a number of organisations, including the Society for the Promotion of Nutritional Therapy, in relation to the withdrawal of certain comfrey products. I have no plans for further meetings in the near future.

EC Agriculture Spending

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will set out the amounts of the five main EC agricultural spending programmes for the last year in which figures are available for each EC country, with the best available estimate in each case of the amount that has been fraudulently misapplied.

Mr. Curry: It is not possible to estimate the extent of fraud in the common agricultural policy since, by definition, undetected fraud cannot be measured. However, all member states report cases of EAGGF guarantee-funded irregularity—the definition of which goes wider than fraud). Details of the number and value of cases reported in 1991 are given in annex 20 of the 21st financial report on the European agricultural guidance and guarantee Fund—1991—guarantee section and food aid accounts clearance, a copy of which was placed in the Library. Annex 2 of this report also contains details of expenditure charged by sector and by member state against the 1991 EC Budget.

Agricultural Land (Maps)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the Prime Minister's answer to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Llwyd) of 20 April, Official REeport, column 181 on the integrated administration control system, what mapping documentation can be used as alternatives by farmers if they have difficulty obtaining maps of the right scale; and what further advice on this he has issued to his Ministry's offices and farmers' organisations.

Mr. Curry: We made clear in the IACS explanatory booklet sent to all farmers the procedure to be followed if they could not obtain the required maps or field reference numbers by the 15 May deadline for submission of the IACS application form. The advice to such farmers was to make sure they submitted the application before the deadline, together with an explanation of why any supporting detail could not be supplied, and give details of each field area and its location. Full details would be required later. My right hon. Friend the Minister has since announced that where existing maps of forage areas do not give field sizes, we will accept estimates. The location could be identified through a 1:25,000 map which is readily obtainable. The advice we have given to the Department's offices and farming organisations is that we should be as reasonable as we possibly can, within the rules of the scheme, over the submission of mapping documentation.

Green Belt Farms

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what guidelines and advice his Department has published to encourage farms situated in the green belt to sell their own produce and that of their neighbours.

Mr. Baldry: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the answer I have given him today.

SCOTLAND

Prison Stores

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (a) if he will make a statement on the costs so far of market testing in relation to the central prison stores at Fauldhouse, West Lothian and what is his policy in relation to the future operation of prison stores.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The best estimate of cost to date, including staff time and consultancy fees, in connection with the market testing of the central prison stores is approximately £92,000. The future operation of the stores will be determined by the outcome of the market test.

Hepatitis and Dysentery

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases of hepatitis and dysentery there have been in each year since 1987.

Mr. Stewart: The number of cases of viral hepatitis and bacillary dysentery notified in Scotland since 1987 are as follows:

Year	Viral hepatitis	Bacillary dysentery
1987	511	344
1988	848	196
1989	831	154
1990	546	235
1991	556	1,526
1992	316	3,506

Infertility Treatment

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the implications for the funding secured for in vitro fertilisation treatment centres of his decision to cancel the funding of such centres; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 23 April 1993]: No decision was ever taken to provide central funding for in vitro fertilisation services in Scotland. There are therefore no funding implications.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Deaths, Waco

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the deaths of 24 British citizens in the inferno at Waco, Texas, on 19 April.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The 51-day siege by the FBI of the Branch Davidian compound headquarters in Waco, Texas, ended tragically on 19 April with the reported deaths of more than 80 men, women and children, 24 of them British citizens, including a six-year-old girl. Two British men and one British women survived. Throughout the siege we maintained close contact with the United States authorities, including the FBI. The President of the United States has ordered an inquiry into these events.

International Criminal Court

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy toward the establishment of an international criminal court.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is clear that there are substantial legal, political and practical obstacles to establishing an international criminal court. The International Law Commission has for the last three years been actively addressing many of them. At the General Assembly last year, we supported the commission's request to be granted a mandate to draft a statute of an international criminal court as a matter of priority. We now await that draft and will give it careful consideration.

Sellafield

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have received from (a) foreign Governments, (b) foreign parliamentarians and (c) foreign non-governmental organisations in regard to the proliferation and nuclear materials safeguards problems posed by the planned opening of the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Since the THORP project was approved by Parliament in 1978 we have received a number of such representations from abroad, especially in categories B and C of the question. We recognise their non-proliferation responsibilities and would not permit any plutonium to be exported from THORP unless they were satisfied that the material would not be misused.

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representation his Department had at the non-proliferation seminar at Rhodes house. Oxford on 21 April.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Foreign and Commonwealth Office officials attended the seminar.

Iraq

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will reconsider Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the imposition of restrictions on the supply of medicines to Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are no restrictions on the supply of medicines to Iraq and they have never been prohibited under the terms of the United Nations sanctions regime against Iraq.

China

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement regarding Lord Howe's visit to China to discuss human rights; and if Lord Howe raised the matter of population control with the Chinese authorities.

Mr. Goodlad: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson) on 15 March, Official Report, column 33. During his visit to China in December last year my right hon. and learned Friend Lord Howe raised a wide number of issues including questions relating to reducing China's population growth.

EC Treaties

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the titles, dates signed and scope of each treaty unaffected by the Maastricht treaty in force between the United Kingdom and (a) France, (b) Germany, (c) Italy, (d) Spain, (e) Greece, (f) the Netherlands and (g) Portugal.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The information requested by the hon. Gentleman is not readily available and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Yugoslavia

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs of he will make a statement on his assessment of the British interest in the former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have an important interest in peace and stability in the Balkans. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs made clear in his statement to the House on 19 April, our objectives are to make the Bosnian Serbs and the Serb Government abandon the pursuit of their aims by the use of force; to prevent the fighting from spreading to Croatia, Kosovo, Macedonia or elsewhere; to provide the wherewithal, through the Vance-Owen process, for a just political solution; and to relieve the needs of the hungry and sick.

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received regarding protection of those Bosnian Muslims in Sebrenica who have surrendered their weapons to the United Nations from subsequent attack by the Serbs.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None. UN Security Council resolution 819 demands the immediate cessation of attacks against Srebrenica and that all parties treat the town and its surroundings as a safe area. We have called on all parties to comply fully with this resolution and to co-operate with UNPROFOR in its efforts to monitor the humanitarian situation.

EC Fraud

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which bodies and institutions can bring about investigations as to fraud in the European Commission; and which institutions can initiate publicity on fraudulent activities within the European Commission.

Mr. Garel-Jones: It is open to any individual, company or other body to bring to the Commission's attention any perceived irregularities, and to publicise such changes as they wish. The Commission itself, like member states, has the main responsibility to ensure adequate controls are in place to prevent fraud and to bring to light any fraud that occurs. In addition to the Commission's internal controls, the Court of Auditors has a responsibility to examine all Community expenditure, including the Commission's administrative budget, and report to the Council of Ministers and European Parliament. Largely as the result of United Kingdom proposals, the Maastricht treaty would introduce measures aimed at improving the protection of the Community's financial interests. These include:

(i) enhanced status for the Court of Auditors as a Community institution, emphasising the importance of the court's role (Art 4);
(ii) an explicit reference to the Commission's responsibility to implement the Budget with regard to the principles of sound financial management (Art 205);
(iii) a requirement for the court to provide the Council and European Parliament with a statement of assurance on the reliability of the Community's accounts and on the legality and regularity of underlying transactions (Art 206a);
(iv) appointment of an ombudsman, able to receive complaints from citizens of the union and others concerning instances of maladministration in the activities of the Community institutions (Art 138e);
(v) enhanced powers for the European Parliament in scrutinising the implementation of the EC Budget and the discharge procedure (Art 206b), and in setting up temporary committees of inquiry (Art 138c);
(vi) an explicit reference to the obligation on member states to counter EC fraud (Art 209a).

Nepal

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the latest situation concerning human rights in Nepal.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We welcome the considerable improvement in Nepal's human rights record since the restoration of democracy in 1990.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Public Sector Pensions

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the total unfunded liability of civil service and other public sector pensions and the amount by which that liability has increased or decreased in each of the last three years.

Mr. Portillo: The latest figures available for the liabilities of the main unfunded public service pension schemes in the United Kingdom relate to 31 March 1991. The estimated total liabilities of the present and former members accrued to that date are around £170 billion. The comparative figures requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Valuation Office

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what targets will be set for the Valuation Office executive agency for the year 1993-94.

Mr. Nelson: I have set the following key targets for the agency in 1993-94.

OPERATIONAL TARGETS

Council tax
To clear 280,000 appeals against the new council tax lists.

Non-domestic rates
To clear 295,000 appeals against the 1990 rating valuation lists.

Direct taxes
To undertake 112,000 valuation cases for the Inland Revenue concerning inheritance and capital gains taxes.

Other
To undertake 130,000 valuations for other government departments, public bodies and local authorities.

Financial performance and cost efficiency
To ensure that the agency's net operating costs are at least fully covered by receipts and to achieve efficiency savings of approximately 2·5 per cent. on its gross expenditure.

Citizen's charter
To reply to 90 per cent. of all correspondence within 28 days of receipt; and to achieve continuing improvements in timeliness and valuation standards in connection with casework of 1 per cent. per annum.

Further details of the performance measures and targets are set out in the agency's business plan for 1993-94 and in its corporate plan, copies of which will be placed in the Library of the House on publication.

Public Servants

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the numbers and costs of public servants paid out of the Consolidated Fund and local authorities revenues by (i) each Government Department and agency, (ii) all local authorities and (iii) other public bodies in 1979 and at the latest available date.

Mr. Portillo: The information is set out in the table. Executive agencies did not exist in 1979; agency figures for 1991-92 are included within the relevant departmental total.

Debtor Countries

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what further plans he has to alleviate the burden of debt owed by developing countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: The United Kingdom has an excellent record of helping those developing countries with debt problems. It was a direct result of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's initiative for the poorest and most indebted countries following International Monetary Fund sponsored programmes of reform, that the Paris Club of major creditor Governments began implementing the Trinidad terms in December 1992. These provide for the equivalent of the cancellation of up to 50 per cent. of eligible bilateral official debt and a commitment on the part of creditors to examine the whole stock of such debt after a period of proven economic and financial responsibility. So far, 15 of the very poorest and most indebted countries have benefited, resulting in the equivalent debt cancellation of almost $1¾ billion. More will follow.

The Government are, however, aware that for some of the most desperate cases the terms as currently applied will not be enough. For this reason, we are pursuing with our creditor country colleagues improvements in the terms. Specifically, we would like to see the degree of concessionality increased for those countries that need it and quicker action on the stock of debt for those countries that already have a proven track record of reform.

The rationale for the policy is threefold: first, to protect as best we can the interests of taxpayers because their money is at risk when countries cannot repay their debts; secondly, to reduce debt to realistically manageable levels and thereby increase the recoveries received; thirdly, to promote development—for which simply writing off debt is not sufficient. Countries must practise sound social and economic policies to benefit from debt reduction as a catalyst for development.

Insider Dealing

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the number of (a) prosecutions and (b) successful prosecutions under insider dealing control legislation in the last 12 months.

Mr. Nelson: In the last 12 months the prosecution of nine individuals, under the Companies Securities (Insider Dealing) Act 1985, has been concluded. Five prosecutions led to conviction.

Tax Refunds

Mr. Madel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the annual interest paid by the Exchequer caused by delay in making refunds on excessive assessments made by the Inland Revenue; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The Inland Revenue aims to make repayments promptly as it recognises that hardship can occur if repayment is delayed whatever the reason. Interest on delayed repayments of overpaid tax—called repayment supplement—is added automatically where appropriate.

The total amount of repayment supplement paid for 1991-92 was £76,116,026·51.

Maastricht Treaty

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether moneys paid through the EC cohesion fund in advance of ratification of the Maastricht treaty are repayable if the treaty is not ratified; and if he will set out the relevant text.

Sir John Cope: The EC cohesion fund envisaged by the Maastricht treaty cannot be established before the treaty has been ratified. Accordingly, the Edinburgh European Council invited the Council to adopt, before 1 April 1993, a regulation to establish an interim cohesion financial instrument, based on article 235 of the present treaty. Since the regulation is based on the present treaty, the question of repayment of expenditure incurred under the interim instrument, if the Maastricht treaty were not to be ratified, does not arise.

Fuel Bills (VAT)

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of the revenue raised from his proposal to charge value added tax on supplies of fuel and power for domestic, residential and charity non-business use will be attributable to the standing charges paid by customers in their gas and electricity bills.

Sir John Cope: Standing charges account for around 12 per cent. of total expenditure on domestic fuel and power.

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of the revenues raised from his proposal to charge value added tax on supplies of fuel and power for domestic, residential and charity non-business use he expects to be paid (a) by charities and (b) by private households.

Sir John Cope: It is estimated that around 1 per cent. of the additional yield from extending VAT to all fuel and power is likely to be paid by charities. We expect almost all of the remaining additional yield will be in respect of private housholds, although there is no reliable information on the expenditure by non-private households on fuel and power.

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with the Director General of Gas Supply or the Director General of Electricity Regulation on his proposal to charge value added tax on supplies of fuel and power for domestic, residential and charity non-business use.

Sir John Cope: My right hon. Friend has had no such discussions.

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has met representatives of organisations for elderly people to discuss his proposal to charge value added tax on supplies of fuel and power for domestic, residential and charity non-business use.

Sir John Cope: No such meetings have been held.

Football Pool Betting Duty

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the precise text of the terms of the agreement entered into by his Department with the Foundation for Sport and the Arts regarding the distribution of funds made available through the reduction in the football pool betting duty in 1991.

Sir John Cope: The conditions for the distribution of funds by the foundation are set out in its trust deed. My right hon. Friend's implementation of the reduction in pool betting duty from 40 per cent. to 37·5 per cent. indicated that he was content with these arrangements.

Income Tax

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many individuals he expects to become liable for income tax as a result of his proposal to freeze allowances in 1993-94; how many individuals he expects to cease to be liable for income tax at the standard rate as a result of his proposal to widen the lower rate band of income tax by £500 in 1993-94; and how many individuals he expects to become liable for the higher rate of income tax as a result of his proposal to freeze the basic rate limit in 1993-94.

Mr. Dorrell: About 300,000 more people will pay tax in 1993-94 under Budget proposals compared with statutory indexation of personal allowances. Increasing the lower rate band by £500 brings about 700,000 more taxpayers into the lower rate than if the lower rate limit had been indexed. Not changing the basic rate limit increases the number of higher rate taxpayers by 100,000 compared with indexation.

Public Sector Finance

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish a table setting out the value of the public sector borrowing requirement in 1991-92 and 1992-93 together with the forecasts of each of these made in the budgets of 1988, 1989, 1990, 1991, 1992 and 1993.

Mr. Portillo: The figures are set out in the table. The "Financial Statement and Budget Report" contains forecasts of the PSBR for only the current year and for the year ahead. PSBR estimates for 1991-92 and 1992-93 given in successive FSBRs prior to 1991 were projections, rather than forecasts, based on illustrative assumptions about the medium-term path of the economy.

1993 FSBR	n.a.	35·1

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish a table setting out the value of the public sector borrowing requirement as a proportion of gross domestic product at market prices for each financial year from 1963-64 onwards together with the value of public sector capital expenditure, including capital grants to the private sector, as a proportion of GDP at market prices over the same period.

Mr. Portillo: The figures requested are set out in the table. The size of the public sector has been reduced significantly over the past decade as a result of the privatisation programme.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Departmental Contracts

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the duration, value and nature of contracts awarded by his Department to Arthur Andersen, Kleinwort Benson, Denton, Hall, Begrie and Warren.

Mr. Key: My Department has not awarded any contracts to these firms.

Foundation for Sport and the Arts

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will set out the precise criteria governing organisations' eligibility for receiving grant from the Foundation for Sport and the Arts.

Mr. Brooke: The Foundation for Sport and the Arts trust deed states that the main and primary purpose for which the foundation can give grant aid is for "the promotion, support, encouragement or assistance in such manner of such athletic sports or athletic games in the United Kingdom as the Trustees may from time to time in their absolute discretion think fit".
The secondary purpose for which the trustees are able to give grants with absolute discretion is for the promotion, encouragement or assistance of the arts in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on the eligibility of angling to receive grant from the Foundation for Sport and the Arts.

Mr. Brooke: It is for the trustees to decide whether or not an activity is eligible for support under the terms of the trust deed.

TRANSPORT

Chlorine

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what safety regulations govern the transportation of chlorine by road tanker; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The regulations for the transport of dangerous goods by road are made under the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974. They include the Dangerous Substances (Carriage of Dangerous Substances in Road Tankers and Tank Containers) Regulations 1992 and the Road Traffic (Training of Drivers of Vehicles Carrying Dangerous Goods) Regulations 1992.

Among other things, these regulations require that road tankers carrying dangerous goods such as chlorine meet the appropriate construction standards and are regularly inspected, and that the dangerous goods carried are accompanied by information in writing to indicate the nature of the danger to which they could give rise. Vehicles must display a hazard warning panel and drivers must be properly trained and hold a valid vocational training certificate.

Rail Freight

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the tonnage of goods and materials transported by rail in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: This information is contained in "Transport Statistics", Great Britain, 1992, tables 9.3 and 1.9 and in British Rail's annual reports and accounts for the years in question, copies of which are in the Library.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will bring forward legislation to enable him to control British Rail charges to freight customers.

Mr. Freeman: No. Charges are set by negotiation with customers in the light of market pressures.

Power Station, Humberside

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about traffic problems arising from the construction of a gas-fired power station at Keadby, Humberside; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: A petition to the Prime Minister with over 150 signatures was received by my Department on 20 April. The petition calls for action mainly by the construction contractors and also the local highway authority.

Railways Bill

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish notes on each of the amendments made and the new clauses added to the Railways Bill by Standing Committee B in the same form as the notes printed on clauses relating to the Bill as committed.

Mr. Freeman: Revised notes on clauses for the Railways Bill will be prepared for the introduction of the Bill in the House of Lords in the normal way. The record of proceedings in Committee record the reasons I gave in Committee for Government amendments.

Jubilee Line

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport further to the answer to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan) of 20 April, Official Report, column 70, what guarantee or underwriting has been undertaken by the Government in respect of the loan from the European investment bank to Canary wharf in connection with the Jublilee line project; and whether he will make a statement.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the Government or any other public body has incurred a contingent liability as a result of the agreement by the European investment bank to provide £98 million to finance the extension of the Jubilee line.

Mr. Norris: Detailed arrangements for funding the Jubilee line extension are for agreement between London Transport/London Underground Ltd. and the parties involved in the financing of Canary wharf. These arrangements are currently under discussion and are subject to the normal rules of commercial confidentiality.

Dounreay

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what notification his Department receives of (a) dates, (b) route and port or airport of arrival and (c) transport mode of nuclear fuel rods imported from continental Europe for treatment or storage at the nuclear power establishment at Dounreay.

Mr. Norris: Notification is given to the Department under the requirements of the International Atomic Energy Agency regulations—paragraph 456—for the safe transport of radioactive material.

Plutonium Flights

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what statutory or voluntary arrangements are made for the operators responsible for the plutonium flights from Carlisle to inform his Department of the timing and routing of the flights; what is the date and route of the next plutonium flight from Carlisle; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Notification is made to the Department under the requirements of the International Atomic Energy Agency regulations—paragraph 456—for the safe transport of radioactive material.

The date and route of the next plutonium flight are matters for the operators.

Family Railcard

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will ensure that the family railcard will be available throughout the rail network after privatisation.

Mr. Freeman: BR's current range of railcards have proved successful in attracting more passengers to off-peak services. Private sector operators will clearly wish to achieve the same result and there is every reason to believe that they will introduce new initiatives in order to increase this market still further. The Government, therefore, see no need to impose specific requirements on operators to offer particular types of discount facility, with the exception of the disabled persons railcard which is provided voluntarily by British Rail and does not make a profit.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Cutlery

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee when was the last occasion that House of Commons cutlery was sold off by auction; what was the revenue gained; what was the reason for the sale; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Colin Shepherd: This is a matter for the Director of Catering Services and I shall ask her to write to the hon. Member.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Natural Environment Research Council

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which component body of the Natural Environment Research Council carries out its geological activities; and which other bodies carry on geological activities of a substantially similar kind to those carried on by the Natural Environment Research Council.

Mr. Robert Jackson: The British Geological Survey, within the Natural Environment Research Council, undertakes geological activities. There is no other comparable organisation in the United Kingdom, although there are equivalent bodies in various other countries.

DEFENCE

M3 BR90 Bridging Equipment

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made with procurement of M3 BR90 bridging equipment; which companies are the principal contractors and subcontractors; what is the timetable for development and production; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The Anglo-German development programme of the M3 amphibious bridge has now been completed. An invitation to tender was issued in February 1993 for the production of bridges to meet United Kingdom and German requirements. Following completion of the tender exercise we plan to take a decision on production in mid-1994. A number of European companies have been invited to tender, including ALVIS and GKN from the United Kingdom and EWK, the German contractor which carried out the development. Interested subcontractors have been advised to approach the potential prime contractors.

The BR90 development contract with Thompson Defence Projects (TDP), part of the Rolls-Royce Industrial Power Group, is approximately 75 per cent. complete. Negotiations are now taking place with the company for the production phase of this family of bridges. If these are successful, production is planned to commence in 1993. The principal subcontractor is Unipower, which supplies the common bridge carrying vehicles for the project.

Mr. John Anderson

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he has taken to investigate the arrest of Mr. John Anderson by MOD police in February 1992.

Mr. Aitken: Mr. Anderson was arrested by the Ministry of Defence police not in February 1992 but in April 1990. He was detained in connection with a possible case of corruption, interviewed and released without charge. Subsequently, he made a number of complaints concerning the circumstances of his arrest. These have been investigated in accordance with the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 and the report currently rests with the Police Complaints Authority whose decision is awaited.

Al Yamamah Contract

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the countries, other than Saudi Arabia, which received materials under the terms of the Al Yamamah 1 contract.

Mr. Aitken: There are none.

Atomic Weapons Establishment

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now order an independent safety investigation into the AWE.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 3 February 1993, Official Report, column 182.

RAF Wittering

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the incident on Thursday 15 April at RAF Wittering involving threatening action by a soldier towards women protesters; what was the position of the women relative to the barbed wire perimeter fence at the time; and what instructions are given to soldiers in such circumstances.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The women protesters were about 60 yd inside the station perimeter fence when they were challenged. I am satisfied that the action taken by the RAF and MOD police in removing them from the station was in accordance with MOD regulations.

Unoccupied Dwellings

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many dwellings owned by his Ministry in Plymouth are currently unoccupied.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As at 31 March 1993 the Ministry of Defence owned 250 vacant houses and flats in Plymouth, of which 243 were service married quarters and seven were Ministry of Defence civilian houses. Of these properties, 116 were either undergoing or awaiting major maintenance work or modernisation and 63 were already allocated to service families who were due to move in shortly. In addition, some 277 vacant service married quarters were in the process of being sold.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what instructions have been given to British participants in the European Community monitoring mission to Yugoslavia on the receipt and wearing of medals presented by the European Community; what rules apply to the receipt and wearing of medals awarded by the United Nations for peacekeeping duties; whether British participants in current operations in Croatia, Bosnia, the Adriatic and in enforcing the no-fly zone qualify for British campaign or gallantry medals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: British participants in the European Community monitoring mission in the former Yugoslavia have been advised that they should not accept the medal awarded by the European Community. Decisions on the acceptance and wearing of medals instituted by other countries are a matter for the sovereign, who is advised by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. Permission is not normally granted if the award is offered more than five years after the event it commemorates, or if an official British award has been instituted for the same period of service. The question of British awards for service in the former Yugoslavia, the Adriatic and in enforcing the no-fly zone is currently under consideration. The approval of the sovereign is required for British personnel to accept and wear medals awarded by the United Nations for peacekeeping duties. Her Majesty the Queen has recently agreed that British personnel who meet the qualifying criteria may receive the United Nations medal for service in the former Yugoslavia.

Queen Victoria School, Dunblane

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what investigation was made by service personnel or persons employed by his Department into allegations of bullying at the Queen Victoria school, Dunblane, made by Mr. G. Harrison in December 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: This is a matter for the chief executive of Queen Victoria school, and I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Julian Hankinson to Mr. James Wallace, dated April 1993:

I have been asked to answer to you directly the following Parliamentary Question regarding Queen Victoria School.

Date of Order Paper: 21 April 1993

"6. Mr. James Wallace (Orkney and Shetland): To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, what investigation was made by service personnel or persons employed by his Department into allegations of bullying at the Queen Victoria School, Dunblane, made by Mr. G. Harrison in December 1991; and if he will make a statement."

Answer:

As a result of the allegations of bullying at Queen Victoria School made by Mr. G. Harrison in December 1991, Central Region Police carried out an immediate investigation and concluded that there was no cause for further action on their part. At the same time, the Chairman of Her Majesty's Commissioners called for an independent enquiry which took the form of a full pastoral inspection carried out by the Scottish Schools Inspectorate. No investigation was made by Service personnel or persons employed by the Department for the very reason that all enquiries were to be completely independent and impartial.

I trust this answer is satisfactory. I would be happy to supply any further information if you require it.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Pit Closures

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the total projected cost of the package of aid which is to be made available to the coal communities affected by his pit closure programme.

Mr. Eggar: As indicated in "Prospects for Coal", £200 million of additional measures has been available to English areas affected by major job losses in mining. There is a separate package of £43 million available to corresponding areas in Wales.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will guarantee that coal miners working at a mine scheduled for closure, mothballing or development under the Government's review who elect to put the colliery into the modified review procedure do not suffer any financial loss over the period whilst awaiting the decision of the review.

Mr. Eggar: Decisions on the future of individual collieries, including consultation arrangements, and the remuneration and redundancy terms for its work force, are a matter for British Coal.

British Coal Pension Scheme

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he last met representatives of (a) British Coal and (b) the General, Municipal, Boilermakers and Allied Trades Union to discuss the future of the British Coal staff superannuation scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: There have been no such discussions.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what representations he has recently received concerning the proposal by British Coal to withhold from the British Coal staff superannuation scheme the payment of the £500 million which had been previously agreed for the funding of enhanced redundancy pensions;

(2) what recent representations he has received concerning the British Coal staff superannuation scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I have received a number of letters from the public and Members of Parliament about British Coal's staff superannuation scheme.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his policy on the decision of British Coal to withhold from the British Coal staff superannuation scheme the payment of the £500 million which had been previously agreed; when that policy was communicated to British Coal; and what assurances he has given to British Coal relating to legal or other costs which might be incurred in resisting moves to force the release of the funds to the superannuation scheme.

Mr. Eggar: The management of British Coal's staff superannuation scheme is a matter for the corporation and the scheme's trustees. British Coal is seeking a court direction on the application of its share of the surplus in the scheme before it proceeds. No indemnity has been given or offered to the corporation in respect of its legal other costs. The Department will make grant payments for additional contributions that are made by British Coal.

Methane

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the ownership of methane within coal seams in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: The Petroleum (Production) Act 1934 vests all petroleum in the Crown. For the purposes of this Act the definition of petroleum includes any natural gas—such as methane—existing in its natural condition in strata.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to clarify the rights of British Coal in relation to the coal bed methane industry.

Mr. Eggar: The Government announced in their White Paper "The Prospects for Coal" (Cm 2235) that when the coal industry is privatised, it is intended that there will be a new coal authority. The authority's powers and duties would be set out in the relevant legislation. Meanwhile, as the owner of the coal, British Coal's consent is required before any coal bed methane operations can take place.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether methane extracted under a methane drainage licence under schedule 8 of the Petroleum (Production) Regulations 1982 may be commercially exploited by the holder of that licence.

Mr. Eggar: Methane drainage licences are granted incorporating the model clauses in schedule 8 of the Petroleum (Production) Regulations 1982 for the purposes of making and keeping mines safe. The terms of the licence do not prohibit the commercial exploitation of the methane obtained in this way.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what basis British Coal assesses the value of coal that has been damaged by methane extraction.

Mr. Eggar: This is a matter for British Coal.

Offshore Oil Industry

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what conditions have been attached to oil exploration licences granted to the oil company for blocks 102/10, 103/1, 103/6, 106/27, 106/18, 106/19 and 106/23.

Mr. Eggar: The conditions attached to the oil and gas production licences granted to a consortium led by Marathon Oil for blocks 102/10, 103/1, 103/6, 106/27, 106/18, 106/19 and 106/23 are not significantly different from those shown in the indicative conditions circulated in October 1992. A copy of this document was placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the shortest distance in nautical miles between (a) RAF Chivenor and (b) RAF Valley and blocks 102/10, 103/1, 103/6, 106/27, 106/18, 106/19 and 106/23.

Mr. Eggar: The shortest distances are approximately 70 nautical miles from RAF Chivenor to block 103/6 and 53 nautical miles from RAF Valley to block 106/19.

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he treats licences granted by his Department to oil companies under previous United Kingdom continental shelf licensing rounds as contractually binding agreements.

Mr. Eggar: Yes. Licences granted to oil companies offer specified rights, subject to conditions where appropriate, over the areas comprised by the licence, for a period stipulated in the licence. In return, companies undertake to obeserve the terms of the licence and to perform any programme of work agreed with my Department.

Credit

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will bring forward proposals for legislation to prevent companies sending credit offers to minors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Consumer Affairs and Small Firms has asked the Director General of Fair Trading to review consumer credit legislation and the proposals for amending it. The need to tighten up the existing provisions which prohibit the sending of credit circulars to minors will be reassessed in the light of the Director General's advice.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to review the current laws relating to credit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: I refer the hon. and learned Gentleman to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Ashford (Sir K. Speed) on 12 March 1993, Official Report, columns 777-78.

Packaging

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he has any plans to introduce legislation designed to reduce the amount of materials and energy used, and the by-products generated in the manufacture of packaging for goods; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I have no plans to introduce legislation along the lines described. There has been a move towards lightweighting of packaging in recent years for both environmental and commercial reasons. This has been achieved without compromising the essential functions of packaging including protecting and preserving food, which itself reduces waste.

Market Overt

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to review the law of market overt; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: I hope shortly to issue a consultation paper on the law relating to transfer of title. This will invite opinions on whether reform is needed to the rule of sales in market overt.

Post Offices

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which Post Office Counters offices he has visited in Wales.

Mr. Heseltine: I have made no recent visits to any Post Office Counters offices in Wales.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which Post Office sorting offices he has visited in (a) Scotland, (b) England and (c) Wales.

Mr. Heseltine: I have made no recent visits to any Post Office sorting offices in Scotland, England or Wales.

Coal Subsidies

Mr. Cummings: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects the subsidy to the British Coal Corporation described in the White Paper "The Prospects for Coal" to become payable.

Mr. Eggar: The subsidy to the British Coal Corporation will become payable during the current financial year.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how his Department intends to finance the proposed subsidies to be made available to the British Coal Corporation as detailed in his recent White Paper.

Mr. Eggar: I shall be seeking finance for the proposed subsidy through the usual Supply estimates procedure.

Chemical Weapons Convention

Sir David Steel: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the United Kingdom will ratify the chemical weapons convention signed in Paris in January.

Mr. Sainsbury: Primary legislation is necessary to enable the United Kingdom to fulfil its obligations under the convention. We intend to ratify the convention when this legislation has been adopted.

Energy Tax

Mr. Shersby: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposal has been made by the European Community for a tax on energy designed to reduce the threat of global warming; what consideration the Government have given to this; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Although the Department of Trade and Industry has an interest in the proposed directive for a carbon/energy tax, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer is responsible for taxation matters.

I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Paymaster General on 15 January, Official Report, columns 835-36; and to the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Budget Statement on 16 March, Official Report, columns 182-83.

Waste Disposal Contracts

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether a municipal waste-to-energy scheme which had been granted a waste disposal contract before a third tranche of the non-fossil fuel obligation is announced would be eligible to bid into the new order when it is announced.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 23 April 1993]: My Department is considering the arrangements for a third renewables order under the non-fossil fuel obligation, including the technologies to be included. However, other things being equal, a scheme that was able to demonstrate a secure supply of the renewable energy resource needed to drive the generation facility would be eligible to bid, and would be better placed to meet the requirements of the legislation, than one that was not.

EMPLOYMENT

Underpayment

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to her answer of 15 March, Official Report, column 65, if she will name the eight companies prosecuted for illegal underpayment in 1992 and give the penalties incurred and the company names and business locations of all 5,165 establishments in England who paid less than statutory minimum remuneration for their workers in 1992; and if she will show how many employees were underpaid at each establishment.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The names of the employers in England prosecuted in 1992 by the wages inspectorate for underpayment of wages, together with particulars of penalties imposed by the courts, are set out in the table. The detailed results of inspections carried out by the wages inspectorate and which do not reach court, are disclosed only to the employers and workers concerned.

Training Programme

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to her answer of 23 June 1992, Official Report, columns 169-78, if she will provide an updated table of her Department's training programmes for 1992-93.

Mr. McLoughlin: This information is not yet available. I shall write to the hon. Member giving the figures requested when the information for 1992-93 is complete.

Social Affairs Council

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Carshalton and Wallington (Mr. Forman) of 16 April, Official Report, columns 739-40, what were the voting figures for each member state recorded in the meeting of the European Community's Social Affairs Council on 6 April.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None of the items on the agenda for discussion at the 6 April Social Affairs Council was brought to a conclusion, and consequently no votes were taken on them.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many claimants for unemployment benefit were advised to seek sickness or invalidity benefit instead in each month since January 1992.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. M. Fogden to Mr. Frank Dobson, dated 26 April 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to her about the number of clients on Unemployment Benefit (UB) who were advised to seek sickness or invalidity benefit instead in each month since January 1992. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The statistics in the attached table show the number of people claiming UB who left the register to start another, more appropriate, benefit in each month since April 1992. This information was only collected quarterly prior to that date. Figures are not held centrally on the numbers moving into each of the alternative benefits. As you will appreciate, Sickness and Invalidity Benefit are only two in a wide range of benefits to which former UB claimants can transfer.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Workstart

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what area will be included in the Tyneside workstart pilot scheme.

Mr. McLoughlin: This is a matter for Tyneside training and enterprise council to determine. Officials from the Employment Department are currently negotiating with the training and enterprise council to develop a proposal.

The conditions of the workstart scheme, however, mean that the pilot scheme cannot extend to residents outside the Tyneside training and enterprise council area.

Ms Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans she has to locate a workstart pilot scheme in Liverpool.

Mr. McLoughlin: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 23 March to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms Ruddock), Official Report, column 567.

SOCIAL SECURITY

European Court of Justice

10. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many cases in the European Court of Justice have been won by his Department.

Mr. Lilley: Since the beginning of 1992 the European Court of Justice has decided in favour of my Department in two cases in which I was a party.

During this time there was a total of nine ECJ cases involving the United Kingdom social security system.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the outcome of recent European Court of Justice cases affecting his Department's policies.

Mr. Burt: Since the beginning of last year, nine cases involving the United Kingdom's interpretation of EC law as it affects social security have been referred to the European Court of Justice. The European Court confirmed the United Kingdom's policy interpretation of EC legislation in six of these cases. Two cases involved the clarification of issues as they affected the individual concerned and did not require changes in United Kingdom policy. One case has required a change in the United Kingdom rules governing whether family credit may be given to workers whose families are not resident in the United Kingdom. The remaining case has been referred back to the House of Lords for final determination.

The Department can also be affected by cases involving other member states, although there have been no such recent judgments.

Fraud

12. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals his Department has to reduce fraudulent claims for social security benefits.

Mr. Lilley: For 1993-94 I have set a target for fraud identified and stopped by the Benefits Agency and by local authorities administering housing benefit and council tax benefit of nearly £1 billion.

27. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many prosecutions have been brought for social security fraud in the last five years.

Mr. Burt: In the five years ended March 1993 more than 34,000 people were prosecuted for social security fraud.

28. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures his Department is taking to tackle fraud and the abuse of benefits.

Mr. Burt: The Benefits Agency will be building upon the excellent base established in 1992-93, when over £500 million of fraud savings were achieved. Among the initiatives planned for this year are the deployment of more investigators and greater use of new technology. In addition, new financial incentives for local authorities are expected to result in a clamp down on housing benefit and council tax benefit fraud.

Unemployment Benefits

13. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much in total has been paid in unemployment benefits and to how many claimants in 1982, 1987 and 1992; and how many claimants he expects to receive what total in 1993.

Mr. Burt: In 1982-83 just under 2·5 million claimants received £5 billion in unemployment benefits. For 1987-88 there were 2·6 million recipients and a total of £6·6 billion was paid in benefits. For 1992-93 it is estimated that 2·5 million claimants received £9·3 billion. The forecast for 1993-94, in the Department's third annual report, is for 2·8 million unemployed people to receive just under £10·4 billion.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many persons over the age of 55 years received reduced unemployment benefit as a result of occupational pension payments of £35, in the last financial year.

Mr. Burt: Information in the form requested is not available.

At November 1992, the number of people whose unemployment benefit was reduced or extinguished due to their receipt of an occupational and/or personal pension was:

	Number
Unemployment Benefit reduced	18,200
Unemployment Benefit extinguished	11,800

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will take steps to ensure that all employees made compulsorily redundant receive full unemployment benefit.

Mr. Burt: We have no plans to change the rules governing entitlement to unemployment benefit of employees made compulsorily redundant.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to raise or abolish the £35 per week threshold for over-55s' pension income when claiming unemployment benefit.

Mr. Burt: We have no plans to do so.

Availability for Work

14. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the minimum hours under the availability for work requirement necessary for entitlement to income support.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to his question on 8 March, column 460.

Benefits

15. Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to promote a debate on the balance between selective and universal benefits.

Mr. Lilley: I am always keen to encourage public debate on social security issues. I would particularly welcome any interesting ideas which could inform the ongoing review of the social security system.

21. Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what benefits are currently under review; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: In the course of the long-term expenditure review, we shall be examining all aspects of the social security programme. No decisions have been taken yet; there would be no point in conducting a long-term review if we already knew the outcome. It is our policy, at this stage of the review, to keep all options open.

Child Support Agency

16. Mr. Milligan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress he has made in setting up the Child Support Agency.

Mr. Burt: The Child Support Agency began operations on 5 April as planned. Operating within the framework of the Child Support Act 1991, the agency will provide a clear focus for the assessment, collection and enforcement of maintenance payments, and ensure that many more parents meet their responsibility to maintain their children.

Housing Benefit

17. Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the proposals for the Audit Commission for improving the administration of housing benefit in so far as they apply to his Department.

Mr. Burt: We welcome the Audit Commission's view that authorities can do much to improve the delivery of housing benefit.

Departmental Budget

18. Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of total Government expenditure is currently taken by his departmental budget; and what the proportion was in 1979.

Mr. Scott: Total social security expenditure as a proportion of general Government expenditure:

	Percentage
1978-79	25·42
1992-93	32·20

Invalidity Benefit

19. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the practical and financial implications of the implementation of the judgment of the European Court of Justice, case C-328/91 (30 March 1993), in respect of the resumption of the payment of invalidity benefit to women aged 60 to 65 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The European Court's ruling specifically concerned the age conditions for entitlement to two non-contributory benefits—severe disablement allowance and invalid care allowance—and the Court expressly referred to this fact. Contributory invalidity benefit for women aged 60 to 65 was not at issue in the case before the European Court. That is the subject of a joint appeal by the Chief Adjudication Officer and the Secretary of State for Social Security in a separate case; the appeal follows the decision by a social security commissioner to allow payment of standard rate invalidity benefit to women aged 60 to 65.

Adjudication officers are currently following the commissioner's interpretation of the law in deciding invalidity benefit cases, but payment of any additional benefit awarded as a result of the commissioner's decision is being suspended by the Secretary of State until this appeal has been resolved.

Elderly People

20. Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures his Department has taken to maintain support for the elderly.

Miss Widdecombe: Since 1979 the Department has maintained the real value of the basic retirement pension; improved choice and flexibility in pension provision so that now 67 per cent. of recently retired pensioners have income from occupational pensions; and targeted additional resources to poorer pensioners—now totalling some £1 billion extra each year. Spending on benefits for the elderly has increased in real terms by 40 per cent. since 1979, to nearly £34·5 billion in 1992-93.

Income Support (Pensioners)

22. Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many low-income pensioners his Department estimates have gained from the extra increases in income support that have taken effect since the start of 1991.

Miss Widdecombe: Around 3 million pensioners on low incomes have gained from these increases.

Social Fund (Temporary Accommodation)

23. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to review Government and local office DSS policy on the allocation of the social fund to people resident in, or leaving, temporary accommodation.

Mr. Scott: We are currently carefully considering the operation of the social fund in response to a number of authoritative reports and our own close monitoring of the fund.

Value Added Tax (Fuel)

24. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received on the impact on benefit claimants arising from the imposition of VAT on domestic fuel and power; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to the reply earlier today to the hon. Member for Angus, East (Mr. Welsh).

Disability Claims

25. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he is now able to announce the removal of the backlog of backdated disability claims; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The situation on outstanding claims has improved significantly. Of new claims received prior to 1 December 1992, 99·99 per cent. have now been cleared.

Pensioners

26. Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total value of extra help which has been directed to pensioners on low incomes since 1989.

Miss Widdecombe: The total value of such extra help is now worth around £1 billion a year.

Benefits (Automated Credit Transfer)

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what has been the cost, for each year since 1987, of seeking to persuade recipients of benefits, pensions and other allowances to switch to payment by automated credit transfer;

(2) what would be the saving to his Department for each category of benefit, pension or other allowance if all recipients in each category were to switch to payment by automated credit transfer;

(3) how many people draw benefits, pensions or other allowances in cash weekly at (a) main post offices and (b) sub-post offices;

(4) if he will list, for each category of benefit, pension or other allowance, the percentage, and actual number of recipients who are paid by automated credit transfer, the percentage and actual number of recipients who are paid by Giro, and the percentage and actual number of recipients who are paid in cash weekly at post offices;

(5) what proposals he has to seek to persuade recipients of benefits, pensions or other allowances to switch to payment by automated credit transfer; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Details of the precise number of beneficiaries paid by particular methods of payment are not available. However, the estimated totals for the number of recipients for the main benefits receiving payment other than by automated credit transfer are shown in the table. The number of recipients who are paid at the post office includes all those beneficiaries paid by order book, but Girocheques may of course be cashed either at the post office or through a bank or building society account.

It is estimated that 20 million social security beneficiaries use sub-post offices and 4 million use main post offices.

Information is not available which allows a costing on a benefit basis of the savings that would be made if all beneficiaries were paid by ACT, but the total estimated administration savings from converting all payments of social security benefits to ACT is about £475 million a year.

The estimated costs of the actions taken to encourage beneficiaries to switch to payment by ACT were £535,000 in 1987-1988; £1,500,000 in 1988-1989; and £4,000 in 1990-91. No costs were incurred in the years 1989-1990, 1991-1992 and 1992-1993. During the next year, we will be making changes to form design and to leaflets, and to other information available from the Benefits Agency. These will be introduced gradually and after the appropriate research and piloting.

Estimate of number of recipients by method of payment (at December 1992)
Number (millions) and percentage of beneficiaries paid by:

Benefit	Four weekly orderbook		Fortnightly girocheque		Weekly orderbook
	millions	per cent.	millions	per cent.	millions	per cent.
Retirement pension	n/a		n/a		6·5	70
Child benefit	2·25	33	n/a		3·0	45
Income support	n/a		n/a		3·5	100
Unemployment benefit (including income support cases paid by Employment Services)	n/a		2·8	100	n/a
Invalidity benefit	n/a		n/a		1·8	100

Note: There are some circumstances when payment may be made by weekly girocheque for limited periods—these have been excluded from the table.

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security at what intervals benefits on credit transfer are paid; and whether these are in advance or arrears.

Miss Widdecombe: People who choose to have their retirement pension, widowed mother's allowance, widows benefit or widows pension paid by automated credit transfer also have a choice of receiving their benefit every four or 13 weeks, paid in arrears. War pensions are also payable either 13 or four-weekly, and if the latter three weeks are in arrears and one in advance. Child benefit, family credit, disability living allowance, disability working allowance and attendance allowance paid by automated-credit transfer are paid four-weekly in arrears.

British Coal

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to refer to the Pensions Law Review Committee matters relating to the British Coal staff superannuation scheme.

Miss Widdecombe: None. Matters relating to the British Coal staff superannuation scheme are for my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade.

Emphysema and Bronchitis

Mr. Eric Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will launch a campaign to publicise the new rights for people affected by emphysema and bronchitis.

Mr. Scott: The addition of chronic bronchitis and emphysema to the list of prescribed diseases, for which industrial injuries disablement benefit is payable, will be well publicised. Details of how people can claim will be announced well before the implementation date of 13 September 1993.

Mr. Eric Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will have consultations with the mining trade unions and other interested parties prior to starting up the processing of claims for bronchitis and emphysema.

Mr. Scott: Discussions are already under way with British Coal and officials will shortly be writing to the mining trade unions about the arrangements for handling claims. Discussions will be held with other interested parties as necessary.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if the procedures for diagnosing coal miners suffering from emphysema and bronchitis will be carried out by the Pneumoconiosis Medical Board;

(2) if the appeals procedure for coal miners suffering from emphysema and bronchitis will be carried out by the Pneumoconiosis Medical Appeals Tribunal.

Mr. Scott: Diagnosis will be carried out by specially qualified adjudicating medical practitioners or special medical boards at the Department's medical boarding centres. Appeals will be dealt with by the independent tribunal service; those against the decision of a SQAMP or SMB will be dealt with by medical appeal tribunals; those against the decisions of the Department's adjudication officers will be dealt with by social security appeal tribunals.

Mr. Eric Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to provide a pension for widows and dependents and for posthumous claims to be processed by the Pneumoconiosis Medical Appeal Tribunal.

Mr. Scott: There is provision in the industrial injuries disablement benefit scheme for widows to make posthumous claims for benefit. Widows may also qualify for widows benefit where the death of their husband was caused by occupational injury or prescribed disease.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security from what date the procedures for diagnosing coal miners suffering from emphysema and bronchitis will come into force.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Member for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. Pickles) on 29 March 1993 at column 77.

Sickness and Invalidity Benefits

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people received (a) sickness benefit and (b) invalidity benefit in each month since January 1992.

Mr. Scott: Information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is in the table, and is obtained from a 100 per cent. count of cases by benefit offices at the end of each month, rounded to the nearest thousand. In particular, the sickness benefit figures include cases registered sick that are not receiving benefit but are receiving national insurance credits.

Date	Sickness benefit	Invalidity benefit
January 1992	461,000	1,393,000

Benefits Agency (Inquiry Number)

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent representations he has received regarding the frequency of engagement of the Benefits Agency free telephone inquiry number 0800 666 555; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Benefits Agency inquiry line is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive. He will write to my hon. Friend and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. David Atkinson, dated 23 April 1993;

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking what recent representations he has received regarding the frequency of engagement of the Benefits Agency free telephone number 0800 666 555.

The Benefits Agency Freeline was set up to offer comprehensive advice and information on the whole range of Social Security benefits. However, whilst customer surveys have found a high degree of satisfaction with the quality of the service, it is clear from our ongoing monitoring of this exercise that over the last few months a significant proportion of calls have been unsuccessful because demand for the service has increased. Representations have been received regarding the Freeline service but the numbers about particular subjects are not routinely recorded.

I am determined to bring about an improvement in the service. The telephone is increasingly the preferred means of contact for the Agency's customers and I am able to tell you that in the last week for which figures are available 18,185 calls were answered successfully by the Freeline. Last year the Agency began a thorough review of the Freeline service, and customers are being consulted on their requirements. The results of this review will inform our thinking about how the service should evolve in the future. However, to ensure that the service is improved in the short term, five Freeline centres have installed Automatic Call Distribution, which allocates calls to lines on a strictly first come first served basis. The early indications are that the Automatic Call Distribution has been effective in reducing call waiting times.

The Freeline Service is also available in Punjabi, Urdu, Cantonese, and Welsh, as well as a free telephone service giving advice and information to people with disabilities and to those caring for them.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of the reply will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

ENVIRONMENT

Enterprise Zones

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the planned expenditure in respect of all current or planned enterprise zones in (a) 1993-94, (b) 1994-95 and (c) 1995-96.

Mr. Robin Squire: The principal costs of enterprise zones are rate relief and capital allowances. Neither can be accurately calculated in advance as they are dependent upon the rate of development on the individual zones. Current forecasts are as follows:

	1993-94 £ million	1994-95 £ million	1995-96 £ million
Rate relief	21·2	8·7	7·9
Capital allowances	30·8	7·9	8·0

Plans for enterprise zones for colliery closure areas are still being formulated and are not therefore included in the above figures.

Homelessness

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applications or inquiries under part III of the Housing Act 1985 were first recorded by local authorities for England as a whole during each quarter of 1991 and 1992; and whether he will arrange for this category of information to be published as a national statistic in his Department's homelessness statistics.

Sir George Young: Local authorities report the number of applications or inquiries under the homelessness provisions of the Housing Act 1985 in their quarterly P1(E) return.

In the second quarter of 1991, the return was revised to collect information on the total number of applications or inquiries made; previously information had been collected on inquiries completed.

The coverage of the data now collected depends on the administrative practices of individual local authorities. These vary widely between districts and over different periods of time, making it impossible to provide reliable national and regional estimates.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many decisions were issued by local housing authorities in England under section 64 of the Housing Act 1985 during each of the four quarters of 1991 and each of the first three quarters of 1992 in relation to households of specific ethnic origin who were (a) found not to be homeless or threatened with homelessness within 28 days, (b) found to be homeless or threatened with homelessness within 28 days, but not in priority need, when advice and assistance only were given, (c) found to be intentionally homeless and not accepted for permanent rehousing and (d) accepted for rehousing on a permanent basis; and whether he will arrange for these categories of information to be published as part of his Department's homelessness statistics;

(2) how many applications or inquiries were first recorded in England during each of the four quarters of 1991 and each of the first three quarters of 1992 concerning applications for accommodation under part III of the Housing Act 1985 in relation to households of specific ethnic origin; and whether he will arrange for these categories of information to be published as part of his Department's homelessness statistics.

Sir George Young: Local authorities provide information on their activities under the homelessness provisions of the Housing Act 1985 in their quarterly P1(E) return.

Since the second quarter of 1991, local authorities have been asked to report the ethnic origin of all those households who applied to them as being homeless and about whom they made a decision under section 64 of the 1985 Housing Act.

Many local authorities have yet to provide information on ethnic origin and my Department is currently assessing whether the available data are sufficiently reliable for publication.

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the total number of households accepted, by each local authority in Northamptonshire for each year since 1979, for securing permanent accommodation under the homeless provisions of the Housing (Homeless Provisions) Act 1977 and the Housing Act 1985.

Mr. Baldry: Local authorities report the number of households for whom they accept responsibility to secure permanent accommodation under the homelessness provisions of the Housing Acts in their quarterly P1 (E) returns.

For the information for the years 1979 to 1991 inclusive, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Angus, East (Mr. Welsh) on 17 June 1992, Official Report, columns 569-70.

The information for 1992 is in the table:

Households accepted as homeless in 1992[1]

	Number
Corby	72
Daventry	88
East Northamptonshire	107
Kettering	78
Northampton	519
South Northamptonshire	133
Wellingborough	131

[1] Excluding intentionally homeless households.

Construction Industry

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is currently taking to ensure that his Department is fully aware of the needs, problems and potential of the construction industry.

Mr. Baldry: We maintain close links with the industry through a wide range of formal and informal contacts. Last year I established fortnightly meetings at which industry representatives can discuss with me any matters of concern to them. The Department's construction policy directorate holds regular meetings with industry organisations to consider European issues, and has recently set up a similar forum to discuss domestic issues. The Department is represented on many industry bodies. We are increasing secondments between the civil service and the industry to help improve mutual understanding.

The Department is currently undertaking a review, in close consultation with the industry, to examine how the construction policy directorate can develop its established sponsorship activities to meet the present and future needs of the industry and its constituent interests.

Further and Higher Education

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance he issues on the position of those employed in institutions of further and higher education and the remit of section 80(1)(a) of the Local Government Act 1992 as a result of the Further and Higher Education Act 1992.

Mr. Robin Squire: We have issued no such guidance. Staff employed in institutions of further and higher education are no longer covered by the disqualification from standing for election to local authorities imposed by section 80(1)(a) of the Local Government Act 1972.

Tyne and Wear Development Corporation

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, by site and workplace, the new jobs that have been created by the Tyne and Wear urban development corporation.

Mr. Robin Squire: The new jobs that have been created by Tyne and Wear development corporation since its inception are as follows:

Development sites	Jobs
Royal Quays	270
St. Peter's Riverside	55
Sunderland Enterprise Park	200
Newcastle Central Business and Technology Park	150
Newcastle Business Park	3,738
Closegate	100
Dolphin Quay	35
Viking Industrial Park	192
Walker Technology Park	482
Sunrise Enterprise Park	375
	5,597
Companies' own sites[1]	4,213
TOTAL	9,810

[1] These are sites within the urban development area which are not part of the corporation's main development projects but which have otherwise been supported by the corporation (e.g. by business development grant).

More detailed information relating to "workplace" cannot be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Heating Efficiency

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to promote the improvement of the insulation of existing stock of pre-1981 dwellings and to improve the efficiency of their boilers or other heating sources; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: My Department sponsors various programmes which promote improvements in domestic heating and insulation.

Insulation grants for households on low incomes are available under the Energy Efficiency Office's home energy efficiency scheme. Under the green house demonstration programme, the Government have made special funding available to local authorities to show the scope for securing energy efficiency improvements in council housing. Grants for heating and insulation may be available to private householders under the renovation grant system administered by local authorities.

In addition, householders are being encouraged to take energy efficiency measures through the Energy Efficiency Office's national television and press advertising campaign, "Helping the Earth Begins at Home". A free booklet, "Heating Your Home", offers advice on the replacement of old boilers nearing the end of their life with one of three types of more efficient boiler, including the condensing boiler.

Farm Shops

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what guidelines and advice exist for local authorities when determining planning applications for farm shops situated within the green belt;

(2) what guidelines and advice exist for local authorities when determining planning applications to permit retailing in farm shops situated in the green belt; and what proportion of goods sold can be the produce of neighbouring farms.

Mr. Baldry: Advice on development control matters within the green belt is given in planning policy guidance note 2. Paragraph 13 of that document states that approval should not be given, except in very special circumstances, for the construction of new buildings or for the change of use of existing buildings for purposes other than uses appropriate to a rural area.

It is normally assumed that the use of a farm shop only for the sale of goods produced on that farm is a use which is ancillary to the use as a farm not requiring planning permission, whereas use as a farm shop selling a significant amount of "imported" produce amounts to a use in its own account and is therefore subject to planning control. This advice is contained in paragraph B2 of annex B to planning policy guidance note 7.

It will be for that local planning authority to take this advice into account, together with all other material planning considerations, in making planning decisions concerning farm shops in green belts.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current status of outstanding appeals against refusal to grant permission to extract coal by opencast mining in Stoke-on-Trent.

Mr. Baldry: There is one such appeal outstanding which is by British Coal Opencast in relation to the Berryhill site. A decision on this case will be issued as soon as possible.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his Department's plans for the long-term storage of high-level radioactive waste.

Mr. Maclean: Government policy is that high-level radioactive waste is treated and stored at the surface for a period of at least 50 years, which will allow heat generated by the decay of radioactivity to reduce.

Green Belt

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice or guidance his Department has published to local authorities and other agencies with a view to promoting and maintaining employment in farms and related areas of agriculture, situated in the green belt.

Mr. Baldry: It is our policy to encourage the rural economy to prosper and expand. This policy is set out in full in planning policy guidance note 7. While green belts have a special status where there is a presumption against "inappropriate" development, agriculture would not come into that category—see paragraph 13 of planning policy guidance note 2.

Radiation Units Committee

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent meetings he has had with the British committee on radiation units and measurements; and what plans he has to meet the committee.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. and learned Friend has not recently met and has no plans to meet the British Committee on Radiation Units and Measurements.

National Association for Urban Studies

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what financial support he will provide to the National Association for Urban Studies in the year 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: My Department has provided funding for the National Association for Urban Studies for the past four years from the special grants programme. A new three-year grant, awarded in 1990-91, was tapered to encourage the association to broaden its trading base and reduce the reliance on the Department's grant. In that time, the association failed to demonstrate adequate progress towards self-sufficiency. As a result, and because the programme is heavily oversubscribed, I have decided that the scarce resources available would be better spent on other projects.

ReChem International

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to enforce the 1982 EC Seveso directive on the company ReChem International Ltd.; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Directive 82/501/EEC, the so-called Seveso directive, is implemented in Britain by the Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazards Regulations 1984. These currently exclude installations for the disposal of toxic and dangerous waste that are in possession of a licence under the relevant provisions of the Control of Pollution Act 1974. The Health and Safety Executive will shortly be going out to consultation with proposals to remove this exclusion. ReChem International operates plants falling within the current exclusions.

Waste Exports

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what position he took regarding the possible amendment of the Basel convention to ban waste exports to non-OECD countries, discussed at the EC Council of Ministers on 23 and 24 March;

(2) what investigations his Department has undertaken to ascertain what environmental damage will occur as a result of the export of toxic waste from Humberside;

(3) what action he will take to ensure the toxic waste currently stored at the Capper Pass site in Humberside will not be exported to Mexico or Bolivia;

(4) what investigations his Department has undertaken to ascertain the toxicity of the toxic waste due to be exported from Capper Pass, Humberside;

(5) what steps he will take to ensure that companies exporting waste complete the required documentation for the export of non-ferrous materials under the EC directive on the transfrontier shipment of hazardous wastes.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on 25 March, Official Report, column 710.

Under existing regulations the United Kingdom has no powers to ban exports of non-ferrous metal waste. However, consignments must meet certain conditions; for example, the holder must have entered into a contract with the consignee for the recovery of the non-ferrous metal content and made a declaration to this effect on the uniform document which is copied to the Waste Regulation Authority. Compliance with these conditions is a matter for the Waste Regulation Authority. We have ensured that Mexico is aware of its obligations under the Basel convention.

Ozone

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what were the degrees of deviation from the normal recorded figures of total column ozone over Lerwick and Camborne for 5, 6 and 7 March;

(2) what were the levels of total column ozone over Lerwick and Camborne on 5, 6 and 7 March; and what they were for the same dates in each of the last 10 years;

(3) what was the average March level of total column ozone for 1993; and what degree of variation there was from the normal recorded levels for this period.

Mr. Maclean: Results of ozone column measurements made at Camborne and Lerwick on 5, 6 and 7 March for 1993 and for the same dates over the past 10 years are:

Total ozone (Dobson units)

Blanks indicate days when measurements could not be made due to weather conditions. Recent data are subject to final calibration corrections. The measurements for 5, 6 and 7 March this year include the four lowest for March in the record, the previous lowest levels being 267 and 270 Dobson Units measured on 1 March 1983. The average ozone measurements for March this year are 335 Dobson Units at Camborne and 347 Dobson Units at Lerwick. These values are respectively 12·6 per cent. and 10·4 per cent. below the average for the last 10 years.

Flats Over Shops Initiative

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much of his Department's £5 million allocation for Living Over the Shop in 1992-93 was spent; what was the average allocation per flat; and how many new homes were produced.

Mr. Baldry: The outturn for the first year of the Department's flats over shops initiative will not be known until all final claims have been returned by local authorities. Provisional information from local authority fourth quarterly monitoring returns indicates that some £4,093,000 has been spent in 1992-93 producing some 292 new homes at an average grant cost per unit of £14,000.

Waste Incinerator, Ealand

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what costs were incurred by his Department in preparing for the public inquiry scheduled for 30 March into a planning application for a waste incinerator plant by S. and J. Engineering at Ealand; and when he was notified the appeal had been withdrawn.

Mr. Maclean: The staff and other internal costs of arranging, and preparing for, individual planning inquiries are not separately identified within the overall cost of the administration of the appeals system. The Department incurred no external costs in this case. The appeal was withdrawn on 24 March.

Devon County Structure Plan

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the reason for the lapse of time since the examination in public of selected matters arising on the third alteration to the Devon county structure plan; why it has been necessary to delay publication of his proposed modifications; and when he intends to publish the proposed modifications to the structure plan.

Mr. Baldry: I expect to publish proposed modifications to the Devon structure plan third alterations very shortly.

The preparation of the modifications has taken longer than I hoped, but this is an important matter which requires proper consideration.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the panel conducting the public examination of selected matters arising on the third alteration of the Devon county structure plan in March/April 1992 submitted its report and recommendations.

Mr. Baldry: The panel submitted its report and recommendations on 26 May 1992.

Council Tax

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about landlords passing on council tax charges to their tenants.

Mr. Robin Squire: We have received 83 representations about landlords passing on council tax charges to their tenants. Thirty three of these were in direct response to a consultation letter issued on 5 January 1993 on proposals to amend the landlord and tenant legislation to cater for the situation where the landlord, rather than the tenant, is liable for the tax.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he has given to the rent officer service about determining rents in cases where landlords have been found to be passing council tax costs on to their tenants.

Mr. Robin Squire: Rent officers are independent of Government and neither Ministers nor officials are able to advise them about determining rents. In making their assessments of fair rents rent officers follow the requirements of the Rent Act 1977. These provisions have been amended to allow for the liability for council tax to be taken into account where appropriate. Rent officers also assess market rents for housing benefit subsidy purposes under the Rent Officer (Additional Functions) Order 1990. Again, these assessments will now take account of council tax where appropriate. The Department has issued procedural guidance notes to rent officers to alert them to these changes, copies of which have been placed in the Library today. In addition, the Institute of Rent Officers has issued a practice note to its members, copies of which are also available in the Library.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is (a) the average rent level determined by the rent officer service in each region and (b) the average council tax bill in each region.

Mr. Robin Squire: The regional figures on rent levels determined by the rent officer service in the fourth quarter of 1992, the latest period for which figures are available, are given in table 1.3 of the "Rent Officer Statistics—Fourth Quarter" publication, copies of which are available in the Library.

The average council tax by region is as follows:

Housing Benefit

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of applications for housing benefit and the proportion allowed for each local authority in Northamptonshire for each year since 1987-88.

Mr. Burt: I have been asked to reply.

The available information is in the table.

Police Houses

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many police houses have been bought or leased over the past three years in the London borough of Ealing by housing associations; if he will state the associations concerned and the cost to the public funds in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 30 March 1993]: I have been asked to reply.

The receiver for the Metropolitan police district is to transfer three blocks of flats in Ealing to Housing 21, the housing association arm of the Royal British Legion. Housing 21 will manage the flats for a fee and rents will be paid on to the receiver.

Housing 21 has the option to acquire the freeholds within five years.

Council House Sales

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 8 February, Official Report, columns 519-20, what was the number and value of council house sales by region for the latest available quarters (a) at current prices and (b) at 1981 prices.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 22 April 1993]: The latest available information, which is for the period October to December 1992, is given in the table. The table also gives updates of the figures for the preceding two quarters given in my reply of 8 February.

Special Needs Management Allowance

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the future of the special needs management allowance.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 20 April 1993]: Special needs management allowance is paid to housing associations by the Housing Corporation, through funding provided by my Department, to contribute to the housing management costs of accommodation providing for people with special needs. When the scheme was introduced in April 1991, as a replacement for the existing hostel deficit grant arrangements, housing associations were informed that it would be reviewed as soon as there was sufficient evidence of the operation of the scheme. The Housing Corporation will therefore be reviewing this year the working of the scheme, taking account of the results of a study mounted by my Department which will compare the effects of the special needs management allowance arrangements with those of the old hostel deficit grant scheme.

Dioxins

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the maximum tolerable concentrations of dioxins and furans which are allowable for differing types of incinerators, power station operations, leachates, sludges and for the aquatic environment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 20 April 1993]: Authorisations issued by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution under integrated pollution control legislation require the operator to use the best available techniques not entailing excessive cost to prevent, or minimise and render harmless the release of prescribed substances, including dioxins, to any environmental medium.

Power stations, compared with other combustion and incineration processes, produce only very small quantities of dioxins and furans so that concentration limits are neither appropriate or specified.

Guidance notes published by the chief inspector of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution relating to combustion and incineration processes subject to IPC control suggest an initial limit of 1 ng/M^3 TEQ dioxins in releases to air while requiring operators to aim ultimately to achieve one tenth of that limit by the use of progressive techniques. The relevant CI guidance notes are numbered IPR 5/1 to 5 inclusive, IPR 5/7 and IPR 5/11, all of which are in the Library of the House.

As part of the statutory IPC authorisation process the NRA can, in addition to any limits Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution itself imposes on an operator, require Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to impose further limits where the release is directly to controlled waters. Discharges of dioxins and furans to water are typically extremely low and since they are normally bound to particulates, strict control of particulates in the discharge will minimise the release of these pollutants to the environment.

The best solution must be to avoid the generation of dioxins in the first place by employing appropriate operating conditions within the combustion or incineration process and this is what IPC aims to achieve.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Personal Injury Claims

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many employer liability personal injury claims worth over £2,500 were settled in court in (a) 1989-90, (b) 1990-91, (c) 1991-92, (d) 1992-93 and (e) the first six months of 1992-93.

Mr. John M. Taylor: These figures are not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many personal injury claims worth over £2,500 were settled in court in (a) 1989-90, (b) 1990-91, (c) 1991-92, (d) 1992-93 and (e) the first six months of 1992-93.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The only figures available are those set out in tables 1 and 2. They show by respective year since 1989, the total number of personal injury cases disposed of by trial, in the case of the High Court, where the amount of the award was £5,000 or more; and in the county courts where the amount of the award was £2,000 or more.

Duty Solicitors

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the cost of the duty solicitor scheme in the most recent year available; and whether that cost is included in the expenditure figures for legal aid.

Mr. John M. Taylor: In 1991-92, the last year for which figures are available, the cost of the duty solicitor schemes was £62 million. It is estimated that the scheme will have cost £72 million in 1992-93. The cost of the duty solicitor schemes is included in the expenditure figures for legal aid.

Legal Aid

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the amount of contributions to criminal legal aid paid for the most recent year available, and the number of defendants who have made those payments.

Mr. John M. Taylor: In the period from April 1991 to March 1992 a total of £3·6 million was paid in contributions towards the cost of legally aided criminal cases (£2 million in respect of proceedings in the magistrates courts and £1·6 million in respect of proceedings in courts other than the magistrates courts). In 1991 there were approximately 36,300 contributors in legally aided criminal cases.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the total number of defendants granted legal aid and the net cost of that aid, for both civil and criminal legal aid in the most recent year available.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information sought is not available in the form requested. There were 3·03 million acts of assistance in 1991-92 at a net cost of £906 million, and it is estimated that there will have been 3·39 million acts of assistance in 1992·93. It is not possible to apportion the net cost between plaintiffs and defendants.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how much VAT was paid on legal aid fees, and what was the cost of administering VAT on legal services to those aided, for both civil and criminal legal aid for the most recent available year.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information sought is not available. It is not possible to identify separately the total VAT element of legal aid bills.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the cost of the green form scheme in the most recent year available.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Net expenditure on green form legal advice and assistance in 1991-92 was £95 million. Final figures are not yet available for 1992-93, but it is estimated that expenditure on green form in 1992-93 was £122 million.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the total cost of criminal legal aid both gross and net of contributions ordered and VAT in the most recent year available.

Mr. John M. Taylor: In 1991-92, the last year for which final figures are available, expenditure on criminal legal aid was £478 million gross (£474 million net). Expenditure on criminal legal aid 1992-93 is estimated at £535 million gross (£529 million net). It is not possible to identify the total amount of VAT paid in respect of legal services.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the number of legally aided defendants who have failed to make any payments as ordered in the most recent year available; what was the total amount involved; against how many people recovery proceedings have been commenced; and what is the amount involved.

Mr. John M. Taylor: In the period from April 1991 to March 1992 a total of 4,239 civil legal aid certificates were revoked due to the non-payment of contributions at a cost to the legal aid fund of £1·9 million. In 1991 approximately 500 criminal cases had legal aid revoked due to the non-payment of contributions. Information on recovery proceedings for non-payment is not available centrally, nor is not possible to determine the costs involved.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the number of legally-aided defendants who are in arrears with their contributions as ordered at the most recent available date; and what is the total still outstanding, the number against whom recovery proceedings have been commenced and the amount involved, for both civil and criminal legal aid.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information is not available in the form requested. However, in the period from April 1991 to March 1992 a total of 4,239 civil legal aid certificates were revoked as a result of contributions outstanding representing a sum of £1·9 million, compared with 3,598 and £1·6 million in the previous year. Statistics regarding the financial year just ended will become available in June when the Legal Aid Board is due to publish its annual report for 1992-93.

TRANSPORT

Motor Cycles

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy towards the proposals of the European Commission to limit production of motor cycles to a maximum engine power producing 100 brake-horse power.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Government's view is that the current European Commission proposal is unsupported by statistical evidence. We are therefore attempting to broker a compromise on power that will be acceptable to United Kingdom motorcyclists. It is at present too early to anticipate the outcome.

Air Services

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the role of his Department in the licensing of scheduled air services to any destination in balancing demand and provision.

Mr. Norris: The process of licensing airlines in the United Kingdom for the operation of scheduled air services is undertaken by the Civil Aviation Authority (CAA). Within the EC, licensed carriers are entitled to provide services on the basis of their own commercial judgement.

The Secretary of State also has a role in determining appeals on licensing decisions taken by the CAA, including those which involve the issue of scarce bilateral capacity.

Radar Speed Cameras

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the implications for road safety of reflective number plates designed to evade speed camera technology; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Reflective number plates designed to evade speed camera technology do not work. Photographs of such plates taken by approved speed detection equipment show the number quite clearly and the offence can be followed up in the normal manner. Use of these plates is illegal and the photographs also provide evidence of this offence. So purchasers are not only wasting their money but are also making themselves liable to additional penalties.

These number plates do not comply with the new British standard which is to be published shortly and it will then be made illegal to offer them for sale.

A12, Lowestoft

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has for improvement of the A12 serving Lowestoft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: My right hon. Friend announced in "Trunk Roads England into the 1990s" 10 separate schemes for improving sections of the A12 between the M25 and Lowestoft, targeted with a grade separation of Capel St. Mary junction.

The sections to be improved are:

1. M12 motorway between M25 and Chelmsford bypass
2. Chelmsford bypass widening
3. Hatfield Peverel to Marks Tey
4. Four Sisters to Stratford St. Mary
5. Martlesham to Wickham Market
6. Wickham Market to Saxmundham
7. Saxmundham bypass widening
8. Saxmundham to south of Wrentham
9. South of Wrentham to Kessingland
10. Lowestoft relief road

The schemes are in the early stages of statutory procedures and our aim is to have at least selected preferred routes for them all by the end of 1994.

Cars (Airbags)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is taking to encourage the European Commission to initiate legislation to require all new cars to be fitted with airbags.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: None. The single most effective measure for reducing accident injury for car occupants is the wearing of seat belts. An airbag as a supplement to a seat belt can be provided only at considerable additional cost, and it is for the consumer to decide whether this is justified.

Disabled People

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has held with groups representing disabled people on proposals in the Railways Bill to safeguard and improve facilities for access to rail travel for people with disabilities.

Mr. Freeman: I met the Joint Committee on Mobility of Blind and Partially Sighted People in January to discuss their concerns with regard to rail privatisation and I am in regular contact with DPTAC. Officials have recently met representatives of other disability groups including the Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation, MENCAP and the Royal National Institute for the Blind.

Bournemouth Transport Ltd.

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to make a decision on the proposed single tender sale by Bournemouth borough council of Bournemouth Transport Ltd.; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We are in correspondence with Bournemouth borough council about the sale of Bournemouth Transport Ltd. by open competitive tender. The council has been told that the Secretary of State will not consent to a single tender sale.

Railway Pensions

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what dates he has met with (a) the Association of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen, (b) the Railway, Maritime and Transport Union and (c) the Transport Salaried Staff Association to discuss the future of railway pensions since the publication of "New Opportunities for the Railways" (Cm. 2012).

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I have discussed pension with the trade unions as follows:

(a) ASLEF 27 October 1992 and 24 February 1993.
(b) RMT 13 October 1992 and a meeting is planned for later today.
(c) TSSA 20 October 1992 and 9 March 1993.

Municipal Buses

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy concerning municipal bus company privatisation.

Mr. Freeman: We are encouraging passenger transport authorities and local authorities who own bus companies to sell them voluntarily. If they do so before 31 December 1993 they will be able to devote 100 per cent. of the receipts to projects—after that date 50 per cent of the proceeds will have to be used for the reduction of debt. We intend to introduce legislation to require disposal. Each sale requires the consent of the Secretary of State under the Transport Act 1985. Consent is very unlikely to be given to sales other than by competitive tender except when it was given in principle before 1992.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultation he proposes with the employees of municipal bus companies prior to a decision to seek privatised status in accordance with the Transport Act 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: None. This is a matter for the owning authorities.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many municipal bus companies there are in (a) Wales and (b) England; and what is his estimate of the number of employees engaged in such companies.

Mr. Freeman: There are three local authority owned bus companies remaining in Wales and 30 in England. I have no information about the numbers of employees engaged in these companies.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

House Building

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the members of the working group he has established to review restrictions affecting the domestic house building industry; and if he will detail the remit that has been given to the group.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave to the hon. Member for Leeds, Central on 25 March, Official Report, column 703.

The names of the members of the construction deregulation task force are as follows:

Christopher Spackman, Chairman, Bovis Construction Ltd. (Chairman).
David Summerfield, Chief Executive, How Group plc.
Dr. Bernard Rimmer, General Manager (Construction), Slough Estates plc.
Richard Saxon, Partner, Building Design Partnership.
Peter Hulmes, Managing Director, Alfred MacAlpine Construction.
Roger Humber, Director, House Builders Federation.
Peter Warry, Chairman, Building Products Division, Norcros plc.
Maurice Denyer, Fowler (Bros) Cowfold Ltd.

Small Companies

Mr. Bowis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress is being made on the Government's review of audit and accounting requirements for very small companies.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My Department has today issued a consultative document seeking views on proposals offering very small companies relief from the compulsory audit requirement. This follows a review of audit and accounting requirements for such companies conducted by my Department in consultation with HM Treasury and the Inland Revenue.

The Department is seeking views on proposals that very small companies may be exempted from audit if shareholders agree. Two alternative approaches have been identified and the Government will decide which option to adopt in the light of responses to the consultative document.

> Option A: Abolition
> Exemption from the audit requirement, with nothing to replace the auditor or audit report;
> or
> Option B: Replacement
> In place of the audit report, a company would be required to provide a compilation report, produced by a suitably qualified independent accountant, confirming that the annual accounts have been prepared from the company's accounting records in accordance with the relevant format and disclosure requirements of the Companies Act 1985. The compilation report would be filed along with the accounts at Companies House. The accounts would include a statement by the directors as to their statutory duties in preparing them.

Option A offers a maximum deregulatory benefit to the companies themselves, while option B offers eligible companies a more limited measure of relief in order to address the concerns of users of accounts.

Companies which would be eligible to take advantage of the audit exemption would be those:

with an annual turnover below the VAT registration threshold (which my right hon. Friend, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, recently proposed to increase to £37,600); whose balance sheet total does not exceed £100,000;
whose shareholders have unanimously voted to take advantage of the audit exemption; which are not public limited companies, part of a group structure or subject to a statute-based regulatory regime, such as the Financial Services Act 1986.

The exemption from the audit requirement would apply to a financial year for companies that, at the end of that year, satisfied all of the above criteria.

A copy of the consultative document has been placed in the Library of the House. Comments should reach my Department by 30 June 1993.

Fuel Industry

Mr. Cummings: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what guarantees he is providing to recipients of concessionary fuel and cash in lieu in the run up to and after the industry is privatised.

Mr. Eggar: I can assure present and past employees of British Coal with entitlements to concessionary fuel or cash in lieu of fuel, and their eligible dependants, that existing entitlements will be safeguarded before and following privatisation of the industry.

Oil Exploration

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the President of the Board of Trade in what circumstances oil companies with licences granted by his Department under previous United Kingdom continental shelf licensing rounds are able to withdraw unilaterally from any exploration and drilling commitments specified in such licences.

Mr. Eggar: There are no circumstances in which companies with licences granted under previous United Kingdom continental shelf licensing rounds are able to withdraw unilaterally from any exploration and drilling commitments specified in such licences. However, a licensee may, by giving to the Minister no less than six months' notice in writing, determine the licence. This right to determine the licence is without prejudice to any obligation or liability imposed or incurred under the terms of the licence.

National Technology Acquisition Plan

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish the national strategy technology acquisition plan for aeronautics submitted to him by his Department's aviation committee.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave on 24 March 1993, Official Report, column 613.

Brown Book

Mr. Congdon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he will be publishing "Development of the Oil and Gas Resources of the United Kingdom 1993", the Brown Book.

Mr. Eggar: The latest edition of the Brown Book will be published on Wednesday 28 April and I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library of the House and in the Vote Office.

Exports

Mr. Congdon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what guidelines there are on procedures for companies exporting controlled goods.

Mr. Needham: My Department has drawn up a code of practice on export control compliance which I will publish tomorrow and place in the Library of the House.

Film Distribution Industry

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent representations he has received about unfair trading practices in the film distribution industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 23 April 1993]: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has received two representations about the film distribution industry. The Office of Fair Trading, however, which is responsible for investigating alleged anti-competitive practices, has received a number of representations from small independent cinemas and is currently making inquiries into the supply of films for exhibition in cinemas.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will refer to the Director General of Fair Trading the points raised with him in correspondence by the hon. Member for Macclesfield relating to unfair trading practices in the film distribution industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 23 April 1993]: The points raised by my hon. Friend in his correspondence have been referred to the Director General of Fair Trading, who is currently investigating the supply of films for exhibition in cinemas. It would be inappropriate to make a statement until the DGFT has concluded his inquiries.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on his policy on the encouragement of fair trading practices within the film distribution industry; and if he will list those regulations, in the United Kingdom and in Europe, which are designed to bring about such fair trading practices.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 23 April 1993]: Under United Kingdom legislation, investigation of allegedly anti-competitive or monopolistic behaviour is the responsibility of the Director General of Fair Trading. The DGFT may consider this behaviour under either the Fair Trading Act 1973 or the Competition Act 1980. Anti-competitive practices which affect trade between member states are handled by the European Commission under articles 85 and 86 of the treaty of Rome.

British Geological Survey

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to market test areas of work that have historically been the prerogative of the British Geological Survey.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 26 April 1993]: The Department is preparing to seek competitive bids for work under the hydrocarbons programme, which has previously been let to the British Geological Survey.

ENVIRONMENT

Homelessness

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many persons were registered as homeless in the Greater Manchester area in 1979 and in 1992.

Mr. Baldry: Local authorities report the number of households for whom they accept responsibility for securing permanent accommodation under the homelessness provisions of the Housing (Homeless Persons) Act 1977 and the Housing Act 1985 in their quarterly P1(E) returns.

The numbers of households accepted as homeless in Greater Manchester in 1979 and 1992 were 3,370 and 14,120 respectively.

A new reporting system was introduced for metropolitan authorities from the third quarter of 1982. In addition the definition of acceptances was altered from the second quarter of 1991 to exclude intentionally homeless households. For these reasons figures for 1979 are therefore not strictly comparable with those for 1992.

Council Tax

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the council of the Isles of Scilly regarding the council tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: My Department has received a number of letters and telephone calls from the Isles of Scilly Council about the council tax. In addition, I met my hon. Friend, together with a delegation from the Isles of Scilly Council, on 9 December 1992 and again on 27 April.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the weekly £10 premium paid to participants on training for work and on the community action programme will be disregarded for council tax purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: I have been asked to reply.

The £10 a week training premium is fully disregarded in council tax benefit. The £10 a week premium for people on the community action programme will be similarly disregarded when it is introduced later this year.

Housing Management

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to introduce a national licensing scheme of persons managing houses in multiple occupation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The Department has no plans to introduce a national licensing scheme for houses in multiple occupation (HMOs). Local authorities already have sufficient powers under Part XI of the Housing Act 1985 to control standards in HMOs.

Disabled Workers

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to prevent disabled workers being discriminated against within the terms of compulsory competitive tendering procedures.

Mr. Robin Squire: It is this Government's intention that local authorities be given every encouragement to employ the disabled. Regulations governing the operation of compulsory competitive tendering, laid before the House on 29 March, allow local authorities to take into account, for the purposes of tender evaluation, the net additional costs of employing both the registered disabled and those eligible to register under the 1944 Act.

Buying Agency

Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what objectives and targets have been set for the Buying Agency for 1993.

Mr. Baldry: I have asked the new chief executive, Stephen Sage, to review the strategic direction of the Buying Agency over the next few months. As part of this, I have asked him to work to the following objectives and targets for 1993:

PERFORMANCE OBJECTIVES AND TARGETS 1993

—to manage the Agency's operations efficiently and to give its customers best value for money;

—to implement systems to identify more closely individual customers and their procurement requirements, within the public sector and particularly within central Government;

—to develop better systems to monitor suppliers' delivery performance against direct call-off orders;

—to continue to develop awareness within the public sector, particularly within central Government, of the benefits and services available from TBA;

—through achieving these objectives, to develop and expand TBA's customer base and to monitor its progress in doing so.

In support of these objectives I have set the agency challenging key targets for 1993:

—an overall profit after interest in current cost terms of not less than 1·5 per cent. of the total sales value of goods and services procured;

—an increase in the total attributable sales volume from £131 million in 1992 to £145 million for 1993;

—at least 90 per cent. of orders which TBA handles directly on behalf of customer departments to be delivered by the due date;

—to acknowledge all customer complaints within two working days of receipt, indicating a proposed course of action; thereafter, to keep the customer regularly informed of progress (no less frequently than every 10 working days); to resolve 75 per cent. of complaints within one month of receipt and the remainder within three months.

Property Services Agency

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in privatising the PSA's building management businesses.

Mr. Redwood: A shortlist of bidders has been selected for each business from those making indicative bids. Shortlisted bidders include a Management Buyout (MBO) team for BM Scotland. In line with normal Government practice a contribution is being made to MBO teams' costs in preparing bids. Shortlisted bidders have until 1 June to make detailed practical bids. We hope to exchange contracts as soon as practicable thereafter. Staff will then have the opportunity to decide whether to transfer with their businesses into the private sector and we expect the sales to be completed about two months after exchange of contracts.

Water Disconnections

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give figures for the number of disconnections in England of domestic water supply for each year since 1987.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 26 April 1993]: The information is set out in the following table. Information on disconnections prior to privatisation was only collected by the Department for water authorities as part of the water authorities' annual charges returns, and comprises total disconnections (domestic and non-domestic). Information on statutory water company disconnections was not collected by the Department prior to 1988-89.

Housing Capital Expenditure

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 14 December 1992, Official Report, columns 57-60, if he will update the table on housing capital spending by region for 1992-93.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 26 April 1993]: The available information, which covers the first three quarters of 1992-93 only, is given in the table. The latest estimate for local authority housing capital expenditure for the whole of 1992-93 is £2·7 billion.

Food Research and Development

Dr. Strang: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list total Government expenditure on food research and development for each year from 1978-79 to 1992-93 in (a) cash and (b) constant prices and set out projected Government expenditure on food research and development for each year from 1993-94 to 1996-97 in (i) cash and (ii) constant prices.

Mr. Robert Jackson [holding answer 21 April 1993]: Government funding for food research and development is mainly directed through the Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food, the Agricultural and Food Research Council, the Scottish Office Agriculture and Food Department and the Department of Agriculture, Northern Ireland. The aggregated expenditure classified as food research and development from these sources in the past three years is as follows:

£ million

	1990-91	1991-92	1992-93
Cash prices	33·4	34·7	38·6
1992-93 Prices	36·9	35·9	38·6

Figures for years before 1990-91 and estimates of future expenditure are not held centrally.

A number of other Government bodies fund research into food research but figures on their expenditure are not held centrally. Although comprehensive figures on Government funded research and development are published in the Annual Review of Government Funded Research and Development, food research and development is not a classification that is used.

Agriculture and Food Research Council

Dr. Strang: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the total numbers of (a) science group staff and (b) non-science group staff employed at each of the Agriculture and Food Research Council institutes for each year since 1979; and if he will give estimates up until 1995.

Mr. Robert Jackson [holding answer 21 April 1993]: Figures given in the two tables show the institute structure prior to and after the major restructuring which took place in 1986-87.

HEALTH

Dentistry

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy that any patient unable to afford the patient's contribution under any new service arrangements for dentistry which are introduced following her consideration of the Bloomfield report will continue to be eligible for the full range of dental treatment.

Dr. Mawhinney: We are consulting widely on the Bloomfield report and will announce our conclusions in due course.

Deafness

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimate she has of the number of elderly people in the United Kingdom who would benefit from hearing aids; (2) what plans she has to improve the availability of, and access to, hearing aids for the elderly.

Mr. Yeo: The Institute of Hearing Research estimates that the number of people who could benefit from a hearing aid is about 4·4 million. The majority of these are likely to be elderly people.

Hearing aids are available through the national health service, normally on referral from hospital ear, nose and throat departments. We have funded a number of pilot projects for direct referral by general practitioners to audiology departments. The result of the projects will be available shortly.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she will take to ensure that war pensioners in the Newcastle area suffering from deafness have access to adequate ear, nose and throat facilities; and how meeting the present demand affects the NHS provisions for the general public who are hearing impaired or profoundly deaf.

Mr. Yeo: District health authorities are responsible for purchasing services, including ear, nose and throat services, to meet the health needs of their resident population. There is a long-standing arrangement whereby, subject to considerations of clinical need, war pensioners receive priority in examination and treatment in national health service hospitals, in connection with the condition(s) for which they receive a pension or gratuity. I understand that special clinics for war pensioners have been set up at the Freeman NHS trust and there has been no reduction in the service offered to other patients.

Mental Hospitals

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes there have been since 1986 in the collection of figures on closures of mental hospitals and loss of beds in mental hospitals; and if she will make a statement.

Mr Yeo: In April 1987 a new system of data collection covering hospital activity and facilities was introduced followed the recommendations of the Korner committee. The new inquiry into available beds in England replaced an earlier inquiry discontinued after 1986. The new inquiry differed in being on a financial year basis and in classifying beds according to ward type, but figures for beds in mental illness wards continued to be separately collected.

The information on the closure of mental hospitals has not been collected centrally on a routine basis since 1991. In order to carry forward its work, the mental health task force led by David King will in future need to collect information of this type.

Secure Accommodation (Juveniles)

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list those dates in the last year where no secure accommodation was available for juveniles at the time the request was made.

Mr. Yeo: This information is not available centrally. Figures on the levels of occupancy of individual secure units throughout the year are published in "Children Accommodated in Secure Units, year ending 31 March England". A copy is available in the Library.

Unemployment

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies she has undertaken to assess a possible association between ill-health and unemployment; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave him on 19 January at col 224.

Administrative Staff

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staff were employed within the national health service in administration and management, by (a) hospitals and (b) family health service authorities in each of the years 1990, 1991 and 1992; and what the costs were in each year.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information available is shown in the tables.

Notes:

[1] In 1991 administrative and clerical staff represented approximately 15·9 per cent. of the total NHS work force; general and senior managers approximately 1·7 per cent. General and senior manager figures include some redesignation between staff groups, for example from nursing and midwifery.

[2] Staff numbers solely for hospitals are not centrally available. The figures in the table include staff in regional and district health authority headquarters and the London postgraduate teaching hospitals but exclude staff in other special health authorities and the London ambulance service.

[3] Figures for 1991 include staff in NHS trusts.

[4] Figures for 1992 are not yet available.

[1] HCHS covers the total expenditure on salaries and wages by health authorities and NHS trusts including hospital, community health, patient transport (ie ambulances), blood transfusion and other services. The figures are for gross pay costs including employers' national insurance and superannuation contributions.

[2] It is not possible to disaggregate the figures for administrative and clerical staff and general and senior managers in the family health service authority figures. The figures include the costs of a small number of nursing and other staff.

Notes:

(1) The figures for 1991-92 include costs for staff in NHS Trusts.

(2) Figures for the 1992-93 financial year are not yet available.

(3) In 1991-92, Administrative and Clerical pay costs represented approximately 11 per cent. of total HCHS staff costs and those for general and senior managers approximately 3 per cent.

General Practitioners

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staff in respect of whom 70 per cent. of salaries were reimbursed were employed by general practitioners in England and Wales at the most recent convenient date.

Dr. Mawhinney: At 1 April 1992 there were 79,092 whole and part-time staff employed by general practitioners in England, whose salary costs were reimbursed in whole or part by family health services authorities (FHSAs). From 1 April 1990 FHSAs have had discretion to vary the level of reimbursement taking account of all relevant factors. Information on practitioners' staff in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish figures showing the number of general practitioner trainers and the number of general practitioner trainees, together with the cost per annum, for each of the years since 1980.

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total expenditure incurred in each of the years 1990, 1991 and 1992 in respect of additional payments made to general practitioners for (a) meeting target figures respectively, for immunisation and cervical smears, (b) health promotion clinics, (c) new patient check-ups, (d) minor surgery, (e) teaching medical students, (f) vaccination and immunisation fees and (g) contraception treatments, giving respectively, annual fees for ordinary and intra-uterine device treatment.

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the average income of a general practitioner in England and Wales for each year since 1980.

Dr. Mawhinney: The average net income of general practitioners in Great Britain is listed together with the average gross income of general practitioners in England. Average net income for England and Wales separately is not available. Information on GPs in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

[1] Provisional figures.

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioner practices are now general practitioner fund holders; and how many individual general practitioners that figure embraces.

Dr. Mawhinney: At 31 March 1993 there were over 3,000 general practitioners in 585 GP practices in the GP fund holding scheme. Final figures are not yet available for 1993-94 but provisional figures show more than double this number of GP practices have been offered and have accepted budgets from 1 April 1993.

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has as to the range of surpluses accumulated by general practitioner fund-holding practices during the most convenient recent period.

Dr. Mawhinney: In 1991-92 general practitioner fund holders nationally achieved surpluses on their budget of about four per cent. Regional averages ranged from 9·1 per cent. to 1·5 per cent.

Prescription Charges (Students)

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will allow free prescriptions to students in receipt of income below the income support level and suffering from (a) cystic fibrosis, (b) ankylosing spondylitis or (c) other chronic illnesses not on the list of medical conditions which confer exemption from prescription charges; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Young people under 19 and in full-time education are exempt from national health service charges. Remission of NHS charges, including those for prescriptions, is available under the NHS low income scheme to students aged 19 or over who are of limited means and irrespective of their medical condition.

Trust Hospitals

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is her Department's recommended procedure for hon. Members to meet chief executives of trust hospitals to discuss cases involving and affecting their constituents; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what advice she has given chairmen and chief executives of trust hospitals on meeting hon. Members to discuss problems raised with them by constituents; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department encourages trusts to develop good communications with local Members of Parliament. The precise arrangements are matters for individual trust boards.

EDUCATION

English

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will arrange for the key stage 3 English proposals of the Curriculum Council for Wales to be sent to all secondary schools in England.

Mr. Forth: No. The recommendations of the Curriculum Council for Wales (CCW) for the revision of the National Curriculum Order for English are addressed to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales. In most respects they are in agreement with the recommendations of the National Curriculum Council, which my right hon. Friend and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales adopted as the basis of the proposals which they published for consultation on 15 April. The CCW did, however, recommend certain differences which were indicated in my right hon. Friends' proposals. The chief of these were requirements relating to spoken standard English and the range of pupils' reading which were recommended by the CCW as more appropriate to pupils learning English in Wales. The CCW recommendations are therefore being circulated to all schools in Wales, to inform the consultation on my right hon. Friends' proposals in that country. Those proposals are for a single order, to apply to schools in England and Wales, but they raise the question whether the lists of required or recommended reading in the programmes of study should allow some variation for pupils in Wales to include appropriate representation of work in English by Welsh writers.

Student Finances

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what plans he has to increase the value of student grants to take account of the Budget proposal to level VAT on domestic heating;

(2) what estimate he has made of the impact on student indebtedness of the proposal in the Budget to levy VAT on domestic heating.

Mr. Boswell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms Ruddock) on 24 March, Official Report, column 603.

Pupil-Teacher Ratios

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the current pupil-teacher ratios (a) in England and (b) in the Greater Manchester area.

Mr. Boswell: The table shows the overall pupil-teacher ratios, at January 1992, for the maintained nursery, primary and secondary school sector in England and in the metropolitan districts of Greater Manchester (including self-governing state schools).

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the average class size in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools which are (i) county non-denominational, (ii) voluntary aided, (iii) voluntary controlled and (iv) special agreement for the last five academic years for which figures are available.

School Leavers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answers of 16 March, Official Report, columns 136-37, when he expects to be able to update the tables with information about school leavers' destinations for 1991-92.

Mr. Boswell: The information about school leavers' destinations for 1991-92 will not be available until June.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Car Thefts (Fatalities)

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the maximum sentence where fatality follows as a result of car theft.

Mr. Jack: We have no plans at present to review the maximum penalties for offences under the Aggravated Vehicle-Taking Act 1992. We have, however, made clear our intention to raise the maximum penalty for causing death by dangerous or drink driving to 10 years as soon as a suitable legislative opportunity is available.

Prison Escort Services

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement regarding the circumstances of the delivery of a prisoner from Lindholme prison to Beverley Crown court on Monday 19 April in a private unmarked car rather than a secure van; if he will list all other cases where such transport has been used by Group 4; whether such deliveries break the terms of the contract with Group 4; and what action is being taken with respect to Group 4 in connection with this incident.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. I Dunbar to Mr. Tony Blair, dated 27 April 1993:

In the temporary absence of the Director General, Mr. Lewis, from the office, the Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary question about the use by Group 4 of an unmarked car in delivering a prisoner from Lindholme Prison to Beverley Crown Court on Monday 19 April and related matters.

At present the Prison Service uses a considerable number of unmarked, unadapted vehicles—taxis, private hire minibuses and coaches—to move prisoners. It was thus decided that it would be wrong to impose a requirement on contractors that they use cellular vehicles. In their tender, Group 4 proposed to move most prisoners in cellular vehicles, which is what they are doing. As they expected, however, a small minority of prisoners are being moved in non-cellular vehicles, which does not conflict with the terms of their contract. There is no requirement on Group 4 to report to us the occasions on which non-cellular vehicles are used.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners escaped from prison service escorts in the east midlands and Humberside region last year (a) from taxis and (b) from prison service vans.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. I. Dunbar to Mr. Tony Blair, dated 27 April 1993:

ESCAPES FROM PRISON SERVICE ESCORTS

In the temporary absence of Mr. Lewis, the Director General, the Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of prisoners who escaped from Prison Service escorts in the East Midlands and Humberside region last year from taxis and from Prison Service vans.

From 1 January 1992 to 31 December 1992 a total of 7 prisoners escaped from Prison Service escorts in the East Midlands and Humberside region. One inmate escaped from a taxi; 6 escaped from hired coaches or mini-buses. There were no escapes in this region from Prison Service vans.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners escapes have occurred in each court region in each of the last five years from private hire vehicles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. I. Dunbar to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 27 April 1993:

PRISONER ESCAPES FROM PRIVATE HIRE VEHICLES

In the temporary absence of Mr. Lewis, the Director General, from the office, the Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of prisoners, in each court region, who escaped from private hire vehicles over the last five years.

Information on escapes has only been collated centrally since June 1988 but in any event it is recorded by prisons rather than court regions. The table below shows the number of escapes from vehicles used by the Prison Service on escort duties for each year from June 1988 to the end of December 1992. I am afraid we do not know which of these vehicles were owned by prisons and which were hired and this information could be obtained only at disproportionate expense.

Police Statistics

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give for each police force in England and Wales in 1971, 1981 and 1991 (a) the number of police officers in force, (b) the total number of officers recruited, (c) the total number of officers leaving the force, (d) the number retiring at the end of full service, (e) the number taking early retirement, (f) the number resigning, (g) the number dismissed for incompetence, (h) the number dismissed for criminal offences, (i) retirement on grounds of ill health due to service, and (j) retirement on grounds of ill health not due to service and (k) death while in service.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information on police strength, by force, can be found in the appendix to the annual reports of Her Majesty's chief inspector of constabulary, copies of which are in the Library. Information on items (e), (g), (i) and (j) are not held centrally. The other information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Police (Communications)

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are being taken by his Department to encourage police forces in England and Wales to adopt compatible computer and radio communications systems.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Home Office has provided comprehensive guidance to forces on the procurement of computer systems, including advice on achieving compatibility within and between forces. A national information systems strategy for the police is being developed which will further assist moves towards common standards and compatibility between local force systems and those provided on a national basis as well as those operating elsewhere in the criminal justice system.

As my right hon. and learned Friend announced in his statement on 20 April, Official Report, column 66, the Home Office has recently completed a review of radio communications in the police and fire service in England and Wales. The review identified, among other things, the importance of radio compatibility between individual forces and between the police and other public safety agencies.

Police Staff

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the turnover of (a) police officers and (b) civilian staff for each police force in England and Wales in 1971, 1981 and 1991 expressed as a percentage of the total police force and civilian staff employed in each force.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

International Police Organisations

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of the international police organisations to which the United Kingdom belongs and the main areas of co-operation covered by the organisations.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The International Criminal Police Organisation, Interpol, is the principal channel of communication between police forces throughout the world. Interpol provides an international telecommunications network to enable mutual co-operation between its members in crime and law enforcement activities. The United Kingdom police service is an active member and the Home Office contributes to Interpol's costs.

Individual police officers from the United Kingdom, responsible for policing ports and airports, are members of the international and European associations of airport and sea port police. These organisations exist to enable officers from different countries to discuss issues of common interest.

Non-EC Visitors (Speaking Engagements)

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, if he will make a statement on the conditions which must be complied with by non-EC visitors to fulfil a speaking engagement in the United Kingdom; and whether an application form for a work permit must be completed on arrival.

Mr. Charles Wardle: People coming to fulfil speaking engagements in the United Kingdom, for example as participants in an international conference, may qualify as visitors under the immigration rules (HC251), but if the conference is being organised as a commercial venture, work permits are required for those providing services as speakers. A work permit must be obtained by the employer for the non-EC national before he or she arrives in the United Kingdom.

Marriages (Leave to Remain)

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for leave to remain in the United Kingdom following marriage to a British or Irish citizen have been made during the past 12 months; and how many have been granted.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The available information is that in 1992, 15,690 applications, made after entry to the United Kingdom, to remain for a probationary year prior to settlement as the spouse of a British citizen, were granted. Corresponding information on refusals of such applications by spouses of British citizens is not separately identified in the statistics: in total 1,790 after-entry spouse applications were refused prior to a probationary year. Information on the outcome of applications by spouses of citizens of the Irish Republic is not separately identified.

Electoral Registration

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he has taken to increase levels of electoral registration among the black and Asian communities; and what plans he has for further measures.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We undertake an annual publicity campaign to promote electoral registration by all those eligible to vote, and in particular members of ethnic minorities. In addition, we have provided electoral registration officers (EROs) with model explanatory notes on the registration system in a number of ethnic minority languages for them to adapt according to local circumstances. The form and content of the 1993 campaign is being considered, but ethnic minorities will continue to be one of the key target audiences.

Police Disciplinary Procedures

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received, and from whom, about the current police disciplinary procedures as they appear in the consultative document on police discipline procedures; and what plans he has to amend the document in the light of the representations.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend has asked for responses to the consultation paper by 14 May and he will consider all representations received before deciding what proposals to lay before Parliament. There has been only one response to date, from the deputy chief constable of Cambridgeshire constabulary.

European Parliament Constituencies

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has decided on the mechanism to ensure fair distribution of constituencies for the 1994 European parliamentary election; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We are still considering this matter and will publish our proposals in due course.

Dangerous Dogs Act 1991

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the annual cost of implementing the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information on the costs to the police, local authorities, the Crown prosecution service and the courts of operating the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991 is not available centrally.

Police Batons

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 3 March to the hon. Member for Uxbridge (Mr. Shersby), Official Report, column 76, when the scientific evaluation of the wounding potential of an expandable baton will be completed; when it is expected that trials will begin; what current trials of the straight baton are taking place; who is conducting those trials; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Home Office police scientific development branch expects to report on the wounding potential of expandable batons soon. In the light of its conclusions, we will be discussing with the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis possible future trials of the equipment. It is for individual chief officers of other forces to consider their position as to whether or not to test an expandable baton. Avon and Somerset constabulary and Merseyside police have decided to test expandable batons and are currently training officers in their use. Dorset police have issued a 22-inch straight baton to all officers and Northumbria police expect to do so in June, once training has been completed. The Metropolitan police also expect to test alternative straight batons shortly.

Racist Organisations

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to restrict the activities of the group called Combat 18; what proposals he has to close the headquarters of organisations advocating violence; and if he will bring forward proposals to make racist violence and harassment a specific offence and to amend the provisions of the Public Order Act 1986 relating to incitement of racial hatred.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The views of racist organisations are unacceptable to the Government and to the public at large. An offence is committed under the Public Order Act 1986 if there is the intention or likelihood of stirring up racial hatred or if threatening, abusive or insulting behaviour takes place. It is for the police and the Crown prosecution service to determine whether proceedings should be brought in any particular case.

The Commission for Racial Equality has made proposals relating to racial violence in its second review of the Race Relations Act 1976. All the recommendations of the review are currently under consideration.

Fire Brigade Workshops

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to reply to the question tabled by the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford on his plans for market testing fire brigade workshops, due for answer on 14 April.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to her question on 15 April, Official Report, columns 725-6.

Primates

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in discussions with other member states in establishing a target date after which the use of wild-caught primates in European research laboratories will be prohibited.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The United Kingdom has suggested to other EC member states that they consider setting target dates beyond which the use of specific breeds of primates would be confined to those which had been purpose bred. This matter will be discussed again later in the year at the group of EEC national competent authorities established under Directive 86/609/EEC.

Prison Custody Officers

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison custody officers have been released for other duties as a result of the contracting out of the court escort service in the Humberside and east midlands regions; and what new tasks have been assigned to these officers.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. I. Dunbar to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 27 April 1993:

In the temporary absence of Mr. Lewis, the Director General, from the office, the Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the numbers of prison officers released for other duties as a result of the contracting out of the court escort service in the East Midlands and Humberside, and the new tasks assigned to these officers.

Our best estimate is that the full time equivalent of 96 officers was freed up as a result of contracting out court escort work. Eighteen posts have been retained at establishments within the contract area and will contribute, as Governors think fit, to the improvement of regimes at those establishments. The remaining staff resources will be redeployed as necessary throughout the Service.

Polling Stations

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what improvements in access to polling stations will have been carried out in Newbury by 6 May.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The acting returning officer has informed me that, since the general election, the location of seven polling stations within the Newbury constituency has been changed as buildings with better access arrangements have been found in the area.

I have asked him to write to the hon. Member with details of these and other steps he has taken.

Mr. Sherman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what steps he has taken to improve access to polling stations since the general election;

(2) if he will make it his policy to launch a programme of easier access for disabled people to polling stations.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is our long-term aim that all polling stations should be accessible to disabled electors. Councils have a statutory obligation to designate as polling places, wherever possible, only places which are accessible to disabled people. We have recently written to returning officers to remind them of their obligations and to circulate guidance produced by the Spastics Society on improving the accessibility of polling stations. One of the working groups set up as part of our post-election review is also looking at matters relating to access to polling stations. Where it is not possible to use a building affording easy access, we make grants available towards the cost of providing temporary ramps.

Angling

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) prosecutions and (b) convictions there have been in respect of the disruption of angling competitions in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is not recorded centrally.

Sex/Child Abuse

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on how the operation of the current system for granting bail for alleged sex/child abuse offenders operates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 26 April 1993]: Decisions regarding court bail, whatever the offence charged, are a matter for the courts in the exercise of their judicial discretion within the terms of the Bail Act 1976. That Act establishes a defendant's right to bail. It is for the prosecution to put forward arguments opposing bail, taking account of information provided by the police and, where appropriate, the probation service.

The Probation Service strategy document "Supervision of sex offenders", issued in 1992 specifically stresses the high priority that must be given to checking information relevant to bail where a person is charged with sexual offences, particularly if the case involves potential child victims.

The Government are determined that bail decisions taken at all levels should be based on the best possible information. That is why we have established five bail process projects which are designed to identify ways of improving the process and in the flow of information available to the courts.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Developing Countries

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the recommendations of the United Nations Development Programme on the proportion of developing countries' budgets which should be devoted directly to meeting the priority human needs of their people and the proportion of international aid for development which should directly support those needs.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Through our bilateral aid programmes, and our support for multilateral aid organisations including UNDP, we encourage developing countries to adopt effective poverty reduction strategies and to promote human development, including better education and health, and children by choice. These are two of our priority objectives.

The proportion of international aid directed to meeting basic human needs varies from country to country. Rather than set sectoral spending targets we believe that needs should be assessed on a country basis which enables us to provide effective aid.

Development Assistance

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the unweighted average official development assistance of (a) EC countries and (b) Development Assistance Committee countries, as a proportion of gross national product, in 1990, 1991 and 1992; how much the United Kingdom spent by the same measure; and by how much the United Kingdom would have needed to increase its assistance in cash terms in those years to reach (i) EC and (ii) DAC average expenditure.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Figures for 1990 and 1991 are as follows:

	1990	1991
(a) Unweighted average net oda as proportion of GNP
EC average (per cent.)	0·45	0·46
DAC average (per cent.)	0·47	0·49
United Kingdom (per cent.)	0·27	0·32
(b) Increase in United Kingdom oda in cash terms needed to reach EC average expenditure (£ million)	950	840
Increase in cash terms needed to reach DAC average expenditure (£ million)	1,050	950

Figures for 1992 are not yet available.

Least Developed Countries

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much British aid was spent in the least developed countries in 1990, 1991 and 1992; how much this was as a proportion of gross national product; and by how much British official development assistance to the least-developed countries will have needed to increase in cash terms in those years in order to meet the level recommended by the "United Nations Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries" in 1990.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information for 1990 and 1991 is as follows. Figures for 1992 are not yet available.

	1990	1991
Official development assistance (ODA) to the least developed countries (£ million)	462	545
As a proportion of United Kingdom gross national product (per cent.)	0·09	0·10
Increase in cash terms needed to meet United Nations target for aid to the least developed (0·15 per cent.). Figures rounded to nearest £10 million (£ million)	360	310

The Overseas Development Assistance/gross national product ratios are shown to the nearest two decimal points, as published by the OECD development assistance committee. The cash increases required to meet the 0·15 per cent. target are calculated on a more detailed basis.

Aid

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the average expenditure on official development assistance as a proportion of Government expenditure in (a) EC countries and (b) DAC countries in 1990, 1991 and 1992; what proportion the United Kingdom spent by the same measure; and by how much United Kingdom assistance would have had to increase in cash terms in those years to match (a) the EC and (b) the DAC average.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information for 1990 is as follows. Comparable figures for 1991 and 1992 Government expenditure are not available.

1990

Net ODA as a percentage of central Government expenditure

	Per cent.
(a) EC average	1·10
(b) DAC average	1·18
(c) United Kingdom	0·79
	£ million
Increase in United Kingdom ODA in cash terms[1] needed to reach EC average expenditure in 1990	570
Increase in United Kingdom ODA in cash terms[1] needed to reach DAC average expenditure in 1990	710

[1] The increases in cash terms are approximate estimates.

Sudan

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the areas of Sudan to which international non-governmental organisations are denied access.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: It is almost impossible to obtain accurate information on areas where NGOs and UN agencies are prevented from operating. At present these include locations in southern Sudan and south Kordofan.

Cuba

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the effect of the United States blockade of Cuba on the delivery of United Kingdom emergency aid to that country; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United States trade embargo has had no practical effect on our emergency aid. We have sourced agricultural fertilisers in Jamaica and milk powder and vitamin tablets in the United Kingdom.

European Development Fund

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures the ODA is taking to ensure that money spent by the European development fund is devoted to sustainable economic development.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Sustainable development is recognised as one of the central objectives of Community development policy in title XVII of the Maastricht treaty and in the declaration on development policy to the year 2000 adopted under the United Kingdom presidency.

Guyana

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on future aid to Guyana.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Following the recent election, and in recognition of the sound economic policies being followed by the Government of Guyana, we have offered £15 million of aid for commitment, as far as possible, over the next three years. We have agreed with the Guyana Government that priorities for support will include public administration, water supplies, education, forestry and agriculture.

In addition, we have agreed to convert our outstanding aid loans to Guyana to grants by retrospectively adjusting their terms, with effect from 1 August 1993, in recognition of Guyana's poverty, indebtedness and its continuing commitment to an International Monetary Fund reform programme. The total value of the retrospective terms adjustment package is £36·3 million in principal and £17·1 million in interest, bringing the overall aid to Guyana to over £68 million.

Family Planning

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what details are given by the International Planned Parenthood Federation and the United Nations Population Fund, in submitting grant applications, including budgets, to his Department, of the particular purposes to which grants from Her Majesty's Government would be put;

(2) what conditions are placed by Her Majesty's Government on sums given to the International Planned Parenthood Federation and the United Nations Population Fund for population control purposes.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answers 26 April 1993]: We make annual contributions to IPPF and UNFPA in support of their world-wide activities. Our aid programme gives high priority to enabling women and men to have better access to contraceptive services and reproductive health care. IPPF and UNFPA share these goals. The policies, programmes and budgets of IPPF and UNFPA are examined annually by ODA and other donor governments at the IPPF donors meeting and UNFPA governing council respectively.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has received from (a) the International Planned Parenthood Federation, (b) the United Nations Population Fund and (c) Her Majesty's Government's diplomatic missions in China regarding the use of coercive methods of population control in Tibet.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 26 April 1993]: We have received no such information from IPPF or UNFPA. We receive regular reports from our diplomatic missions in China on a number of issues of concern, including the situation in Tibet.

WALES

A465

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the latest information he has on traffic flows for (a) all vehicles and (b) heavy goods vehicles on the A465 heads of the valleys road between Abergavenny and the M4 at Llandarcy.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Traffic flows on A465 between Llandarcy and Abergavenny are as follows:

Cerebral Palsy

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what research is being conducted in Welsh hospitals and medical research centres into cerebral palsy; and what treatment is available in Wales for children suffering from cerebral palsy.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Among current research in Wales, the Cardiff institute of higher education is conducting research into several different aspects of cerebral palsy, including a project on access to communication aids and the evaluation of a movement therapy project for young children with cerebral palsy. In addition, the Welsh Office is funding an audit of cerebral palsy in children in Wales and the treatment they are receiving.

With regard to treatment, the Welsh Office has recently agreed funding for seven centres to provide neonatal intensive care. These will provide early diagnosis and treatment for babies born with cerebral palsy or at risk following birth. The Welsh perinatal survey, which began in January this year, aims to follow up to the age of seven years babies who have received neonatal intensive care. This should lead to early detection of handicaps and appropriate treatment plans. Conventional treatment is based on multi-disciplinary care, usually involving paediatricians, therapists and psychologists, with support from the social services. Referral to an orthopaedic surgeon is made in appropriate cases.

Children may also be referred to the gait analysis centre in Oswestry. The Bobath Cymru centre based at Whitchruch hospital, Cardiff also offers specialist therapy. Other establishments provide education combined with therapy. Individual health authorities would be able to supply fuller details of the treatment and services available in their areas.

A494

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet Hawarden community council to discuss his plans for road widening on the A494.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The decision on the preferred route, for an improvement to the A494 trunk road from the River Dee to Ewloe was announced on 8 April 1993. A copy of the statement of results of the public consultation and the reasons for the choice of the preferred route for the improvement was sent to the hon. Member at that time and is available to others on request. That statement fully explains the reasons for the choice of route and therefore I can see no useful purpose in meeting with Hawarden community council.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will establish a public inquiry concerning proposals to widen the A494 Queensferry-Aston Hill carriageway; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The proposals for widening the A494 trunk road between the River Dee and Ewloe will follow the normal procedures for such road improvements. These procedures were described in the statement of results of the public consultation and reasons for the choice of the preferred route for the improvement, a copy of which has been sent to the hon. Member.

Breast Screening

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to make arrangements for the breast screening programme in Wales to provide an appropriate level of service in Newport, Gwent.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Breast Test Wales provides a breast screening service throughout Wales. Detailed information about current and planned screening programmes is not held centrally. This is available from the director of Breast Test Wales who is responsible for the management and delivery of the service.

Child Abuse

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what services are available in Wales to provide support and counselling for children who have been the victims of physical or sexual abuse.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Precise information of the type requested is not held centrally. Guidance for dealing with cases of child abuse set out in "Working Together Under the Child Act 1989" seeks to ensure appropriate inter-agency working with a view to securing the most appropriate support for such children and their families, including counselling.

Traffic Congestion Connah's Quay

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet Connah's Quay town council to discuss trunk road traffic congestion.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I can see no useful purpose in meeting Connah's Quay town council to discuss traffic congestion. The Department's publication "Roads in Wales—Progress and Plans for the 1990's," the 1993 supplement for which was issued in March of this year, details the plans for road improvements on trunk roads in Wales including north east Clwyd. One of the objectives of the roads programme is to reduce traffic congestion.

Unemployment

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he is proposing to help the long-term unemployed in Clwyd.

Mr. David Hunt: The North Wales training and enterprise councils and employment service offer a wide range of services which are designed to help the long-term unemployed.

From 1 April, the largest ever range of measures is available under the training for work initiative. New initiatives including learning for work and the community action programme are also being introduced which will focus specifically on providing help to the long-term unemployed.

My Department, the Welsh Development Agency and other Government agencies also operate a wide range of other measures aimed at combating unemployment in Clwyd and elsewhere in Wales.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many long-term unemployed there are in (a) Wales, (b) Clwyd and (c) Alyn and Deeside.

Mr. David Hunt: In January 1993 the number of claimants who had been unemployed for more than 52 weeks in Wales, Clwyd and Alyn and Deeside district were 46,019, 4,865 and 809, respectively.

Training

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he is taking to ensure an increased number of training places in colleges; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Department has provided for a 28 per cent. increase in further education student numbers in Wales over the next three years. Funding for the Further Education Funding Council for Wales is intended to support an increase of 9·7 per cent. in student numbers to 48,000 full-time equivalents in 1993-94.

The funding council has set aside £4 million to encourage growth in FE institutions to the given target. The new demand-led element provides funding of £250 per term for each full-time student enrolled at an institution and will enable institutions to gain additional funding for eligible students recruited above target.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he proposes to ensure an increase in apprenticeship training for school leavers; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Government have always supported employers in their training of young people and believe that modern, flexible apprenticeship schemes have a vital role in securing and promoting vocational training. A number of TECs in Wales are now introducing training credit schemes which cover, inter alia, employer based training opportunities.

The Government's guarantee of a training place to school leavers ensures that the full range of training opportunities is availble to all young people.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy concerning training opportunities for the disabled in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The training and enterprise councils have a contractual obligation to provide suitable high quality training for people with disabilities.

From 1 April, people with disabilities have been given priority access to a range of training opportunities under the training for work initiative.

Provided they are eligible, people with disabilities will also have priority access to a place on learning for work.

The Employment Service's disability employment advisors also provide a comprehensive range of services to people with disabilities through the local network of jobcentres.

Youth Service

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what is his policy concerning the youth service;

(2) by what amount he has increased or decreased the youth budget for the current financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My policy for the youth service is to support the activities of the Wales Youth Agency and the national voluntary youth organisations in order to extend the opportunities for young people to develop as individuals and to become active and responsible members of society.

The 1993-94 current expenditure budget for the support of the agency and the national voluntary youth organisations is £736,000 compared with £728,000 for 1992-93.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many people are employed in the youth service (a) currently and (b) in 1983;

(2) what is the percentage of part-time and voluntary workers employed in the youth service in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what initiatives he has taken to encourage liaison between the youth service and police with the intent of combating youth crimes.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Welsh Office has for some years advocated the adoption of a multi-agency or partnership approach to crime prevention (Welsh Office circulars 1/84 and 28/90 refer). The collaborative arrangements which have been developed include representatives from the police and the youth service working together on crime prevention forums

The initiative in setting up some of these forums was taken by the Welsh Office in providing funds over a three-year period to the National Association for the Care and Resettlement of Offenders to bring together relevant agencies to tackle youth crime.

The Department also sponsors the Wales Youth Agency, which provides training, information and curriculum development for those working with young people who might otherwise become involved in crime. Much of the contact between youth work organisations and the police takes place at local level.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the annual budget of the youth service in each of the counties of Wales in 1992 and 1982 at constant prices.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information on the amount budgeted for youth service in 1992 is not held centrally. Outturn information for the latest year available is given in the table.

Local authority net current expenditure on youth services at constant 1991-92 prices[1]

	1990-91	1981-82
Clwyd	1,402	1,271
Dyfed	198	201
Gwent	2,195	1,238
Gwynedd	1,680	703
Mid Glamorgan	3,613	1,866
Powys	754	625
South Glamorgan	1,954	1,570
West Glamorgan	1,041	892
Total Counties	12,837	8,364

[1] Information taken from local education authority revenue outturn forms. Definitions changed in 1990-91; hence figures are not strictly comparable with those for 1981-82. Net current expenditure is defined as expenditure on employees and running expenses, less sales, fees, charges, internal recharges and other non-grant income but gross of specific government grants. Includes youth centres and residential youth centres.

Road Schemes

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those road schemes in Wales which in 1993-94 have been allocated urban programme grants in excess of £1 million; what are the criteria which determine the allocation of such grants; and what is the extent of funding by virtue of such grants.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Road schemes are eligible for urban programme support only where they form an integral part of wider economic regeneration schemes. In 1993-94 one road scheme attracted urban programme grant in excess of £1 million: the highway improvements to the A472/A467 junction at Crumlin, Gwent which is part of the Crumlin regeneration strategy. This project has, in principle, been allocated £1,770 million urban programme in 1993-94, including £0·770 million carried forward from the previous year.

Ferry Road Refuse Site

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what determination he has made in relation to the application by the Cardiff Bay development corporation for a vesting order on the Ferry road municipal refuse disposal site.

Mr. David Hunt: My discussions with the Cardiff Bay development corporation about their proposed acquisition of the Ferry road tip are continuing.

National Curriculum

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are his proposals for reviewing the national curriculum and its assessment in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I have asked the chairman of the Curriculum Council for Wales to undertake a general examination of the manageability of the national curriculum in Wales. The broad aim of the review will be to examine the existing curriculum and provide advice on the scope for avoiding over-prescription while retaining clear teaching objectives which can lead to higher education standards. The key items which are to be examined are the scope for simplifying the national curriculum either through its coverage or by providing greater clarity and simplification within each of the orders; the arrangements for conducting a longer term rolling review of the curriculum in Wales; and the appropriate means of grading the attainment of individual pupils including formal testing. In carrying out the examination I have asked that the Curriculum Council for Wales should work closely with the review which is being conducted by Sir Ron Dearing at the request of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education.

Sir Ron Dearing will be examining the arrangements in Wales as well as England in his initial review of the testing and assessment of the national curriculum. I have asked him to take into account, as part of that review, the specific considerations which apply to Welsh language subjects and the arrangements for conducting all tests through the medium of Welsh.

The conclusions of both reviews will be taken into account by the Curriculum and Assessment Authority for Wales when, subject to the approval of the Education Bill currently before Parliament, it is established in April next year. The first priority of the authority will be to take forward an evolutionary programme of review for the national curriculum in Wales and to develop stable assessment and testing arrangements.

Mental Handicap Strategy

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what financial support is available to assist individuals with a mental handicap and their families in Wales and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Under the Welsh Office's very successful mental handicap strategy, a special allocation of £48 million has been made in 1993-94 to support the development of help for mentally handicapped individuals and their families in Wales. This is an increase of 15 per cent. on the 1992-93 allocation of £41·5 million, making a total of over £200 million since the strategy began in 1983.

Special grants for 1993-94 have been made as follows:

To the county teams

	£ million
Clwyd	5·564
Dyfed	4·028
Gwent	7·203
Gwynedd	5·525
Mid Glamorgan	7·104
Powys	1·941
South Glamorgan	5·987
West Glamorgan	5·583

As direct funding to voluntary organisations

MENCAP	84,000
Catholic Children's Society	8,000
Standing Conference of Voluntary Organisations	156,000

Additionally, the balance of the special grant will be allocated to fund resettlement and new, innovative developments.

I can confirm that the mental handicap strategy will continue as a vital part of community care. I am confident that the excellent achievements of the strategy provide a firm foundation for the years ahead.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Malawi

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations the Government have made to the Government in Malawi with regard to respect for human rights.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Failure by the Malawian Government to address the international community's concern over human rights led the United Kingdom and other aid donors in May 1992 to suspend non-humanitarian assistance until there are clear signs of improvement. During our Presidency we initiated EC representations calling on the Malawian Government to address concerns over human rights. We continue to raise human rights issues regularly with the Malawian Government.

The referendum on Malawi's future political system due on 14 June encapsulates many of the key issues in question.

Britons Abroad (Financial Aid)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the accounting rules for diplomatic posts overseas relating to restrictions on the provision of financial assistance to Britons abroad who have got into serious financial difficulties.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Before financial assistance can be authorised the post must be satisfied that the applicant is destitute, has no funds in the United Kingdom, that his predicament is not of his own making, and that he cannot make use of a cheque card and cannot arrange for the rapid transfer of funds through commercial channels from relatives or friends.

Additionally, a small loan of up to £20 can be made if a British national loses his funds or has them stolen to enable him to get to an airport or be provided with an emergency passport. We would expect the applicant to have reported the loss at a police station; called the consulate immediately after making the police report;

produced an air ticket;
demonstrated that the air ticket is not transferable or refundable and has limited validity.

In all cases of financial assistance and repatriation, a legally binding undertaking to repay must be signed by the applicant.

Human Rights Conference

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the forthcoming UN world conference on human rights in Vienna on 14 to 25 June.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom is closely involved in the preparatory process leading to the world conference on human rights, due to be held in Vienna 14-25 June 1993. United Kingdom objectives at the conference will be to promote universal adherence to existing standards, to explore ways to improve their implementation, and to examine the relationship between human rights, democracy and development. The United Kingdom will also work to ensure that, among other issues, the conference addresses the rights of women, children and the disabled.

Waco Siege

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent loss of life of British citizens at Waco in the United States of America.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) on 26 April 1993, Official Report, column 288.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the United States Government concerning the recent deaths of British citizens at Waco, Texas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We remain in close touch with the United States authorities about this tragedy and we are giving every assistance to relatives of the United Kingdom citizens affected. President Clinton has ordered an inquiry into the events at Waco. We await the outcome.

Philippines

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations the Government have made to the Philippines Government about the killing of Mr. Chris Batan from the Bontoc office of Task Force Detainees of the Philippines on 23 February.

Mr. Goodlad: We are aware that this case has been highlighted by Amnesty International, and are seeking further information from the Philippine Government, who are investigating the circumstances of the murder.

Far East

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which countries he visited on his recent visit to the far east; which ministers or Government officials he met; and what matters in regard to nuclear non-proliferation and arms exports were discussed.

Mr. Goodlad: During his visit to Indonesia my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs had discussions with President Soeharto, Foreign Minister Alatas, and Economic and Finance minister Afiff; he also met other Ministers, the Sultan of Yogyakarta, and a number of officials and businessmen. In Japan he met the Prime Minister, Foreign Minister, the Finance Minister and the Minister for International Trade and Industry, and in Korea the President, the Foreign Minister and the Minister for National Defence. The discussions in Japan and South Korea covered North Korea's announcement of its intention to withdraw from the non-proliferation treaty. Arms exports were not discussed during the visit.

South Africa

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the South African authorities on the effect of Mr. Chris Hani's murder on the peace process; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have made every effort to help to minimise the effect of the tragic assassination of Chris Hani on the negotiating process in South Africa, including the provision of a senior police officer to help with the investigation.

In the next few weeks, the Prime Minister and Foreign Secretary will be seeing Nelson Mandela and Chief Buthelezi to discuss the progress of negotiations. The Prime Minister is in regular contact with President de Klerk.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received about rape camps in the former Yugoslavia; and what action he now intends to take.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received many representations from members of this House and of the public. Evidence collected by the EC investigative mission into the abuse of women in former Yugoslavia points to rapes having taken place in small centres, such as schools and hotels, rather than large-scale detention of women in camps for the purpose of rape. In response to the mission's recommendations, we have promoted and jointly funded a project to counsel and help rape victims in Bosnia.

Construction Contracts

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement of his policy on awarding contracts for construction and refurbishment work on the diplomatic estate, indicating, specifically, the steps which are taken to ensure that opportunities to tender are drawn to the attention of British companies.

Mr. Goodlad: The FCO's policy is to contract with British firms where competition establishes that they provide best value for money, and where their participation is practicable in local circumstances. All major construction and refurbishment projects are advertised in the supplement to the Official Journal of the European Community, in accordance with our obligations under the EC Public Procurement Directive for Works. Information about a wider range of projects is also periodically sent to the Export Group for the Constructional Industries for circulation to its members.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent construction work has been undertaken on the proposed embassy in Berlin; to which companies major contracts have been awarded; what nationality are those companies; what is the value of the contracts; and what steps have been taken to ensure that British companies had the opportunity to tender for the work.

Mr. Goodlad: The proposed embassy in Berlin is still at pre-planning stages, and no construction work has yet been carried out. In due course, the project will be advertised in the supplement to the Official Journal of the European Community in accordance with our obligations under the EC Public Procurement Directive for Works and its details will be sent to the Export Group for the Constructional Industries.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent construction work has been undertaken on the high commission in Islamabad; to which companies the major contracts were awarded; what nationality were those companies; what was the value of the contracts; and what steps were first taken to ensure that British companies had the opportunity to tender for the work.

Mr. Goodlad: The construction of a new Immigration and Consular building, at a total contract value of about £4·8 million, is currently proceeding in Islamabad. Glauser International, a French contractor with an established operation in Pakistan, is the main contractor. The sub-contractor for the mechanical, electrical and services engineering work (valued at about £2·2 million) is the British firm Balfour Kilpatrick Ltd. This project was drawn to the attention of the Export Group for the Constructional Industries. Eight contractors, including five British, were invited to bid.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent construction work has been undertaken on the embassy in Kiev; to which companies the major contracts were awarded; what nationality were those companies; what was the value of the contracts; and what steps were first taken to ensure that British companies had the opportunity to tender for the work.

Mr. Goodlad: The recently-occupied embassy and residence building in Kiev is currently being refurbished at total contract cost of about £300,000. All the contracts were awarded to British companies: Rotary International, Kitchen World and Amity International Ltd. The tender lists were derived from contractors who had expressed an interest in the project.

SCOTLAND

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many appeals have been made to him against the terms of records of needs for children with special needs under the Education (Scotland) Act 1980 in the last four years; what are the average and maximum times taken to process such appeals; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In the four-year period from 1989 to 1992, 13 appeals were referred to the Secretary of State under section 64(1)(a) of the Education (Scotland) Act 1980. Of these, six appeals received in 1992 are still under consideration. The other seven appeals were determined on average within eight months but in one case processing took 12 months. The considerations involved in the appeals process are invariably complex, but steps are being taken to bring outstanding appeals to a conclusion as quickly as possible.

Dentistry

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to introduce a scheme in Scotland similar to that operating in England and Wales giving financial assistance towards the setting up or expansion of dental practices within family health service authorities.

Mr. Stewart: There are no plans at present to introduce a similar scheme in Scotland.

Forth Road Bridge

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what forecast he has made of the likely level of tolls for the new Forth road bridge; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As the Government reported in February in our response document to the setting forth consultation, preliminary indications suggest that the additional bridge and associated roadworks identified in that consultation could be supported by a toll comparable in real terms to the toll on the present bridge when it opened in 1964. The 2/6d toll then would compare to around £1·25p now. The precise level of toll on any new bridge will not be known until the completion of a full competitive tender process should the Government decide to proceed with the project following the feasibility studies currently under way.

Skye Bridge

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what force of impact the caissons on the Skye bridge are being constructed to withstand.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The caissons on the Skye bridge have been designed to withstand the impact from a 10,000 tonne dead weight vessel. This allows for all known shipping movements. This 10,000 tonne limit was agreed with Marine Directorate of the Department of Transport.

Caledonian MacBrayne

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland under what statutory provisions he can override the commercial decisions of the directors of Caledonian MacBrayne.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend's powers and obligations in respect of Caledonian MacBrayne Ltd. are defined in the terms of the Highlands and Islands Shipping Services Act 1960 and the undertaking of 15 August 1975 between the Secretary of State and the company. As controlling shareholder of the company, my right hon. Friend has certain other powers and responsibilites, which are defined in the company's articles of association.

Kyle-Kyleakin Ferry

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the construction of the Skye bridge and its approach roads will result in any physical obstruction to the use of the Kyle-Kyleakin ferry slipways.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The construction of the Skye bridge and its approach roads will not result in any physical obstruction to the use of the Kyle-Kyleakin ferry slipways. HRC's complementary Kyle prospect enhancements, made possible by the bridge, take advantage of the released ferry marshalling area.

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what Scottish Office grant aid was made available for the construction of the piers and slipways presently used by the Kyle-Kyleakin ferry; and what provisions cover the refund of such money.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None.

White Fish

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what quantities of white fish were withdrawn from the market under intervention in each of the past 12 months at each port; what was the total sum paid to fishermen in respect of these landings; and what quantities of this fish have gone for human consumption (a) abroad or (b) via domestic charities.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 23 April 1993]: None of the white fish withdrawn from the market under intervention has gone for human consumption either abroad or to charities. Full settlement to the producers organisations of compensation payable for fish withdrawn under the European Community's price support system for the year to end December 1992 has yet to take place, though advance payments have been made. Information on the quantities of white fish withdrawn from the market in Scotland under intervention in each of the 12 months to end March 1993, on the ports of landing and on the intervention sums paid so far is set out in the tables.

Forestry

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 22 March, Official Report, column 477, what comments his Department made to the Highland regional council on their draft indicative forestry strategy concerning Caithness; what consideration he has given to the Highland regional council's Economic Review Issue No. 19, published in January; if the comments on page 15 accurately reflect his Department's views; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 20 April 1993]: The comments in the Economic Review relate to a letter of 23 October 1992 from the Scottish Office environment department to the regional council commenting that some of the agreements in the council's land use strategy for Caithness and Sutherland were not fully reflected in its draft indicative forestry strategy. The letter also pointed out that the draft omitted reference to the continuing programme of designation of sites of special scientific Interest in the area by Scottish Natural Heritage.

These comments were made as technical assistance to the council's professional officers and were not formal comments on an alteration or review in relation to the existing structure plan. No such alteration or review has been submitted to my right hon. Friend for his approval.

Fisheries (Bird Killing Licences)

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many licences were applied for, and issued, under section 16 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 to permit the killing of (a) cormorant, (b) goosander and (c) red-breasted merganser in Scotland for each year since 1988, to prevent serious damage to fisheries.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 26 April 1993]: The information is as follows:

	1988 (February-April)	1989 (February-April)	1990 (February-April)	1991 (February-April)	1992 (February-April)	1992 (September-December)

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) cormorants, (b) goosander and (c) red-breasted merganser were killed under licence in (i) Scotland and (ii) the Tweed catchment, for each year since 1988, to prevent serious damage to fisheries.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 26 April 1993]: The details are as follows for the period 1988-1992.

1. Birds reported killed under licence in Scotland (excluding the River Tweed)

	Cormorants	Goosanders	Mergansers
1988 (February—April)	221	429	204

No application has been received to shoot mergansers in the Tweed catchment during this period.

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what analysis has been carried out on the diet of (a) cormorants, (b) goosander and (c) red-breasted merganser killed under licence in (i) Scotland and (ii) the Tweed catchment; and what proportion of their diet was salmon; and what proportion was assessed to constitute serious damage to salmon fisheries.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 26 April 1993]: The Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department (SOAFD) commissioned research from the Institute of Terrestrial Ecology (ITE) in 1987. The programme has been extended to 1994 and is designed to investigate the predatory activities of sawbill ducks (goosanders and mergansers) and other piscivorous birds, and their impact on salmonid populations in Scottish rivers, including the River Tweed. A major element of the programme is an analysis of the gut of birds shot under licence to determine the nature of their diet. Results of this research programme are expected to be available in 1994.

Community Care

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has for the issuing of guidelines to social work departments in relation to the discharging from hospitals of psychiatric patients into the community by way of the community care programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 22 March 1993]: Guidance was issued to local authorities, health boards and others in February 1992. My noble and learned Friend the Minister of State is aware of the current review of treatment in the community for people with a mental disorder in England and will consider the need for any changes in Scotland arising from that review.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Third World Debt

Sir David Steel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the United Kingdom will implement the Trinidad terms on remission of debt for the poorest countries as indicated by the Prime Minister in October 1991.

Mr. Nelson: The United Kingdom conduct their policy with regard to developing country debt issues through the Paris Club. This multilateral approach is shared by our creditor colleagues, and works to the benefit of both creditors and debtors. The United Kingdom Government have an excellent record on initiatives and action on developing country debt—including the Prime Minister's Trinidad terms. For full details, I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave recently to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 26 April 1993, Official Report, c. 293.

Bitumen (Tax)

Mr. Conway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how a natural bitumen (CN2714) would be taxed in accordance with EC Council directive 92/81/EEC if such hydrocarbon is used as a fuel for power generation with a price and role similar to that of coal.

Sir John Cope: Natural bitumen classified under CN2714 is not specified in EC Council Directive 92/81/EEC and therefore not subject to mineral oils duty under the directive, whereas mixtures based on natural bitumen are classified under CN2715 and when used as a fuel for power generation are subject to duty under the Directive. Clause 10 of the current Finance Bill gives effect to this aspect of the directive.

Company Cars

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the Inland Revenue regards as business use cases where an employee is provided with a company car and uses it to drive, or to be driven, from home to the normal place of employment.

Mr. Dorrell: Home-to-work travel in a car made available by an employer is normally regarded as private use.

PRIME MINISTER

Sellafield

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he received on the dangers of plutonium proliferation from the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield during his most recent visit to Washington DC.

The Prime Minister: None.

Visually Impaired People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Prime Minister what action Government Departments have taken, or will be taking, to improve official communications with people who are visually impaired by providing more information in large print, braille or on tape; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: A number of Government publications have already been produced for people who are visually impaired. Examples are given in the following table:

Moreover the citizens charter, which calls on public services to make sure information about services is easily accessible to all their users, is putting fresh emphasis on the need for effective communication with those who have special needs, including people who are visually impaired.

Libya

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has received from Arab sources about the effect of sanctions on transport in Libya, with particular reference to the delay in the provision of non-banned medicines causing them to be ineffective.

The Prime Minister: So far as I am aware, I have received no representations.

Engagements

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 27 April.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Abattoirs

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimates have been made as to the number of abattoirs in the United Kingdom which will be unable to meet the standards set out in the Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1992.

Mr. Soames: Nine abattoirs have been refused licences under the Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1992 because of serious hygiene deficiencies. Approximately 30 abattoirs have yet to agree a work plan to upgrade their premises to comply with the Regulations and have been given a time-limited licence to enable outstanding problems to be resolved. No further licences will be issued to these premises unless a work plan to remedy structure-related hygiene problems is agreed.

Premises which are refused a licence may appeal to the meat hygiene appeals tribunal.

Biofuels

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures his Department is taking to promote the production and use of biofuels.

Mr. Curry: The Department is sponsoring research on a number of topics relevant to biofuels and other non-food uses of crops, and is working closely with other departments, in particular the Department of Trade and Industry's energy technology support unit. We are also pressing for perennial crops such as short rotation coppice and miscanthus to be eligible under the non-rotational option for set-aside.

Bovine Somatotropin

Dr. Wright: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consideration he has given to the 1990 report of the Veterinary Products Committee in deciding that BST should be licensed.

Mr. Soames: In 1990 the Veterinary Products Committee advised Ministers that, having assessed data on two BST products, it was satisfied that they were efficacious and that their use would not pose any health hazard to consumers of milk from treated animals. On the basis of the data before it, however, the committee was not completely satisfied with some aspects of the safety and welfare of treated animals if used commercially, and could not recommend that a licence be granted. In such circumstances, under the Medicines Act 1968, applicants have a right of appeal to the Medicines Commission before their application is determined. Additional scientific evidence can be generated and presented at such hearings. Both companies exercised that right and in January 1993, on the basis of the evidence then presented, the Medicines Commission advised that the Medicines Act criteria of safety, quality and efficacy were met.

This advice was reflected by the United Kingdom delegation during the subsequent final scientific evaluations of the two BST products by the EC Committee on Veterinary Medicinal Products. However, no product licences under the Medicines Act may be issued so long as the licensing moratorium agreed by the European Community's Council of Ministers remains in force.

Broiler Chickens

Dr. Wright: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to make changes to slaughterhouse practices and legislation in relation to the treatment of broiler chickens.

Mr. Soames: The Department initiated discussion on an EC proposal on the welfare of animals at slaughter, including poultry, during the United Kingdom presidency. Discussions are continuing and we will be seeking high welfare standards to be implemented and enforced throughout the Community. Proposals to implement Council Directive 92/116/EEC on poultry meat hygiene are currently being prepared, in discussion with industry and enforcement interests, and will be issued for public consultation in due course.

Integrated Administration and Control Scheme

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements have been made to pay any interest accrued where it is established through the integrated administration and control scheme that the applicant has been underpaid, erroneously, under any of the various CAP regimes established by the 1992 CAP reforms.

Mr. Curry: Cases involving erroneous underpayments would be dealt with on their merits, within the rules of Government accounting.

Foot and Mouth Disease

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the cost to date of the measures taken to prevent an outbreak of foot and mouth disease since the presence of vaccinated stock in the United Kingdom first came to his attention.

Mr. Gummer: The measures taken include the tracing and testing of some 850 cattle in some 27 consignments imported into Great Britain since last August and which are now located throughout the country. Information on the cost of such measures, which are still continuing, is only available at disproportionate cost.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the most recent figure for the number of cattle presently in the United Kingdom which are known to have been vaccinated against foot and mouth disease; from which country they originated; if the precise location of each vaccinated animal is known to the authorities; and what plans he has for removing vaccinated livestock from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Gummer: So far, a total of 238 imported cattle have been tested positive for the presence of antibodies to foot and mouth disease (FMD). In the absence of clinical disease, the positive test results indicate that the animals in question may have previously been vaccinated against FMD. Most of the seropositive animals originated in the Czech Republic and a small number in Poland. All seropositive animals are currently under restriction on their holdings while the tracing and testing of remaining animals is completed. In view of the long-standing policy not to permit the presence in the United Kingdom of animals which have been vaccinated against FMD, and the fact that the animals were imported in contravention of Community import rules, the seropositive animals will have to be either returned to their countries of origin or slaughtered. My veterinary officials have been in touch with their counterparts in the Czech Republic and Poland to discuss possible arrangements for the re-export of the animals in question.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to compensate United Kingdom livestock farmers who came to be in possession of stock vaccinated against foot and mouth disease.

Mr. Gummer: The resolution of the problem is a commercial matter between the exporters, the importers and the current owners. The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food is under no obligation to pay any form of compensation.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits (Capital Limits)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the full year cost of abolishing all the capital limits for all social security benefits.

Mr. Burt: Using data from the 1988, 1989 and 1990 Family Expenditure Surveys modelled at 1993-94 prices and benefit levels, we estimate that the cost would be approximately £1,590 million.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people would receive increased benefit payments if all the capital limits for social security benefits were abolished.

Mr. Burt: Using data from the 1988, 1989 and 1990 Family Expenditure Surveys modelled at 1993-94 prices and benefit levels, we estimate that the number of people who would receive increased payments (including those who currently receive no payment) would be as shown in the table.

Benefit	Gainers
Income support	800,000
Housing benefit	400,000
Council tax benefit	1,360,000
Family credit	50,000

Training Schemes

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in what circumstances participants in training for work, learning for work and the community action programme who receive income support as part of their participation allowance will be eligible for the £10 a week voluntary payments disregard; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: Participants in training for work and community action will receive an allowance equivalent to their benefit entitlement, plus £10 a week training premium. Participants in learning for work will receive an allowance equivalent to their benefit (without the £10 premium).

Participants on any of these schemes will be eligible for the £10 a week voluntary payments disregard, subject to the usual conditions.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much end-of-training bonus training for work, learning for work and community action participants will be able to receive without its affecting their entitlement to income support; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: Any payment not exceeding £200 received as a training bonus will be disregarded.

Part-time Study

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the application of the 21-hour rule to unemployed income support claimants who wish to study courses of higher education, including undergraduate and post-graduate degree courses and higher national diploma courses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to her on 15 April at column 704.

Social Fund

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action his Department has undertaken following the research it has commissioned on the social fund; and when a new system of entitlements to grants will be developed.

Mr. Scott: We are currently carefully considering the operation of the social fund, including grants provision, in response to the research commissioned from York university's social policy research unit, along with a number of other reports and our own close monitoring of the fund.

Disability Benefits

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will take steps to ensure that people in receipt of disability benefits who take up a place in the work activity element of training for work, or in the community action programme, will not have their subsequent eligibility for disability benefit challenged because of their participation in the programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Participation in a training for work or community action programme will not in itself automatically debar a person from disability benefits. A trainee in receipt of disability living allowance or attendance allowance may have their entitlement reviewed after six months to establish whether their needs have changed.

Deafness Claims

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to implement the recommendations of the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council on the occupational deafness disability benefit scheme contained in Cm. 817 and Cm. 1245; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The Industrial Injuries Advisory Council's recommendations have been carefully considered. A number of administrative changes have been introduced, and new arrangements for audiometric tests are currently being evaluated. A decision on extending the scheme will be taken once we have the results of this study.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to prevent delays in diagnosing and assessment of deafness claims by war pensioners in the Newcastle area.

Miss Widdecombe: Following a competitive tendering exercise a national contract for the provision of audiological testing will be awarded in May. This will provide a more efficient and speedier service, throughout the country.

Retirement Pensions

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many retirement pensioners qualify for the additional payments available to those aged 80 years and over; and what percentage this represents of the overall total of retirement pensioners.

Miss Widdecombe: At September 1992 (the latest date in respect of which figures are available) 2,241,040, or 21·8 per cent. of, retirement pensioners were aged 80 or over and therefore qualified for an age addition of £0·25 to their pension.

Note: The term "retirement pensioner" includes those receiving non-contributory retirement pension and/or graduated retirement benefit only and pensioners residing overseas.

Retirement Age

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he intends to announce proposals which equalise the retirement age of men and women; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The Government are committed to the equalisation of state pension age. No decisions have yet been made on what option should be adopted.

We will announce our proposals for equalisation when we have fully considered the views expressed by both the public and interested organisations and its implications for related developments in the private pensions sector.

Disabled (Car Insurance)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations the Minister for Disabled People has had from Artsline in regard to car insurance for vehicles driven by disabled people; what reply he is sending; what action he has taken; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We have received a copy of a letter from Mr. Roger Robinson, director of Artsline, to the chief executive of the Association of British insurers about the costs of car insurance for disabled drivers. The issue of insurance policies and their terms are for the commercial judgment of insurance companies. In 1989, the Association of British Insurers produced a dossier of advice for disabled drivers and undertook to investigate individual cases of difficulty. We understand that it will be sending a full reply to this case and we have asked for a copy of its response, in the light of which we shall write to Mr. Robinson.

Fostering

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will extend the home responsibility protection to foster carers who do not receive a financial reward from fostering; and if he will give reasons for his answer.

Mr. Burt: Eligibility for HRP is dependent on entitlement to certain benefits, primarily child benefit. To avoid double provision from public funds for the cost of child care, child benefit is not paid to foster carers who receive an allowance from the local authority. Consequently HRP is not available in these cases.

Personal Injury Compensation

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how much in state benefits was recovered from legal damages in employer liability personal injury cases under section 22 of the Social Security Act 1989 in each quarter of 1990, 1991 and 1992;

(2) how much in state benefits was recovered from legal damages in personal injury cases under section 22 of the Social Security Act 1989 in each quarter of 1990, 1991 and 1992.

Miss Widdecombe: The operation of the compensation recovery unit is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mr. M. Bichard to Mr. Donald Dewar, dated 26 April 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility for answering questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how much in state benefits was recovered from legal damages in (i) personal injury cases and (ii) employer liability personal injury cases under section 22 of the Social Security Act 1989 in each quarter of 1990, 1991 and 1992.

The Compensation Recovery Scheme became effective on personal injury claims settled on or after 3 September 1990. Details of all recoveries made since that date are shown at Annex A by quarter and details of all recoveries made in employer liability cases are shown similarly at Annex B.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Benefit Deductions

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of income support recipients are now having deductions made from benefits as a result of paying back social fund loans (a) nationally, (b) by territory, and (c) in each Department of Social Security-Benefits Agency district.

Mr. Burt: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mr. M. Bichard to Mr. Hugh Bayley, dated 26 April 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking, what percentage of Income Support recipients are now having deductions made from benefits as a result of paying back Social Fund loans (a) nationally, (b) by territory, and (c) in each Department of Social Security-Benefits Agency district.

It is not possible to provide this information as it is not collected as a matter of routine; also records relate to applications rather than applicants. I can, however, advise you that at 31 March 1993, some 680,000 loans nationally were being repaid from various sources. In the main, this was by deduction from Income Support.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this letter will appear in the Official Report and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Mrs. D. Milford

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the application for attendance allowance submitted by Mrs. D. Milford (NI JB 091986 C) in May 1992 will be considered; and what reasons underlie the time taken in notifying Mrs. Milford.

Mr. Scott: The administration of attendance allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mr. M. Bichard to Mr. Anthony Steen, dated 26 April 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking when the application for attendance allowance submitted by Mrs. D. Milford in May 1992 will be considered and the reasons for the delay in notifying Mrs. Milford.

Mrs. Milford has been in receipt of the lower rate of Attendance Allowance (AA) since 5 June 1989 and wrote to the Attendance Allowance Unit on 29 May 1992 requesting that she receive the higher rate of AA. Mrs. Milford's claim for the increased rate of AA has now been considered by the Adjudication Officer and she was notified of the result of the claim on 22 April 1993.

Whilst the delay in arriving at the decision on this claim has taken longer than is usual for these types of cases, an examination of the papers show that the main reason for this was the difficulty encountered in trying to obtain the dates of Mrs. Milford's hospitalisation. It was imperative not only that these dates were obtained, but also verified, as they did have a material effect on the award and payment of the allowance.

I thank you for the opportunity to explain this case. I hope that you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

EMPLOYMENT

Learning for Work

16. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many places have been provided on the learning for work scheme announced in the Budget.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Provision for 30,000 people to take part in learning for work will be available during the 1993-94 academic year starting in September in England and Wales and in August in Scotland.

Labour Statistics

17. Mr. Ilsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what initiatives she has to decrease unemployment in mining areas.

Mr. McLoughlin: We are making available £75 million to training and enterprise councils and the Employment Service to help redundant miners and other unemployed people in areas affected by a pit closure.

18. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures she is introducing to assist the long-term unemployed in East Anglia.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: New measures recently announced will provide an extra 100,000 opportunities nationally. Learning for work, community action and an expanded business start-up scheme will be available to long-term unemployed people in East Anglia as elsewhere. Additionally, a pilot scheme, north Norfolk action, will provide 100 opportunities for long-term unemployed people in Norfolk to participate in full-time community work.

19. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimate she has for the number of part-time or casual workers in (a) 1979 and (b) 1992; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Estimates from the Labour Force Survey show that the number of part-time employees in spring 1979 was almost 4 million, and in autumn 1992 it was over 5 million; 780,000 people were in casual, temporary and seasonal jobs in spring 1984, decreasing to 690,000 in autumn 1992.

26. Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the change in unemployment in the south-east since 1990.

Mr. McLoughlin: In the South East region, seasonally adjusted claimant unemployment rose by 604,100 between March 1990 and March 1993.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures she is introducing to assist the long-term unemployed in the north of England.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: New measures announced in the Budget will provide an extra 100,000 opportunities nationally for long-term unemployed people. Learning for work, community action and an expanded business start-up scheme will be available to long-term unemployed people in the north of England, as elsewhere.

Disabled People

21. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals she has for extending employment training opportunities for the disabled.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: From 1 April people with disabilities have had priority for a place on a wide range of employment and training programmes including training for work.

In addition, people with disabilities will be given similar priority on learning for work and community action, where they are eligible.

Small Businesses

22. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps she is taking to enable trade unionists and unemployed persons to receive training in the establishment and running of small businesses.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Training in the establishment and running of small businesses is available under the business start-up scheme, youth training, training for work and through our support of the Prince's Youth Business Trust.

Trade unionists who meet the appropriate eligibility conditions can participate in any of these programmes.

Back Pain

23. Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps are being taken by the Health and Safety Executive to reduce the number of working days lost due to back pain.

Mr. McLoughlin: I am informed that the Health and Safety Executive is working actively with industry and others to reduce the number of working days lost due to back pain. New regulations on manual handling of loads and the use of display screen equipment and the executive's current "Lighten the Load" campaign will all help to focus the attention of industry on the need to reduce the incidence of back pain and other musculo-skeletal disorders and promote their prevention.

Training

24. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of under 21-year-olds move directly on to permanent employment from training schemes.

Mr. McLoughlin: In 1992, 35 per cent. of those leaving youth training moved directly into employment. In the same period, 19 per cent. of those aged under 21 leaving employment training found a job.

For both programmes, regular follow-up surveys show that much greater proportions are in a job three months after leaving their training.

"New horizons for Women"

25. Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement on progress on the "new horizons for women" initiative.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: "New Horizons" events have so far been held in Manchester and Newcastle and I am very encouraged by the interest which they have generated. The next event will be held in Bristol on 10 May and further events are planned elsewhere in the country during the coming months.

Youth Training Guarantee

27. Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment she has made of how effectively the youth training guarantee is working.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department's contracts with TECs calls for regular monitoring and review, at a local level, of the numbers of young people covered by the youth training guarantee who are seeking a place. The review is conducted jointly by Departmental officials, TECs and other interested parties such as the careers service. In addition, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced to the House on 7 July last year, Official Report, cols 171-72, measures establishing a national system for monitoring the numbers of young people seeking training.

We are confident that the TECs and careers services are working well together to ensure that sufficient places are available to meet demand.

TEC Challenge Fund

28. Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement on the TEC challenge fund.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I am delighted to announce that a prospectus inviting TECS to bid for TEC challenge funds was issued on 13 April. A copy has been placed in the Library.

Departmental Working Conditions

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations she has received about working conditions in her office block in Tothill street, from staff working in the building.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend has received no direct representations from staff about working conditions in her office block in Tothill street. Such matters are usually addressed at regular meetings between officials and staff representatives.

Coal Industry

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretaryn of State for Employment on what date she estimates that funds from the package of additonal assistance for redundant miners announced in October 1992 will begin to be released in the Nottinghamshire coalfield.

Mr. McLoughlin: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Woodspring (Dr. Fox) on 31 March 1993, Official Report, column 254.

We cannot make an estimate of when individual pit areas might be eligible for help. That will depend on decisions made by individuals employed at the pits concerned.

Employment Legislation

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals she has for further legislation on terms and conditions of employment.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Bill currently before Parliament further strengthens the framework of statutory employment protection in relation to maternity, written particulars of employment and unfair dismissal. In general, however, terms and conditions of employment are a matter for agreement between employers and employees without Government intervention.

Gas Safety

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals emerged from the review initiated by the Health and Safety Executive of the Gas Safety (Installation and Use) Regulations 1984; and when she will publish these proposals.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Health and Safety Commission will consider proposals emerging from the review shortly.

DEFENCE

Dockyard Redundancies

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if it is his intention to continue funding redundancies in the royal dockyard.

Mr. Aitken: Under the term contracts for the operation of the Royal dockyards, my Department has an obligation to reimburse the dockyard operators for the cost of redundancies among their employees arising from reductions in the naval refit programme (subject to their having achieved specified targets for commercial (non-MOD) work). Arrangements for the period after the present term contracts expire have yet to be determined.

RAF Menwith Hill

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether a lost property system is operated at Menwith Hill RAF base near Harrogate with recorded acknowledgement of all items handed in; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Yes.

Bosnia

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British service personnel have been killed or injured on active service with UNPROFOR II; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There has been one death, that of Lance Corporal Edwards, and five injuries to British soldiers sustained in the course of their duties while serving with UNPROFOR Bosnia-Herzegovina command.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what assessment his Department has made of the possibility of extending the policy of safe havens from northern Iraq to Bosnia; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what consideration he has given to the military implications of the establishment of safe havens in Bosnia; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what discussions he has had with his NATO counterparts regarding the military implications of the establishment of safe havens in Bosnia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We welcome the UNHCR's proposal to establish safe areas in Bosnia by agreement with the parties; the United Kingdom supported similar ideas last July. The position in Bosnia is however different to that in northern Iraq; the ethnic map, topography and triangular war make it impossible in the absence of an effective peace agreement to envisage the establishment of genuine safe areas without the deployment of huge numbers of heavily armed United Nations ground troops assisted by air power.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions British service personnel deployed with UNPROFOR II have sought to negotiate local ceasefires and other methods of preventing conflicts with local militia commanders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Participating in negotiations to arrange local ceasefires to allow the passage of humanitarian aid and refugees, the evacuation of the sick and wounded and other tasks within the mandate of the UNPROFOR troops operating in Bosnia-Herzegovina is part of the British battalion group's day-to-day business. It is not possible to provide a precise figure.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what discussions he has had with his NATO counterparts concerning an increase in the size of the British contribution to UNPROFOR II; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what discussions he has had with his NATO counterparts concerning a general increase in the size of UNPROFOR II; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Participation in United Nations peacekeeping deployments in the former Yugoslavia is kept under constant review in concert with our NATO allies. These discussions naturally include the possible size and scope of future United Nations deployments in the former Yugoslavia.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what consideration he has given to the military consequences of implementing the Vance-Owen peace proposals in Bosnia; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what discussions he has had with his NATO counterparts relating to the military consequences of implementing the Vance-Owen peace proposals in Bosnia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Both within the United Nations and NATO, the possible size and scope of an operation to assist the parties to implement the Vance-Owen peace proposals is being kept under close review.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many times British service personnel deployed with UNPROFOR II have been mentioned in dispatches.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Mentions in dispatches are awarded in operational theatres only. The former Yugoslavia has not been declared an operational theatre, although this is under review.

Airwork Ltd.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current value and type of contracts that his Department have with Airwork Ltd.; and what conditions relating to operations in the event of a conflict have been included in these contracts.

Mr. Aitken: Figures for the end of the 1992-93 financial year are still being finalised, but at the end of February my Department had 49 contracts with Airwork Ltd. The original value of these was some £91 million, but the value of the work still to be carried out is some £28·5 million.

Airwork Ltd. provides my Department with a wide range of aircraft-related maintenance, repair and other support activities, as well as providing services such as catering and cleaning.

Terms and conditions of individual contracts are regarded as commercially confidential, but I can confirm that our policy for contracting out support services takes account of the need for continued support in time of conflict.

Meggitt Aerospace and Defence plc

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many contracts currently exist between his Department and Meggitt Aerospace and Defence plc.

Mr. Aitken: My Department holds no contracts directly with this company, but does hold a large number with its various subsidiaries. A total of 1,363 such contracts were active during the 1992-93 financial year.

RAF St. Athan

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made as to the adequacy of the maintenance of aircraft at RAF St. Athan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: RAF St. Athan is accredited by my Department's directorate of quality assurance to an international quality standard and there is no cause to doubt the quality of the aircraft maintenance carried out there. Some problems have, however, been identified during a recent modification programme on Tornado aircraft, the cause of which is currently being examined.

Army Recruitment

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide a breakdown by individual Army recruiting offices of the recruitment by regiments or corps for 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have placed the available information for main Army careers information offices up to 6 March 1993 in the Library of the House.

RAF Leeming (Aircraft Noise)

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total amount of noise compensation paid out by his Department to property owners in the vicinity of RAF Leeming since the stationing of Tornado aircraft at the base.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As at the end of March 1993 my Department has paid out £8,903,000 in noise compensation to entitled claimants.

RAF Wyton

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further consideration he has given to the future of RAF Wyton and the proposed location of the RAF logistics command headquarters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Royal Air Force's electronic warfare and reconnaissance assets and a number of other major and minor units are currently stationed at RAF Wyton. In order to exploit the benefits of estate rationalisation and because certain units are being market-tested, flying operations at RAF Wyton are planned to reduce to the point at which it would be uneconomic to retain the airfield, with its associated station support services, as a flying station.

Subject to consultation with the trade unions I have concluded that the electronic warfare and reconnaissance assets should be relocated to RAF Waddington, and other units to RAF Marham and RAF Finningley. These relocations would be completed by mid 1996.

I announced on 14 August that RAF Wyton, along with RAF Brampton, would form the centre for RAF logistics management, and that this would involve the concentration there of support activities situated now at several sites, including MOD Harrogate. It subsequently emerged from revised Army plans that Uniacke barracks at Pennypot, near Harrogate, might become available for other defence purposes, and I therefore commissioned a detailed study into its possible use for RAF logistics activities. This re-examination is now complete. The result is to confirm that the Brampton/Wyton option provides the best solution to RAF needs. RAF Logistic Command will therefore form on 1 April 1994 at Brampton and, on current plans, most of the logistic support services will move to Wyton in 1995 and 1996. MOD Harrogate, RAF Swanton Morley, and eventually RAF Stanbridge, will close as originally announced.

I am happy to say that the Army apprentice college at Uniacke barracks at Pennypot will, however, remain open for longer than previously anticipated. Apprentice training for the Royal Signals will continue there for the time being and will move direct to Blandford where new facilities should be ready for occupation during 1995. Alternative long-term defence uses for the Pennypot site are under consideration.

Food Distribution

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the future arrangements for the purchase and distribution of food for the armed services.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Responsibility for the purchase and distribution of food to the armed services is currently split between the Director General of Supplies and Transport (Naval), the Royal Logistic Corps and the Navy, Army and Air Force Institutes (NAAFI). Following a detailed study, I have concluded in principle that the task should be rationalised and that, subject to satisfactory terms being negotiated, a fixed-term contract should be awarded in the first instance to NAAFI. Once consolidation has been achieved, as much of the work as possible will be subjected to market testing. The responsibility for the policy and management of food supply will remain within the Ministry of Defence.

We shall be consulting interested parties, in particular the Ministry of Defence trade unions, about the proposal in the normal way. I am placing a copy of the consultative document in the Library of the House.

Maintenance Group Defence Agency

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish key management targets for the Maintenance Group Defence Agency.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Maintenance Group Defence Agency's key management targets for 1993-94 are as follows:

(a) To achieve at least 98 per cent. of the specified maintenance and communications-electronics tasks to standard and on time.
(b) To achieve the Joint Service Publication 336 Defence Supply Manual speed of issue and pipeline targets for at least 95 per cent. of the depot supply task.
(c) To keep within the group's allocated budget.
(d) To reduce the cost per unit of output by 2·5 per cent.
(e) To achieve the quality systems targets set in the group's management plan.
(f) To install the new financial and management accounting system at all the group's major units by 31 March 1994.
(g) To complete the warehouse and transportation management system full study by 12 October 1993, and to commence implementation by 1 November 1993.

Hours during which the Office is open to the public:	It is planned to extend opening hours at Kew on weekdays.

Notes:
1. Fuller details of the Office's performance targets are given in its Business Plan, which is available from the Public Record Office.
2. Following the introduction of accruals accounting, the basis on which the unit costs are calculated will be revised during 1993-94.

Incest

Miss Lestor: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to review the sentencing guidelines on incest, particularly those referring to mitigating factors; and what training is given to the judiciary to encourage greater insight into the nature of sexual offences.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Sentencing guidelines are issued by the Lord Chief Justice in consultation with any other judges as he thinks fit and any review is entirely in his hands. The Judicial Studies Board distributes the guidelines to all judges, recorders and assistant recorders who sit in the Crown court, the most recent issue being in July 1992. One of those guidelines deals with "Incest and Indecent Assault". Lectures and discussions on the nature of sexual offences are included in training courses for judges who sit in the criminal and the civil and family jurisdictions. Medical consultants, child psychiatrists and other professionals lead these training sessions.

TRANSPORT

Departmental Contracts

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each of the last five years the duration, value and nature of contracts awarded by his Department to Arthur Andersen, Kleinwort Benson, Denton, Hall, Begrie and Warren.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: In the last five years the contracts awarded are as follows:—

Arthur Andersen
No awards

Kleinworth Benson
One award, for the period September 1990 to April 1991
Contract related to Advice to DOT (Ports Division) for privatisation of Trust Ports
Value £30,000.

Denton, Hall, Burgin and Warren
No awards

A1-M1 Link

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the timetable for the completion of the A1-M1 link; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The public inquiry into the draft orders for the M1-A1 link between the M1 south of Leeds and the A1 north-east of Garforth closed on 25 February and the indpendent inspector is now writing his report. Future progress depends on when the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Transport receive the report and are able to issue their decision. In view of this, and the statutory framework within which these actions take place, it would be inappropriate for me now to anticipate a timetable for the completion of this scheme.

Road Maintenance

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what comparisons he has made between road maintenance expenditure in the United Kingdom and in other European countries.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Very little comparative information is readily available. I am at present considering the case for a study to obtain more.

Third Harbour Crossing, Lowestoft

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given to Waveney district council's submission for a third harbour crossing at Lowestoft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We expect to announce a preferred route for the Pakefield to Kessingland section of the proposed A12 Lowestoft relief road later this year. Progress beyond that stage on the Lowestoft relief road, which includes a further harbour crossing, will depend on the availability of resources.

In the meantime the Department has accepted in principle that a 100 per cent. grant should be made to Suffolk county council for its eastern relief road scheme to relieve congestion in the urban area of Lowestoft. This scheme should be carried out in the current financial year.

Jubilee Line

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to be able to give final approval for work to commence on the Jubilee line tube extension into Docklands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Once the administrators and the parties involved in the financing of Canary Wharf have concluded with LT a satisfactory funding agreement covering the basis of their contribution to the Jubilee line extension, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport will be able to authorise the start of construction.

A43 (Roundabouts)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will bring forward proposals for the provision of roundabouts on the A43 at Stanyon and Corby; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Investigations into these junction arrangements are in hand.

Motor Cyclists

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the safety implications for motor cyclists of current motorway central reservation barrier designs.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The current safety fences and safety barriers have been designed and tested to contain and safely redirect an errent 1·5 tonne vehicle—that is, a medium to large car—travelling at 113 km/h and impacting at an angle of up to 20 deg. They have been successfully deployed in the central reserves and verges of motorways and other roads.

No specific impact testing has been carried out with motor cycles, but over the past 25 years there has been no evidence to suggest that the steel safety fencing or concrete safety barrier is particularly hazardous to this class of vehicle and road user.

Clearly, there are inherent dangers should a motor cyclist hit a safety fence and its support posts, but accident records show that it is not very common for motor cyclists to collide with motorway central reserve safety fencing.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how he expects Worcester rail services, other than those provided by InterCity, to be grouped for the purpose of inviting franchise bids; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he expects to invite bids for the franchise to operate services, other than those provided by InterCity, between London and Worcester; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Following the announcement of the first franchises on 2 February, we hope to make a further announcement later this year about how and when the rest of the network will be prepared for franchising.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when formal applications to bid for the franchise to operate Great Western main line InterCity services will be sought; and when he expects to award the franchise.

Mr. Freeman: It is too early to say.

American Vehicles

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning regulations affecting the use of American automobiles in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Department has received many letters from owners of cars manufactured for use in America.

The scope of checks on lighting equipment in the MOT test was extended with effect from 1 January 1993, increasing the level of enforcement of certain existing requirements of the lighting regulations. These new checks have highlighted the fact that most American cars do not comply with the requirement, in existence since 1 September 1965 for all vehicles manufactured after that date, that indicators should be amber.

Severn Crossing

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 8 March, Official Report, column 407, what provision he will make for an on site resident engineer to inspect, monitor and certify the quality of constructional steel fabricated by Construzione Cimolai Armando at its factory in Pordenone for use as part of the second Severn crossing in line with the system of inspection, monitoring and certification for constructional steel for United Kingdom highway structure fabricated within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 27 April 1993]: The second Severn crossing is being financed and constructed under the terms of a concession agreement between the Government and a concession company, Severn River Crossing plc.

To ensure that SRC and its contractor, the Laing-GTM joint venture, satisfy their responsibilities under the concession agreement, an independent firm of consulting engineers has been appointed as the Government's agent. The agent is responsible for the monitoring of design and construction of the works to see that they comply fully with laid down British or equivalent standards and specifications. SRC's quality assurance system will be audited and monitored.

In carrying out these duties, the Government agent has access to all locations where materials are being manufactured for the works, for the purposes of general inspection and of amending any test or investigations being carried out.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Bank Closures

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the closure of the Mount Banking Corporation Ltd.

Mr. Nelson: On 19 October 1992 the directors of Mount Bank petitioned for and obtained an administration order under the Insolvency Act 1986.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the closure of the Al Baraka bank.

Mr. Nelson: Albaraka International Bank Ltd. announced on 31 March that after extensive discussions with the Bank of England about possible changes in its ownership structure, it had decided to discontinue providing deposit facilities within the United Kingdom and to repay all depositors starting on 1 April 1993. The announcement said that the intended surrender of the bank's authorisation had arisen as a result of the new Basle supervisory requirements and not as a result of financial deficiency or its existence as an Islamic bank.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the banks that have had their licences revoked by the Bank of England since 9 April; and if he will give the reasons for each of the closures.

Mr. Nelson: Under section 17(2) of the Banking Act 1987 the Bank of England makes available monthly a list of the institutions authorised under part I of that Act. The bank's lists conventionally record separately those institutions which have ceased to be authorised during the intervening period. There are, however, a number of ways in which an institution may cease to be authorised and information concerning the reasons for the cessation of any particular authorisation is covered by the restrictions on disclosure in part V of the Act.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the closure of the Roxburghe Bank.

Mr. Nelson: On 8 April 1993 the directors of Roxburghe bank petitioned for and obtained an administration order under the Insolvency Act 1986.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions (a) he and (b) his officials have had with the Bank of England about the closure of (i) the Mount Banking Corporation Ltd; (ii) the Roxburghe bank and (iii) the Al Baraka bank.

Mr. Nelson: Meetings are held from time to time between the Governor and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and between Bank and Treasury officials, at which banking supervision issues are discussed. It is not the practice to make public whether or not a particular institution is mentioned at these meetings.

Incomes

Mr. Corston: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average value in 1979 and 1990, at 1990 prices, of (a) NHS benefits in kind, (b) other benefits in kind and (c) all benefits in kind, received only by households with children by quintile groups of households, ranked within all households ranked by equivalised disposable income.

Mr. Nelson: The figures are available only at current prices. They are as follows:

NHS benefit and other benefits in kind for household with children by quintile groups of all households ranked by equivalised disposable income

	Bottom	2nd	3rd	4th	Top	All
1979
NHS	430	449	451	410	434	436

Note: These estimates are based on data collected in the Family Expenditure Survey (FES). They are not strictly comparable over time as the FES changes from year to year.

Ms Corston: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average equivalised disposable income, and the average disposable income per equivalent adult, by (a) quintile and (b) decile groups of households, at 1990 prices, for 1979 and 1990.

Mr. Nelson: The information is not available in the precise form requested because the equivalence scale used is based on households rather than adults. In addition, the figures are available only at current prices. The figures are given in the table:

Equivalised disposable income by quintile groups of all households ranked by equivalised disposable income

Using the McClements equivalence scale with a household of a married couple = 1

	Bottom	2nd	3rd	4th	Top	All
1979	1,934	2,749	3,656	4,783	7,354	4,095

These figures are not strictly comparable over time because of changes in classification of both income and taxation and because of changes in the Family Expenditure Survey.

North Sea Drilling

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to the number of drilling projects in the North sea which have been cancelled since his Budget statement.

Mr. Dorrell: We do not have access to any unpublished information on this matter.

Government Contracts

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he has taken to monitor the compliance of contractors on Government contracts with clauses requiring payments of subcontractors within 30 days; and how he will report the results of this monitoring to Parliament.

Mr. Portillo: Where a prime contractor for a Government Department fails to comply with the provision for making prompt payment in his sub-contract, the sub-contractor will have a remedy through the courts in the normal way. Where there is evidence of poor performance by a prime contractor, which may include the late payment of bills to a sub-contractor, that will be taken into account by the Department in awarding subsequent contracts.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he has taken to ensure that all Government contracts contain a clause requiring payment of sub-contractors within 30 days.

Mr. Portillo: Guidance containing a model clause for inclusion in Government contracts was issued to Departments on 14 April 1992. Government Departments have confirmed that they have introduced clauses in all their contracts, where special circumstances do not apply, which require the supplier or contractor to pay its suppliers or sub-contractors promptly, normally within 30 days.

Commercial Revaluations

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects the next revaluation of commercial premises to be completed; and on what date the rental values will be based.

Mr. Nelson: The next revaluation of commercial premises will be completed to enable new rating lists to be compiled on 1 April 1995. Rental values will be based on a valuation date of 1 April 1993.

Premium Bonds

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current premium bond prize-fund rate; and how many readjustments in the prize-fund rate have been made since 1963.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 27 April 1993]: The current prize fund rate is 5 per cent. per annum. The rate when the scheme began in 1956 was 4 per cent. There have been 12 changes since then.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what have been the total net receipts to the Treasury arising from the sale of premium bonds since their introduction; and how much is currently held in unclaimed prize money.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 27 April 1993]: The balance outstanding at the end of March 1993 was £2·659 billion. The value of unclaimed prizes is £10·8 million.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Testing

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on the release of information on his Department's study of alternative technologies for testing nuclear warheads.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Motherwell, North (Dr. Reid) on 2 November 1992, Official Report, column 53. Release of information on alternative technologies must have regard to the requirements of national security, and our non-proliferation obligations and concerns.

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of his Department's personnel are currently involved in studying alternative technologies for testing nuclear warheads.

Mr. Aitken: It has not been the policy of this or previous Governments to reveal details of the staffing levels required for nuclear warhead research programmes.

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 23 October 1992, to the hon. Member for Motherwell, North (Dr. Reid), Official Report, column 403, how much expenditure was incurred in 1992-93 on studying alternative technologies for testing nuclear warheads.

Mr. Aitken: It has not been the policy of this or previous Governments to reveal costs associated with the nuclear warhead research programmes.

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations he has had with (a) his United States and (b) his French counterparts relating to the development of alternative technologies for testing nuclear warheads; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has recently had meetings with both Secretary Aspin and Mr. Léotard, at which a range of subjects of mutual interest was discussed. We are in close touch with the United States and French authorities on nuclear testing and associated issues.

Search and Rescue

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to utilise the facilities used by the search and rescue service at RAF Leuchars when the service at the base is closed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Search and rescue flying from RAF Leuchars ceased on 1 April. The Aberdeen, Dundee and St. Andrews University Air Squadron will use the facilities vacated by the SAR flight.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimates he has of the cost reductions or increases that will be made with the reorganisation of the RAF search and rescue service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The changes in the deployment of the RAF search and rescue force will reduce operating costs by approximately £6·5 million per annum at today's prices.

University Air Squadron

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all the locations where students of the University air squadron are entitled to have training and flying lessons free of charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Training and flying lessons take place at the following locations: RAF Leuchars; RAF Cosford; Colerne; Cambridge; RAF Turnhouse; RAF Newton; Glasgow International; RAF Woodvale; RAF Leeming; RAF Benson; Belfast City; RAF Boscombe Down; RAF St. Athan; RAF Finningley and the Royal Military College, Shrivenham. My Department does not raise charges against members of the University air squadron, but individual universities may do.

Outdoor Pursuits

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel have been seconded to organisations concerned with outdoor pursuits and adventure travelling, including Operation Raleigh, in each of the last five years; and if he will list the organisations concerned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None has been seconded. A number of personnel from the three services have, however, participated in expeditions organised by Operation Raleigh, now Raleigh International, and the British Schools Exploring Society. Their participation was authorised as adventurous training and they were regarded as being on duty. According to our records, the number of service personnel involved was as follows:

Year	Number of service personel Raleigh International	British Schools Exploring Society
1992-93	68	18
1991-92	77	8
1990-91	35	11
1989-90	68	7
1988-89	62	11
Total	310	55

Land Sales

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give (a) the amount of land sold by his Ministry and (b) the amount raised from the sale, in each of the last five years in each region of the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

British Aerospace

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 2 April, Official Report, column 508, which organisation paid the salaries of the RAF personnel seconded to British Aerospace; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: British Aerospace.

Humanitarian Flights

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many flights have been made since January 1992 by aircraft of the Royal Air Force in pursuance of humanitarian purposes; and how many aircrew have been involved in this activity.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Since 1 January 1992, the RAF has flown over 770 sorties to provide humanitarian aid in Bosnia, Somalia, the Bahamas and Guatemala. In addition, four sorties were flown to evacuate British and other nationals from Angola and Palestinian deportees from Israel; and 10 sorties were mounted to assist with fire fighting in the Lebanon. Also, the RAF has so far mounted over 3,000 sorties in support of the air exclusion zones in northern and southern Iraq and over 500 sorties in support of the various military operations in the former Republic of Yugoslavia. These operations have involved a significant number of aircrew, but precise details are not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Abbey Wood, Bristol

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated cost of the new office development planned at Abbey Wood in north Bristol.

Mr. Aitken: The estimated major works cost of the new procurement executive headquarters at Abbey Wood, North Bristol, inclusive of site acquisition, construction, fitting out, professional works management and VAT is £255·4 million at 1993-94 prices.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crimes (Racial Motivations)

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Attorney-General what monitoring is undertaken of the number of cases where racial motivations have been raised by the Crown prosecution service during court proceedings.

The Attorney-General: The Crown prosecution service is monitoring both the number of cases identified by the police as containing an element or allegation of racial motivation and the decisions taken by Crown prosecutors resulting from their review of those cases.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Producer Groups

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what sources of funding the Government have made available to develop the marketing potential of producer groups; what is the forecast value of expenditure on producer marketing grants by 1992 and for each of the next three years; and by what means producer groups qualify for funding.

Mr. Gummer: The current scheme for developing the marketing potential of producer groups is the group marketing grant introduced in April 1992. Expenditure is continuing under the closed agricultural and horticultural co-operation scheme and EC regulation 1035/72 aid to producer groups.

Awards under the group marketing grant worth £552,000 were made during the first financial year, 1992-93, of the scheme. Expenditure in 1992-93 and provision for the following three years are as follows:

£'000

Financial year		Group marketing grant	Expenditure under closed schemes
1992-93 expenditure		21	1,232
1993-94	provision	1,720	859
1994-95		2,938	280
1995-96		3,544	179

The conditions attached to the group marketing grant are set out in the brochure, copies of which are in the Library.

Agri-Environment Regulation

Mr. Moss: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, what are his plans for implementing the EC Agri-Environment Regulation (2078/92); and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, Official Report, 26 March 1993, columns 729-30]: I am today issuing for public consultation proposals for the introduction of up to 30 new nitrate sensitive areas forming the seventh and final element of my proposals for implementing the EC Agri-Environment Regulation in England.

The new scheme will build upon and extend the NSA approach introduced by the pilot nitrate scheme in 1990. It will encourage changes in farming practices which are designed to reduce nitrate leaching losses. The scheme will be targeted on areas around boreholes where such changes will help protect groundwater sources affected by rising nitrate levels.

The areas have been selected on the basis of advice from the National Rivers Authority taking a wide range of criteria into account. My officials will be consulting locally later this year on the boundaries of each of the proposed new NSAs.

Detailed arrangements for the new scheme will be finalised after the results of the consultation have been analysed. It is envisaged, however, that it will open for applications in the first half of 1994.

I am making copies of the consultation document available in the Library of the House.

EC Animals Directive

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which EC member states have taken the necessary legal steps to implement the EC directive on the protection of animals during transport (91/628/EEC).

Mr. Gummer: Monitoring the implementation of EC directives by the member states is carried out by the Commission. It has not yet indicated what action has been taken on directive 91/628.

Agriculture Council

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Agriculture Council held in Luxemburg on 26 and 27 April.

Mr. Gummer: The meeting of the Agriculture Council of 26 and 27 April, at which I represented the United Kingdom, again considered the Commission's proposals for farm prices and related measures for 1993-94 but reached no conclusion and will resume its discussions at its May meeting. I stressed the overriding need for the Council's decisions to keep within the tight constraints on Community expenditure.

During the discussion I urged the Commission to come forward as soon as possible with a proposal for non-rotational set-aside of arable land and it undertook to do so in time for the Council's next meeting.

The Council formally adopted a decision, agreed in principle at its March meeting, to end the milk co-responsibility levy from 1 April 1993.

Rights of Way

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice his Ministry gives to farmers and landowners about the maintenance of rights of way over land which is subject to the different types of set-aside payments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The fact that land has been set aside does not affect the farmer's responsibilities as regards rights of way over that land. These are explained in the general guidance on the Rights of Way Act 1990, which has been sent to all farmers.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Foundation for Sport and the Arts

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was the total amount of financial support given to angling (a) by his Department and (b) by the Foundation for Sport and the Arts in 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 26 April 1993]: Most of my Department's funding for sport is made through the Sports Council. In 1991-92 it paid grant of £71,749 to angling's governing bodies, including £20,660 to the National Angling Council, which was disbanded at the end of that year. In 1992-93 grant paid by the Sports Council to angling's remaining governing bodies was £46,800.

The Foundation for Sport and the Arts is independent of Government and its grants are made at the absolute discretion of the trustees. I understand that the trustees do not consider angling to be eligible for support on the ground that it is not an athletic sport.

WALES

Leyland-DAF

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will permit those organisations and agencies answerable to him to draw up plans to assist small companies owed money by Leyland-DAF; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: A wide range of services exists in Wales to assist all companies to enhance their business. The WDA and other agencies stand ready to offer whatever help is possible if approached by any of the companies affected by the Leyland-DAF situation.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the unemployment figures, in each county, at April in each year since 1989.

Mr. David Hunt: All available unemployment figures can be accessed on line by House of Commons Library staff.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the number of jobs lost (a) in manufacturing, (b) in mining, (c) in private services and (d) in the public sector in the areas covered by the valleys initiative during the last five years.

Mr. David Hunt: While comprehensive information on total jobs lost is not available, the numbers of employees employed in the valleys initiative area are given in the following table:

	SIC (1980)[1]	1987	1991	Thousands Change
Manufacturing	Div 2-4	62·3	57·4	−4·9
Mining	AH 1113 & 1114	11·6	3·4	−8·2
All services[2]	Div 6-9	92·0	101·9	+9·8

Source: Censuses of Employment.
[1] Standard Industrial Classification (Revised) 1980.
[2] Information is not available separately for private and public sector employment.

Job Creation

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his oral statement of 1 April, Official Report, column 513, whether he will list the companies and projects which have created the 24,000 jobs in the areas covered by the valleys initiative during the last five years.

Mr. David Hunt: I will write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy in the Library of the House.

Urban Programmes

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what amounts were received by the local authorities within the area covered by the valleys initiative through urban development programmes, and an urban investment grant in 1992-93; and what will be those amounts for each of the next five years.

Mr. David Hunt: In 1992-93 nearly £20·6 million was approved from the urban programme. This includes supplementary approvals made throughout the year. In 1993-94 a total of £17 million has so far been approved for areas covered by the valleys programme. It is not possible to forecast the corresponding figures for the next four years.

In 1992-93 urban investment grant awards to the valleys totalled £1·5 million. The amounts in future years will depend on the take-up of the scheme, but provision for 1993-94 has been increased by 40 per cent. Urban investment grant is specifically aimed at supporting private sector development and is not available to local authorities.

Communication Skills

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements he has made for the Further Education Funding Council to provide funding for the teaching of communication skills to adults with severe learning difficulties.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Schedule 2 to the Further and Higher Education Act 1992 lists the courses of further education which the Further Education Funding Council for Wales is expected to secure. This includes courses to teach independent living and communication skills to persons having learning difficulties and which prepare them for entry to further courses of study within schedule 2.

In his letter of guidance to the chairman of the funding council, my right hon. Friend drew attention to the council's specific duty to have regard to the requirements of students with all types of disability. The council should aim to ensure, so far as is consistent with its duties under the Act, that learning difficulties are no bar to access to further education.

In allocating resources to further education providers, the council has drawn specific attention to the requirement to have regard to the interests of adults who have basic educational needs.

Valleys Initiative

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his statement on 1 April, Official Report, column 513, whether he will break down the £1,000 million announced for the valleys initiative into appropriate public expenditure categories for each of the next five years.

Mr. David Hunt: Total public expenditure under the programme for the valleys over the next five years will be well over £1 billion. I will publish shortly details of the breakdown of programme expenditure for 1993-94.

B. Dixon-Bate Ltd

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will visit the company headquarters of B. Dixon-Bate Ltd. in Clwyd.

Mr. David Hunt: I have no present plans to do so.

EC Funding

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 20 October 1992, Official Report, columns 283-84, what progress he has made in allocating the £2·8 million under the European regional development fund; how much of the expenditure has already been announced and for what purposes; and on what the residual amount will be spent.

Mr. David Hunt: I made it clear in my answer on 20 October 1992, Official Report, columns 283-84, that the £2·8 million to which the hon. Gentleman refers represents resources additional to the very substantial allocations already available from the European regional development fund under the industrial South Wales and RECHAR structural funds programmes. £1·61 million ERDF has already been committed to projects in the Betws and Taff Merthyr areas and the monitoring committees responsible for implementing these programmes will be asked to approve further projects to take up the whole of the available resources by the end of this year.

Ambulance Services

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales: what plans he has to introduce paramedics to rural and urban ambulance services in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The ambulance services in Wales are to provide at least one fully trained paramedic on each front-line ambulance no later than the end of 1996. This target applies equally to all the ambulance service classifications—that is, urban, rural and sparsely populated—across Wales. The provision of paramedics is currently ahead of schedule, and the Welsh Office will continue to financially support this training.

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average age of each ambulance fleet in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not available centrally.

Doctors' Working Hours

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on the number of junior hospital doctors in Welsh health authorities and trust hospitals working over the prescribed 83 hours per week maximum; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Health authorities and NHS trusts have confirmed that no junior doctor in Wales is contracted to work more than a maximum average of 83 hours per week with effect from 1 April 1993.

Cadw

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what targets he has set for Cadw, Welsh Historic Monuments executive agency for 1993-94.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Cadw has been set the following key targets for 1993-94:

(i) To complete 90 per cent. of the approved conservation maintenance programme.
(ii) To promote the preservation of historic buildings and ancient monuments by completing 20 resurvey lists and 90 scheduling actions, of which at least 60 per cent. involve additional protection.
(iii) To resolve 75 per cent. of statutory cases within the target periods (28 days for listed building consent cases, 90 days for scheduled monument consent cases and 120 days for ad hoc listings).
(iv) To resolve 80 per cent. of grant applications within the target periods (17 weeks for Historic Buildings Council cases, six weeks for Ancient Monuments cases and 10 weeks for Civic Initiatives (Heritage) Grant Scheme cases); and to pay 90 per cent. of properly presented claims within five weeks of receipt.
(v) To maintain Cadw's market share of the number of visitors to the top twenty heritage sites in Wales at 63 per cent.
(vi) To increase the average spend per visitor to 188 pence.
(vii) To operate within allocated programme and running cost budgets.
(viii) To achieve an efficiency saving of 2·0 per cent. on gross running costs.

Full details of Cadw's performance against its targets for 1992-93 will be published in the agency's annual report.

Mr Leigh: Gross expenditure on the loan guarantee scheme in the past two years has been:

	£ million

1992-93	22·4

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many loan guarantee schemes have been started within the last two years.

Mr. Leigh: The number of loans guaranteed under the loan guarantee scheme in the past two years has been:

Mr. Leigh: I have no plans to do so.

Textiles

Mr. Pike: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many applications he has received under the Retex programme; when he expects to make a decision on these applications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Sixty-seven applications have been received. The projects will be considered by the Retex programme monitoring committee after the United Kingdom programme is agreed with the Commission.

Insolvency Service

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the review of the funding and fee charging policy of the insolvency service has been completed.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Smith) on 16 February, Official Report, column 136.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many copies of the booklet, "The Prospects for Coal: Summary of the Coal Review White Paper", have been produced; how many have been sent to correspondents by post; and at what total cost.

Mr. Eggar: A total of 115,000 copies of the booklet have been produced and, so far, approximately 109,500 copies have been distributed. The total cost of production and distribution is approximately £40,000.

Insolvency Law

Sir Keith Speed: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to review insolvency law.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Officials in the insolvency service continue to monitor the operation of insolvency law, but I have no plans for a general review.

Company Failures

Sir Keith Speed: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish the letter sent by his Department to the Public Relations Consultants Association on 1 March about the collapse of Corporate Communications plc.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: No.

Sir Keith Speed: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to prevent individuals who have presided over the collapse of their companies, of which they have been directors, from setting up similar new businesses with similar customers having failed to honour the debts of their former companies.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The insolvency legislation already provides that directors whose conduct shows that they are unfit to manage companies may be disqualified from holding office. I have no plans to change the legislation in this regard.

Steel

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the volume of steel production in the first quarter of 1991, 1992 and 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The information is as follows:

1991 Q1 4·1 million tonnes
1992 Q1 4·2 million tonnes
1993 Q1 4·2 million tonnes (provisional)
Source: British Iron and Steel Producers' Association.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made as to the reliability of the volume of steel production as an indicator of economic vitality.

Mr. Sainsbury: The output of one industry cannot by itself be an adequate indicator of the state of the whole economy.

Internal Market Council

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the outcome of the EC Internal Market Council meeting held in Luxembourg on 5 April.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I attended the second Internal Market Council of the Danish Presidency in Luxembourg on 5 April. The Council had a relatively substantial agenda. We managed to make progress on, and defend, a number of significant United Kingdom interests.

The Council adopted directives covering explosives, doctors' diplomas and motorcyle brakes. We succeeded in postponing a decision on a proposal to establish a 100 bhp maximum power limit for motor cycles until at least the June Council. We do not consider that the limit is justified on safety grounds.

Common positions were reached on directives covering public supply contracts, unauthorised use and statutory markings of motor cycles, and cable and satellite broadcasting. This last measure together with discussion of a proposed directive on the harmonisation on the term of copyright protection, allowed us to reach agreement on a text on film authorship which protects United Kingdom interests, notably those of film producers.

I emphasised our opposition to important elements of the European company statutory proposal. We continue to oppose the proposed worker participation directive; the legal base of the measures; and certain important technical aspects of the regulation.

Unfortunately, most other member states wish to continue work on the proposals.

There was a wide-ranging televised open debate on the subject of the single market after 1992. The United Kingdom, in line with all other member states emphasised the importance of making the single market work effectively. No operational conclusions were drawn.

The Commission reported that the overall rate of implementation of white single market measures has now risen to 83 per cent. The United Kingdom is in third position, with an 88 per cent. implementation record.

Political agreement to extend the transitional period to mid-1995 for the entry into force of the personal protective equipment directive will assist industry by giving it more time to meets its requirements. Motorcycle helmets are now expected to be excluded from the scope of the directive, with the Commission due to provide specific separate proposals within the next six months. Political agreement on the CE conformity marking for industrial products is subject to parliamentary scrutiny reserves.

The next formal meeting of the Council will take place on Monday 14 June.

Ms Quin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the rate of small firm formation by standard planning region for each of the last three years.

EDUCATION

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many parents rang the grant-maintained schools' helpline during its pilot period: and whether it is to be established on a permanent basis.

Mr. Forth: The grant-maintained helpline received 2,650 calls during the six week pilot period, of which 2,040 were from parents. The Department is currently evaluating the performance of the helpline. Decisions on whether to establish the service permanently have not yet been made.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list by local education authority those schools which were subject to reorganisation proposals which he subsequently approved for grant-maintained status and the dates on which such approvals were given.

School Places

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many surplus school places were removed from the education system in each school year from 1984-85.

Mr. Forth: The number of surplus school places that have been removed since 1984-85 are as follows:

	'000s
1984-85	135
1985-86	128
1986-87	106
1987-88	109
1988-89	118
1989-90	93
1990-91	99
1991-92	n/a

In view of the new national survey of the capacity of schools carried out in 1991 separate figures have not been collected on the number of places removed from the education system in the school year 1991-92 onwards.

Special Learning Difficulties

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the local education authorities which have applied since the beginning of the year for lap-top computers for children with special learning difficulties; and what response was made to such applications.

Mr. Forth: I announced in January a major pilot study to assess the educational impact of using portable computers in schools. The following local education authorities (LEAs) have submitted project bids in respect of children with special learning difficulties:

LEAs	Manchester
Camden	Salford
Greenwich	Stockport
Hackney	Barnsley
Islington	Rotherham
Lambeth	Sheffield
Lewisham	Leeds
Barking	Avon
Barnet	Berkshire
Brent	Cleveland
Bromley	Derbyshire
Croydon	East Sussex
Haringey	Hertfordshire
Hounslow	Humberside
Kingston-upon-Thames	Lancashire
Merton	Leicestershire
Birmingham	Norfolk
Coventry	Somerset
Liverpool	Suffolk
Sefton	Surrey

All project bids are currently being assessed and evaluated; decisions will be announced shortly.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many children with special learning difficulties have been statemented during the past 12 months; what funding is made available for such children in state, voluntary sector and grant-maintained schools; and what steps he takes to ensure quality control and adequate provision for statemented children.

Mr. Forth: Information on the number of children for whom statements of special educational needs were made for the first time in the last 12 months is not yet available. The latest collated information indicates that statements were made in respect of 30,699 children for the first time during the calendar year 1991.

Any additional funding for the provision specified in a pupil's statement is the responsibility of the local education authority which maintains the statement, irrespective of the type of school the pupil attends.

Quality control and ensuring that adequate provision is made for children with statements are similarly matters for local education authorities. Paragraph 5 of part III of schedule 1 to the Education Act 1981 requires authorities to review statements at least annually.

The Education Bill currently before Parliament makes similar provision—at clause 162—for statements to be reviewed at least annually and provides, for the first time, for the necessary regulations governing the manner in which those reviews are to be conducted. I anticipate that the new code of practice to be made under clause 149 of the Bill will offer guidance on the contents of statements and the manner of their review.

Music Teaching

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans she has to investigate the political impartiality of music teaching in Sheffield; and what actions are open to parents in this matter.

Mr. Forth: Certain conditions must be met before my right hon. Friend can take action on a complaint of a breach of the law relating to the school curriculum.

Section 44 of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986 requires local education authorities, head teachers and school governing bodies to forbid the promotion of partisan political views in the teaching of any subject. Section 45 of the Act requires them to do as much as they reasonably can to see that any presentation of political issues to pupils is balanced and takes account of opposing views.

Parents who wish to complain about any apparent breach of curriculum law can do so under the arrangements established by all local education authorities under section 23 of the Education Reform Act 1988 for dealing with curriculum complaints. Schools must make details of these arrangements available on request. The Secretary of State cannot consider a curriculum complaint until it has been disposed of locally by the governors, the local education authority, or both, as appropriate. He has received no complaint about music teaching in Sheffield.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Employment Tribunals

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many staff are employed by the offices of the industrial tribunals and the fair employment tribunals; and how many are (a) Protestants and (b) Roman Catholics.

Mr. Mates: The Office of Industrial Tribunals and the Fair Employment Tribunal is staffed by 26 civil servants.

Disclosure of information on the religious affiliation of Northern Ireland civil service staff is governed by a code of practice which stipulates that no statistical summaries will be produced which fall outside the categories of analyses agreed with staff representatives. The most recent analyses were published in the "Fourth Report of the Northern Ireland Civil Service Equal Opportunities Unit", a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Fish Pass, Toome

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects the new fish pass at Toome to be fully in operation.

Mr. Hanley: The new fish pass at Toome has been substantially complete since December. However, operation has been delayed pending the completion of some additional features requested by fisheries interests. Completion of these works is dependent on low downstream levels in the River Bann, but it is intended that the fish pass will be fully operational by early June.

Manufacturing Output

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the manufacturing output or productivity in Northern Ireland for each year since 1989.

Mr. Atkins: Northern Ireland indices of production and productivity for the years in question are as follows:

	1989	1990	1991	1992
Index of Production[1]	111	114	112	114
Index of Productivity[1]	112	114	116	123

[1] 1985 = 100

Students

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many full-time mature students within the meaning of the grants regulations were in attendance at the University of Ulster and Queen's university, Belfast, each year since 1988.

Mr. Hanley: The information is as follows:

Academic year	University of Ulster	Queens' University Belfast
1988-89	320	283
1989-90	332	315
1990-91	360	308
1991-92	391	371
1992-93	371	411

Figures were supplied by the universities and relate to full-time undergraduate students who had attained the age of 26 before entry to the university.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the latest level of unemployment in the Belfast travel-to-work area.

Mr. Atkins: At 11 March 1993, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 52,773 unemployed claimants in the Belfast travel-to-work area, representing 12·8 per cent. of the work force in this area.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people were unemployed in the Province (a) at the latest date for which figures are available; and (b) in May 1990; and what is (b) as a percentage of (a).

Mr. Atkins: At 11 March 1993 there were 106,016 unemployed claimants in Northern Ireland. The number of unemployed claimants in May 1990 was 96,064, which represents 90·6 per cent. of the March 1993 figure.

Criminal Damage and Injury

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much was paid in compensation for criminal damage and injury to (a) property and (b) individuals in each year since 1990-91.

Mr. Mates: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Compensation Agency under its chief executive, Mr. J. Robinson. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from J. Robinson to Mr. Peter Robinson, dated 27 April 1993:

I refer to your recent Parliamentary Question concerning the amount of criminal injury and damage compensation paid since 1990-91. The Secretary of State has asked me to respond.

The table below details the amounts of compensation paid including costs and fees.

	Criminal injury	Criminal damage
	£m	£m
1990-91	19·5	22·7
1991-92	25·0	33·1
1992-93 (forecast)	26·6	75·9

The figures for 1992-93 cannot be confirmed until the Appropriation Account is finalised.

School Leavers

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the forecast number of school leavers in the Province after the 1993 summer term.

Mr. Hanley: It is anticipated that there will be approximately 23,000 school leavers in 1993.

Public Service Employment

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of the working population in Northern Ireland is employed directly by the Government or in organisations and industries owned wholly or in part by the state; and if he will give the figures for 1990.

Mr. Atkins: At June 1992, the latest date for which figures are available, the public sector in Northern Ireland accounted for 32·7 per cent. of civil employment. The corresponding figure for June 1990 was 33·2 per cent.

Cardiac Patients

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) when patients will need to wait less than 12 months for their first appointment with a cardiac surgeon;

(2) what plans he has to reduce the length of time patients wait for their first appointment with a cardiac surgeon.

Mr. Hanley: The majority of patients wait between three and 12 months for their first appointment with a cardiac surgeon. It is the Department's aim, in keeping with the patients charter, to ensure as soon as possible that all patients are seen within three months of the date of their referral to a surgeon.

In his recent report on cardiac surgery services, the Chief Medical Officer of the Department of Health and Social Services pointed to the inadequacy of the present arrangements for the management of the cardiac surgery outpatient waiting list at the Royal Group of Hospitals Trust. As a result the Department has asked the trust to review the handling of out-patients.

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the effect on patients' rights under the patients charter of refusal to go outside Northern Ireland for treatment.

Mr. Hanley: In the speciality of cardiac surgery a number of patients have declined the offer of treatment outside Northern Ireland. It may not be possible in these cases to offer treatment in the Province within the guarantee period set down in the patients charter. However, these patients will not lose their place on the cardiac surgery waiting list. Those requiring urgent treatment will continue to receive it as quickly as possible.

It is not expected that this situation will arise for any other treatments.

Health Care Centres

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what are the quality ratings of each health care centre under the criteria used for the assessment of the quality of clinical care;

(2) what assessment he has made of the quality of care available in (a) the Royal Victoria hospital and (b) other health care;

(3) which health care centres will not be used again following assessment by his Department.

Mr. Hanley: I assume that the hon. Gentleman is inquiring about medical audit. As I stated in the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Belfast, South (Rev. Martin Smyth) on 19 April, Official Report, column 19, reports on medical audit are prepared on an annual basis by a regional audit advisory committee and area audit advisory committees in each board. These are then presented to my noble Friend Lord Arran. They are not published, nor are there any plans to do so. The reports are, however, available to boards, trusts and other provider units; specialties within units; and to GPs where they are subject to medical audit.

It is not intended that the findings of medical audit should be used in making a case for the closure of a health care facility. The purpose of medical audit is to ensure that the services being provided meet the agreed standards for those services and that any shortcomings identified are corrected as soon as possible.

Independent Commission for Police Complaints

Sir James Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he will lay before Parliament the annual report of the Independent Commission for Police Complaints for Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The report, which is the fifth annual report to be produced by the commission since its establishment in 1988, has been laid before Parliament today. It provides a detailed account of the commission's oversight of police conduct, including the supervision of complaints against the police and the commission's role in disciplinary proceedings once a complaint has been investigated.

It is essential that the community has confidence in the integrity of the police and the commission has a vital role in ensuring that complaints are fairly and properly investigated and that appropriate action is taken. Throughout the report, by providing detailed explanations of its work in investigating actual complaints, the commission demonstrates the high standards and dedication which it applies to its task.

I am grateful to the commission for all its work. I have no doubt that it will continue to contribute significantly to the enhancement of public confidence in the RUC. In this it has my full support.

SCOTLAND

Family Mediation Service

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has received the final report on a national family mediation service from the Planning, Industrial and Economic Development Advisers, and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has received the final report on the feasibility of a national family mediation service from PIEDA plc. He is considering the report's recommendations.

Agriculture

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will extend the completion date for integrated administration and control systems forms.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 22 April 1993]: Council regulation (EEC) 3508/92 which establishes the integrated administration and control system throughout the EC, requires that the main IACS area aid application form be submitted in 1993 not later than 15 May. Ministers have no discretion to alter this clear legal requirement.

Paramedics

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 31 March, Official Report, columns 311-12, if he will (a) list the references which show that rapid response by skilled staff to a seriously ill patient enhances recovery and survival, (b) say when he expects to be able to publish the outcome of patients managed by Scottish ambulance paramedics, (c) compare outcomes of patients managed before and after the introduction of paramedics and (d) give the name of Scottish ambulance service's consultant medical director.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 26 April 1993]: The information requires detailed and lengthy explanations and my noble Friend the Minister of State is writing today to the hon. Member on this. A copy of the letter will be placed in the Library.

ENVIRONMENT

Right to Buy

16. Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the number of houses sold under the right-to-buy scheme.

Sir George Young: Since its introduction in 1980, almost 1·5 million tenants in Great Britain have bought their homes under the right to buy. This amply demonstrates the popularity and success of the policy.

Dioxins (Derbyshire)

17. Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what investigations were undertaken by his Department into dioxin levels and their potential sources in Staveley, Derbyshire between the samples taken from near Hall lane, Staveley, early in 1992 and samples taken from several areas on 23 February 1993; and if he will make a statement.

The statement also promised legislation to restate national park purposes and to establish independent authorities for the eight national parks currently run as county council committees. We fully recognise the importance of this legislation and I have made it clear that it will be introduced at the earliest opportunity.

25. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to amend the formula for the calculation of standard spending assessments.

Mr. Robin Squire: We are currently reviewing standard spending assessments in consultation with local authority representatives to incorporate detailed information from the 1991 census into the SSA formulae.

We are taking this opportunity to reconsider more widely the current range of social factors used within SSAs and the weight placed upon them, the basis of the area cost adjustment, measures of population density and sparsity and the inclusion of day visitors. We are also prepared to consider representations about other aspects of SSAs.

River Pollution

26. Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he has taken to reduce the release of red list substances into rivers.

Mr. Howard: The National Rivers Authority and Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution are required, under the Water Resources Act 1991 and the Environmental Protection Act 1990 respectively, to regulate such discharges to rivers, which are subject to appropriate environmental quality standards.

Mr. Baldry: It is estimated that local authorities completed 2,900 new dwellings in England during 1992. They completed 72,500 new dwellings during the 12 months to May 1979.

Mr. Redwood: I have no plans to visit any shire county councils during May. I will be meeting representatives of the shire counties at the Consultative Council on Local Government Finance on two occasions later this year.

Energy Efficiency

33. Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to increase energy efficiency in the housing of people on low income.

Mr. Baldry: The home energy efficiency scheme provides grants to low-income households to undertake basic energy efficiency improvements and some £37·5 million is available for grants in 1993-94.

We also provide substantial assistance for those on low income through local authorities' mainstream council housing repair and improvement programmes, as well as through the estate action and green house programmes. Authorities in England spent over £200 million in 1991-92 on energy efficiency improvements under these programmes.

The Energy Saving Trust has recently been formed as a private sector company to propose, develop and manage new programmes to promote the efficient use of energy in the domestic and small business sector. The trust will be taking an interest in the problems of low-income households.

Prestwich Hospital Site

34. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received in relation to the planning inquiry at the Prestwich hospital site in Greater Manchester; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Between the close of the inquiry and the issue, on 5 April, of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's decision on this planning appeal, seven letters were received from local residents confirming their opposition to the proposed development. Two of these were forwarded by the hon. Member for Bury, South (Mr. Sumberg). No representations have been received since the issue of the decision.

Rented Accommodation

35. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations have been made over the supply of affordable rented accommodation.

Water Supply (Disconnections)

37. Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many homes have had their water supply disconnected in the current year, 1992 and 1991.

Mr. Howard: Water companies are obliged to report numbers of disconnections every six months to OFWAT's customer service committees. This information is collated and published by the Director General of Water Services in a press release twice a year. Figures for the six months to 31 March 1993 are not yet available, but in the six month period from 1 April to 30 September 1992 there were a total of 8,284 domestic disconnections. Domestic disconnections for the whole of 1991-92 and 1990-91 totalled 21,282 and 7,673 respectively.

River Wear (Pollution)

38. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the National Rivers Authority and British Coal regarding the potential pollution of the River Wear likely to be caused by the cessation of pumping after the closure of Easington and Vane Tempest collieries.

Mr. Howard: I have not discussed this specific matter with the National Rivers Authority or British Coal. It is for British Coal in consultation with the NRA to assess any environmental effects of pit closures and what measures might need to be taken to avoid pollution. I understand that arrangements have been made between British Coal and the NRA for effective liaison over any proposed closures.

Empty Dwellings

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of dwellings in his Department's estate are empty; and what proportion of local authority dwellings are empty and available for letting.

Mr. Baldry: At 1 April 1992 17,500 local authority properties which were empty as a result of management factors, 0·45 per cent. This compares to just seven empty properties, 7·4 per cent., as a result of management factors in my Department's estate at 1 April this year.

Council Tenants (Services)

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to improve the quality of service council tenants receive from their councils.

Mr. Baldry: The extension of compulsory competitive tendering to housing management will improve the quality of service for council tenants and value for money.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will list the 10 local authorities with the highest level of debt.

Mr. Redwood: The 10 local authorities with the highest external debt at the end of 1991-92 were:

Mr. Baldry: According to provisional outturn figures from the Housing Corporation, housing associations in England have purchased 78 properties from the Ministry of Defence and none from any other Government Department under the housing market package announced by the Chancellor in his autumn statement.

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many housing association units have been purchased by housing associations under the housing market package announced in November 1992 in each local authority in Northamptonshire.

Mr. Baldry: According to provisional outturn figures from the Housing Corporation, housing association purchases in each of the local authority areas in Northamptonshire were as shown in the table.

Local Authority Area	Number of units purchased
Corby	24
Daventry	45
East Northamptonshire	36
Kettering	78
Northampton	60
South Northamptonshire	17
Wellingborough	25

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to reply to the letter, sent to him by the hon. Member for Linlithgow, on Monday 12 April, concerning local Government reform.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. and learned Friend replied to the letter from the hon. Member today.

Fire Brigades

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what provision has been made in local authority standard spending assessments for 1993-94 in respect of fire brigades' pay; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Government expect the national joint council for local authorities' fire brigades to comply with Government policy on public sector pay in settling any pay increase for firefighters in 1993. The provision we have made within standard spending assessments for 1993-94 reflects this expectation.

Performance Targets

Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what performance targets have been set for the Ordnance Survey executive agency in the year 1993-94.

Mr. Baldry: The following performance targets have been set for Ordnance Survey in 1993-94:

1. Recover at least 71 per cent. of the total costs incurred by the Agency.
2. Survey and map at the basic scales 780,000 units of change.
3. Increase by 39,000 the number of basic scale maps available in digital form.
4. Complete the implementation of the network of Ordnance Survey Superplan agents by 1 September 1993.
5. Despatch within six working days (including the day the order is received) 90 per cent. of orders for small scale maps.
6. Operate a telephone helpline service for customers between 8.30 am and 5.00 pm on working days, within 10 second response time within these hours and a telephone answering service at all other times.

These are challenging targets which build upon the good performance of previous years and reflect Ordnance Survey's commitment to providing quality service to customers.

Footpath Closures

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many public footpaths in the United Kingdom were closed under section 257 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 in (a) 1991 and (b) 1992; how many proposals to extinguish a public footpath under section 257 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 in each year were referred to his Department for arbitration following protests from members of the public; and how many of these resulted in (i) the footpath being closed and (ii) the footpath remaining open.

Mr. Maclean: Details of the number of public path extinguishment orders made and confirmed under section 257 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 are set out in the table. The information relates only to England and Wales as the provisions of the 1990 Act do not apply to Scotland or Northern Ireland.

Sellafield

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the annual discharge of radioactivity from Sellafield since 1979 in terms of (a) solids, (b) aqueous and (c) airborne releases; and if he will make a statement on the cumulative total of radioactivity currently stored in site at Sellafield.

Mr. Maclean: Information on discharges of radioactivity from Sellafield can be found in BNFL's "Annual Reports on Radioactive Discharges and Monitoring of the Environment", copies of which are in the Library of the House.

The storage of radioactive waste on site is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment.

EC Waters Directives

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress is being made in implementing (a) the EC bathing waters directive, (b) the EC urban waste waters directive and (c) the EC shellfish waters directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: With respect to the bathing waters directive, I refer the honourable Member to the answer I gave the honourable Member for Dartford (Mr. Dunn) on 18 November 1992, Official Report, c 208. I recently announced the publication of draft implementing regulations and an accompanying guidance note for the EC urban waste water treatment directive. Copies of these, and of another consultation paper about the methodology for identifying sensitive areas under the directive, which was issued on 26 March, have been placed in the Library of the House. Twenty-nine waters have been designated under the shellfish waters directive in the United Kingdom. The National Rivers Authority monitors these waters in accordance with the directive's requirements.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans the Government have to contribute towards the costs of implementing (a) the EC bathing waters directive, (b) the EC urban waste waters directive and (c) the shellfish waters directive, in the South West Water services area.

Mr. Maclean: The cost of these obligations falls to the privatised water companies, using the funds available to them.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to seek EC permission to delay implementation of (a) the EC bathing waters directive, (b) the EC urban waste waters directive and (c) the EC shellfish waters directive.

Mr. Maclean: The time allowed for application to the European Commission for permission to delay implementation of the provisions of the bathing waters directive has expired. My Department will be drawing up an implementation programme for the urban waste water treatment directive, in accordance with its requirements, by the end of this year. There is no provision in the shellfish waters directive allowing member states to seek permission to delay implementation.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment the Government have made of the impact of the introduction of the uniform business rate on bankruptcy levels in the south-west.

Mr. Robin Squire: We have made no such assessment. Bankruptcy may be caused by a variety of factors.

The business rate transitional arrangements helped those businesses most seriously affected by the 1990 reforms. Many businesses in the south-west benefited from the arrangements. These have already been improved by some £1,250 million as a result of the Non-Domestic Rating Act 1992, with a proposed further £560 million of assistance in this year's Budget.

Biodiversity

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now arrange a meeting with his American counterpart to co-ordinate implementation of the priority elements of the biodiversity convention.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. and learned Friend discussed the biodiversity convention with Vice President Gore and the administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency on his visit to the United States last month.

We were very pleased to hear that the United States now intends to sign the convention and we will continue to work with them to resolve our various concerns about the interpretation of some of its provisions with a view to achieving the objective of establishing the basis for ratification of the convention by the end of this year.

Housing and Council Tax Benefit

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what regulations are laid down for local authorities in respect of capital for the calculation of housing/council tax benefit; and what is the rationale underlying the level of the implied return on capital.

Mr. Burt: I have been asked to reply.

Regulations provide that no account is taken of £3,000 or less and that there is no entitlement to housing/council tax benefit where capital exceeds £16,000.

Where capital exceeds £3,000 but is not more than £16,000 an income of £1 a week is assumed for each £250 or part of £250 above £3,000. The formula assumes no particular return on capital invested. It ensures that help is targeted on those who need it most, including those with modest amounts of capital.

Housing Management

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the management agreements to which he has, since 1 January 1992, given his consent under section 27 of the Housing Act 1985, which are not agreements with tenant management organisations, in each case giving the name of the local authority involved, the name of the estate or a description of the dwellings to which the agreement relates, the main management functions delegated and the identity of the managing agent.

Sir George Young [holding answer 27 April 1993]: Since 1 January 1992 I have given my consent to 15 management agreements made with organisations other than tenant management organisations under the provisions of section 27 of the Housing Act 1985, as amended by section 10 of the Housing and Planning Act 1986. FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Yugoslavia

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with other United Nations Security Council members about an appropriate response to Croat aggression against Muslim civilians in Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are concerned at reports, some confirmed by British troops in Bosnia, of atrocities committed against Muslim civilians, allegedly by Bosnian Croats. The United Nations Security Council discussed the problem of Croat-Muslim fighting in the wake of the recent outbreaks of hostilities between these parties and adopted a statement on 21 April calling on both sides to desist. The EC presidency delivered a protest to President Tudjman on 23 April, and the situation in central Bosnia was most recently discussed at the EC Foreign Ministers' meeting at Hindsgavl on 25 April.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Croatia about the attacks by HVO forces on Muslim civilians in and around Vitez, on 21 April.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We deplore the recent violence and support the efforts to halt it, notably by British forces and the EC monitoring mission on the ground, and Lord Owen in discussion with Croat and Muslim leaders. The EC presidency on behalf of the EC and member states delivered a strongly worded démarche to President Tudjman on 23 April about the renewed fighting between Croats and Muslims in central Bosnia, calling on the President to use his influence to bring about an end to the hostilities.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to ensure British forces in Bosnia and Croatia as part of the United Nations peacekeeping forces are given copies of the Blue Book handbook on peaceful settlement of disputes between states, provided by the United Nations Office of Legal Affairs last year.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A copy of this publication has been passed to the Ministry of Defence for onward transmission to the British forces serving with the United Nations protection force in former Yugoslavia.

Nuclear Accident, Siberia

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has sought from his Russian counterpart on the recent accident at the Tomsk-7 nuclear reprocessing plant in Siberia in regard to dispersal of radioactivity to the atmosphere; and what response he has received.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Since the incident at Tomsk-7 Her Majesty's embassy in Moscow has remained in close touch with the appropriate Russian authorities who have been providing information in a timely manner. The Russian authorities have confirmed that action is being taken to decontaminate areas affected by the incident.

Cambodia

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the United Nations concerning an increase in funding to UN operations in Cambodia to enable an effective peace settlement, the clearance of land mines and the implementation of infrastructure reforms.

Mr. Goodlad: The costs of the UN operation in Cambodia were estimated to be $1·69 billion. This should be sufficient to enable the UN transitional authority in Cambodia to continue to operate until its mandate expires three months after the elections due to be held from 23 to 27 May. The international community has also pledged some $880 million for the reconstruction and rehabilitation of Cambodia, much of which will be provided through UN agencies working in the country.

Sudan

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the principal concerns of the Government about human rights in Sudan.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have many concerns. These include reports of extra-judicial killings, arbitrary detentions and instances of torture, and the plight of displaced persons. We are also concerned at the lack of progress towards a genuinely accountable form of government acceptable to all sections of Sudan, and at interference with fundamental freedoms, such as freedom of religion and expression.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made by the Christian churches operating in Sudan to the British Government about the conditions under which they operate in Sudan.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have had written and oral representations from the Anglican Church and other churches active in Sudan, both Protestant and Catholic, expressing concern at official harassment of Christian communities throughout the country. We are naturally concerned. We will keep in touch with the churches about ways of maintaining pressure on the Sudanese Government.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment the Government have made about the safety of the Nuba people in Sudan; and if the Government will make special representations to the United Nations that an international team should be sent to the Nuba mountains to find out what has been happening to the Nuba people.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are deeply concerned by the accounts which have reached us over recent months of human rights abuses in the Nuba Hills. We trust that the Government of Sudan will give unhindered access to the special rapporteur of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights so that he can investigate these reports.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what pressure he is putting on the combatants in the Sudanese civil war to reach a peaceful settlement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have urged all parties to the civil war to resolve Sudan's problems through negotiation. We welcome the Nigerian Government's success in reconvening peace talks between delegations of the Government of Sudan and the Sudan Peoples' Liberation Army.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when it is expected that the special rapporteur to the United Nations Commission on Human Rights will start his work on Sudan.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The special rapporteur will start his work as soon as possible after his appointment has been confirmed by the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations. We shall work for this decision to be made as soon as possible. Preliminary work has already begun at the centre of human rights in Geneva.

United Nations Peacekeeping Department

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to make a one-off additional donation to the United Nations peacekeeping department.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no plans to make an additional cash donation to the United Nations department of peacekeeping operations. We are, however, providing 4 Army majors to the secretariat to assist with military aspects of planning and conducting peacekeeping operations, at no cost to the United Nations.

Iraq

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the United Nations and the Government of Iraq concerning the treatment and well-being of the marsh Arabs of southern Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We fully support United Nations Security Council resolution 688 which condemns the repression of the Iraqi civilian population throughout Iraq and demands an immediate end to this repression. We are concerned at Iraq's failure to comply with United Nations SCR 688 and take every opportunity to call on Iraq to do so. Most recently our permanent representative at the United Nations reminded the United Nations Security Council sanctions review meeting on 29 March that the "repression of the civilian population continues in many parts of Iraq, notably the south, where the draining of the marshes threatens an environmental as well as a human tragedy".

We have consistently called on Iraq to allow human rights monitors into the whole of the country, especially the south, to report on the situation there in accordance with the request of the United Nations special rapporteur on Iraq but to date Iraq has failed to comply with this request.

Kashmir

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his Department's assessment of the latest situation in Kashmir in respect of human rights.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The state of human rights in Kashmir gives grounds for concern. During his recent visit to India, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister raised with the Indian Prime Minister the situation in Kashmir. Mr. Narasimha Rao reiterated his commitment to respect for human rights. He confirmed that he would be introducing legislation soon to set up an independent human rights commission, which he was determined would be effective. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister encouraged him to allow independent international human rights organisations and others to visit Kashmir.

Korea

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action is being taken by the United Nations against the Democratic People's Republic of Korea in response to Korea's withdrawal from the nuclear non-proliferation treaty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 8 April, the President of the United Nations Security Council issued a statement on North Korea which expressed concern at the situation, reaffirmed the importance of the non-proliferation treaty and of parties adhering to it, and encouraged the International Atomic Energy Agency to continue consultations with North Korea. The Security Council remains seized of the matter and discussions continue on how to resolve the situation.

Turkey

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the extent of evidence of aerial bombing of Kurdish areas of Turkey and of the enforced evacuation of Kurdish villages, in Turkey.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Kurdish Workers' party's (PKK) nine-year terrorist campaign in south-east Turkey constitutes a serious threat to security in the region. During that period there have been 6,000 deaths. The Turkish authorities have made no secret of the aerial bombardment of suspected positions of PKK terrorists. We are aware of allegations, which the Turkish Government deny, of forced evacuation of villages in south-east Turkey. We frequently make clear to the Turkish Government the importance we attach to combating terrorism within a legal framework and with full respect for human rights.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Turkish authorities in relation to rights of the Kurdish ethnic minority and progress towards a political solution on the issue.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We regularly raise with the Turkish authorities the human rights situation throughout Turkey, including the south-east of the country.

We welcome the recently improved security situation in south-east Turkey and the reported indefinite extension of the Kurdish Workers' party (PKK) ceasefire. We also welcome Mr. Demirel's statement that the state of emergency in the south-east will not be extended beyond its expiry on 19 July provided the present calm situation continues, and the announcement of steps aimed at increasing both investment in that part of the country and recognition of the Kurdish cultural identity.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Fire Brigades

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the fire brigade pay formula agreement will be honoured in 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for North Warwickshire (Mr. O'Brien) on 22 April, at column 182.

Pet Animals Act 1951

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to amend the Pet Animals Act 1951.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There are no plans at present to amend the Pet Animals Act 1951, as amended in 1983.

Nuclear Materials

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what involvement officials of his Department will have in the sub-committee established by Interpol at its special meeting in Lyons in January to draw up common reporting and recording standards of sensitive nuclear materials apprehended by European police forces.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Home Office officials will not be involved.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations his Department had at the meeting of Interpol held in Lyons in January on European police co-operation in combating the illegal imports and exports of nuclear materials to European countries.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No Home Office officials attended the Interpol meeting on illegal trafficking of radioactive substances.

Crime, Greater Manchester

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many men have been convicted of offences which involved the use of a knife at courts covering the Greater Manchester area for each of the last three years.

Mr. Jack: Information available centrally, which is given in the table, relates only to the number of persons found guilty of possession of knives under section 1 of the Prevention of Crime Act 1953 and section 139, of the Criminal Justice Act 1988, for the years 1989 to 1991. It is not possible to distinguish centrally whether knives have been used for other offences, such as wounding. Information for 1992 is not yet available.

Court Documentation

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out in table form the name and purpose of each document or item of paperwork which has to be completed by (a) the arresting officer, (b) the custody officer and (c) any other police officer or police civilian staff in England and Wales as part of the process from arrest to court decision where the accused (i) pleads guilty at a magistrates court to taking and driving away, (ii) pleads guilty at a magistrates court to burglary and (iii) pleads not guilty and is tried at a Crown court for burglary.

Mr. Charles Wardle: It is not possible to set out a table of paperwork. The number of documents that are required will vary according to the procedures of the police force concerned and the precise circumstances of the offence and of the alleged offender.

Prison Service (Director General)

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when criteria for assessing the performance-related part of the salary of the director general of the prison service will be determined; and if they will be published.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: From 1 April, when the agency came into being, the performance of the director general will be assessed on the basis of both qualitative and quantitative measures. They will reflect the prison service's key targets, as set out in the agency's corporate and business plans, copies of which are in the Library. The details of the arrangements for assessing the performance of the director general will be settled shortly, but they are personal to him and I have no plans to publish them. His salary, including his performance bonus, will, however, be published in October 1994 in the agency's annual accounts, a copy of which will also be placed in the Library.

Asylum Seekers, Haslar Gaol

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers are currently on hunger strike at Haslar gaol; and what steps are being taken to end the strike and their detention.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are currently no detainees in Haslar prison who are refusing food. Persons detained at Haslar under powers contained in the Immigration Act 1971 are held pending resolution of their immigration status or pending removal. Every effort is made to resolve any obstacle to these objectives as soon as possible such as an application for asylum, an extant appeal or application for judicial review, or the need to obtain an appropriate travel document.

Appeals

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the number of cases and defendants for each year since 1971 where the original verdict of guilt was overturned on subsequent appeal.

Mr. Jack: Information on the number of appeals against conviction by result has been published annually in the Command Paper "Criminal Statistics England and Wales". Table 6.7 of the 1980 publication gives requested data back to 1972. Similarly table 6.6 of the 1990 volume gives requested data back to 1981. Copies of these publications are available in the Library.

1991 data will be published in the Home Office statistical bulletin "Criminal Appeals England and Wales, 1991"—table 1 refers—issue 13/93 on 29 April 1993. A copy of which will also be placed in the Library.

1992 data will not be available until the autumn of 1993.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are being taken by his Department to ensure that all police forces in England and Wales have a common system of recording and classifying crime statistics.

Mr. Jack: The police forces already have such a system, governed by detailed Home Office rules and instructions on classifying offences according to statute, counting offences and completing regular statistical returns. However, many of these rules have remained unchanged since 1980 and the large number of definitional and legislative changes that have occurred since then raises the risk of inconsistencies developing. My Department is currently looking at introducing revisions with the aim of eliminating such inconsistencies and thus improving the quality of the crime statistics. As part of this process, each force, as well as representatives of the Association of Chief Police Officers, have been consulted. I expect a set of proposals to be submitted for my consideration later this year.

Prison Services

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria are used for not disclosing information on the ground of commercial confidentiality for parliamentary questions asked about (a) the prison escort service in the east midlands and Humberside and (b) each contracted-out prison; and what plans he has to alter the criteria (i) for questions relating to these contracts and (ii) for questions relating to future contracts.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: For both the court escort service and prison management contracts, the non-disclosure of information on the ground of commercial confidentiality is intended to protect the purchasing authority's position in future tendering exercises by not making known to competitors the details of a winning bid, particularly staffing and fee details in the case of a service contract.

For the future, there will be full disclosure and reporting of a range of performance data on all prisons, whether directly or privately managed. There will also be disclosure of total staffing levels, occupancy and a breakdown of staffing into main categories. Other information will be provided so long as it does not affect security or the rights of individuals or is not commercially sensitive. This will be in response to specific requests if the information is available or can be obtained at reasonable cost and, if necessary, after discussion with the service provider.

Lawyers (Offences)

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of the number of (a) barristers and (b) solicitors convicted of (a) non-motoring criminal offences and (b) offences relating to the conduct of criminal proceedings in (i) 1971, (ii) 1981 and (iii) 1991.

Mr. Jack: The information is not available in the form requested.

Side-handled Batons

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will arrange for a sample of police forces, including the west Yorkshire police, to conduct trials in the use of side-handled batons by trained police officers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There are no plans to conduct such trials.

Bogus Marriages

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have been initiated by the Crown prosecution service during 1992 of persons suspected of being involved in bogus marriages.

The Attorney-General: I have been asked to reply.

The Crown prosecution service does not maintain records of its cases by reference to categories or type of offence.

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, if he will give, in table form, for each magistrates court in England and Wales in 1981 and 1991, the number of defendants (a) who appeared before the court, (b) were found guilty, (c) were involved in proceedings which were discontinued, (d) were discharged under section 6 of the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980, (e) were in cases where the charges were withdrawn, (f) were in cases where the charge was dismissed under section 9 of the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 and (g) were found guilty, as a percentage of those who appeared before the court.

Mr. Jack: Information on persons proceeded against at magistrates courts for indictable offences by petty session division and result has been published annually since the 1986 issue in the volumes of supplementary tables to "Criminal statistics, England and Wales"—table 5.6 of volume 5 for 1986 to 1990 and table 4.6 of volume 4 for 1991.

The provision of information for earlier years or for summary offences would involve disproportionate cost.

Refugees

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria are applied to refugees with exceptional leave to remain in the United Kingdom when assessing whether or not they should be granted United Kingdom travel documents; and what changes have been made to these in the last 12 months.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 23 April 1993]: Asylum applicants who are found not to be refugees but who are granted exceptional leave to remain may apply for a Home Office travel document if they are unable to obtain a national passport. All such applications are considered on their individual merits, taking account of factors including the practicability of obtaining a national passport and any reasons the applicant may have for being unwilling to approach his or her national authorities. This policy has not changed during the last 12 months.

HEALTH

Electromagnetic Fields

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will take steps to inform local authorities and other public bodies of the further studies into the physical interaction of electromagnetic fields and the human head being funded by the Government and to advise them that they should take this into account before allowing further siting of telecommunications equipment on high rise flats and schools.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Technology gave to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 23 April at columns 256-57. The study referred to in that reply will relate only to the interaction of the fields generated by hand-held mobile telephones with the human head and will have no direct bearing on the question of the siting of base station transmitters on high rise flats or schools.

Advice on the health aspects of base station transmitters was given in the National Radiological Protection Board publication GS11 "Guidance as to restrictions on exposures to time varying electromagnetic fields", a copy of which is in the Library.

Orthopaedics Units

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has had about the closure of small specialised hospitals for orthopaedics.

Mr. Sackville: Information collected centrally does not enable classification of individual hospitals according to predominant specialty. We have, however, received a number of representations about the provision of orthopaedic services.

MRI Scanners

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate she has made of the national requirement for MRI scanners; when she expects this requirement will be met; and when she anticipates an MRI scanner will be provided for the Midland centre for neurosurgery and neurology.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have made no detailed assessment of the national requirement for magnetic resonance imaging—MRI—scanners. We are continuing with a three year programme of capital allocation for medical equipment including whole body scanners. Six MRI scanners were purchased for England in 1992-93 out of these central funds. A further sum of £15 million has been allocated for this financial year for the purchase of medical equipment. It is for provider units, including the Midland centre for neurosurgery and neurology to decide whether they will provide magnetic resonance imaging.

Psychiatric Services

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes there have been since 1986 in the collection of information on admissions of psychiatric patients into hospital (a) as voluntary patients and (b) detained under the various sections of the Mental Health Acts; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: From April 1987, following the Korner review of health service information, statistics on detained patients admitted to national health service facilities and NHS patients using non-NHS facilities under contractual arrangements have been collected on the aggregate return KH15. This return collects information on admissions by legal status—that is, whether informal or detained under one of the sections of the Mental Health Act—and by mental category, and covers the financial year. Prior to this, statistics on formal admissions, by legal status and diagnostic group, to NHS mental illness and mental handicap hospitals and units were collected by the mental health enquiry—MHE—from all psychiatric hospitals, and were for the calendar year. Similarly, the form KO37 covers admissions to private nursing homes authorised to detain patients, and replaced form SBL631, except that KO37 excludes patients treated under contractual arrangements with the NHS which were included on SBL631. Statistics on changes in legal status after admission were collected for the first time in 1987-88 on form KH16.

Information on legal status is included in the psychiatric census part of the hospital episodes statistics system. The census includes details on patients formally detained under the Mental Health Acts and on those patients in hospital under the mental illness specialty for a year or more. The information collected here includes diagnosis, but the data so far have been deficient and unreliable.

Dentistry

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies her Department has conducted into the geographical spread of dentist practices which offer new adult patients NHS services.

Dr. Mawhinney: National health service dental services are available throughout the country to those who require them. If any patients experience difficulty, they should approach their family health services authority who will be able to help.

British Nuclear Fuels plc

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the medical facilities and services, including laboratories, in respect of which British Nuclear Fuels plc has acted as agents or provided services for the Northern Health region or any district health authority in each year since 1980.

Mr. Sackville: The information is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Peter Carr, the chairman of Northern regional health authority, for details.

Infertility Treatment

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the details of the funding arrangements for women given treatment for infertility under the NHS.

Mr. Sackville: Health authorities are funded for the purchase of a full range of services for their resident populations rather than for specific treatments or procedures. Decisions about the resources and priority given to any particular service are the responsibility of individual health authorities.

Bogus Marriages

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many suspected bogus marriages have been drawn to the attention of the Registrar-General during the past year; and if she will publish in tabular form the number of such marriages reported by each superintendent registrar in the Greater London area.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table. During 1992, superintendent registrars reported 189 cases to the Registrar General where they suspected that a proposed marriage had been arranged for the sole purpose of evading statutory immigration controls. Of the 189 cases, 152 were notified by superintendent registrars from the Greater London area.

North West Regional Health Authority

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress is being made by the North West regional health authority to improve health facilities at Brinningham, Stockport.

Dr. Mawhinney: Health services in Brinnington are the responsibility of Stockport district health authority in conjunction with North Western regional health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the DHA, Mr. F. Russell, for details.

Halton and Warrington Hospitals

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what has been the ratio of administration and clerical staff to nursing and midwifery staff in (a) Halton and (b) Warrington general hospitals in each year since 1987;

(2) what has been the ratio of managers to nursing and midwifery staff in (a) Halton and (b) Warrington general hospitals in each year since 1987.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Donald Hammond, chairman of Halton general hospital national health service trust and Mr. Norman Banner, chairman of Warrington hospital NHS trust, for details.

Ambulance Response Times

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress is being made in improving ambulance response times; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 23 March at column 576.

Pharmacies

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total number of pharmacies in England; and how many dispense more than 2,000 prescriptions.

Dr. Mawhinney: The total number of pharmacies in England in 1991-92 was 9,765. Of these, 6,998 pharmacies dispensed more than 2,000 prescriptions each month on average during that year.

1901 Census

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she will relax the 100-year rule covering the release of the detailed data of the 1901 census.

Mr. Sackville: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Duncan) on 21 April at columns 127-28.

The Registrar General for England and Wales does not propose to make any further relaxations in the arrangements for the release of information from the 1901 census records.

Nurses

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nurses who achieved their basic qualification in the northern region before 30 September in each year since 1987 were (a) in post in the NHS, (b) undertaking further training in the NHS and (c) not employed in the NHS one year after qualification.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

AIDS

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money has been spent in the last 10 years by her Department or via other bodies or organisations of public awareness campaigns and research on (i) AIDS, (ii) leukaemia in children and (iii) spina bifida.

Mr. Sackville: For details of expenditure on AIDS public awareness campaigns and research, I refer my hon. Friend to the replies I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Coventry, South-West (Mr. Butcher) on 26 April at columns 280-81.

Comparable information on the amount spent related to children with leukaemia is not available centrally.

So far as spina bifida is concerned, an expert advisory group report on "Folic Acid and the Prevention of Neural Tube Defects" was launched in December 1992. This publication cost £21,400 to produce and its distribution to the national health service cost in excess of £50,000. A follow-up public information campaign in the current financial year is being planned. Research into spina bifida is undertaken by the Medical Research Council which receives its grant in aid from the office of my rright hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much public money has been spent by her Department or via other bodies or organisations in connection with the AIDS disease since 1986; and how many cases of AIDS have become known since that time.

Mr. Sackville: The cumulative total of Government funding for HIV/AIDS for the financial years 1986-87 to 1992-93 is £886,304,000. This includes money made available for medical treatment and care, training of health and social care workers, infection control, surveillance, protection of the blood supply, HIV testing and counselling, funding of voluntary sector projects, local authority support services, research, and public education and prevention campaigns. This figure does not include spending by other Government Departments on HIV and AIDS work connected with their own spheres of interest. Information about total expenditure from non-governmental sources is not available centrally.

A total of 7,083 cases of AIDS and 16,164 cases of HIV have been reported since 1986.

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many research programmes examining the HIV/AIDS virus have been funded either directly or indirectly from public expenditure over the past 10 years.

Mr. Sackville: The main agency through which the Government support medical research is the Medical Research Council which receives grant-in-aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster for a directed programme of AIDS research covering vaccine development and to improve our understanding of the natural history of the virus. Between 1986-87 and 1992-93, a total of £66,170,000 was made available to fund the programme.

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence she has as to the relative degree of risk to (a) heterosexuals and (b) homosexuals of contracting AIDS.

Mr. Sackville: HIV, the virus which causes AIDS, is primarily transmitted by unprotected sexual intercourse between men or between men and women, where one person is infected. The relative risk of acquiring HIV depends on the frequency and type of sexual activity, prevalence of infection and other factors such as the presence of ulcerative genital diseases.

In general, the individual risk of acquiring infection through unprotected sex between men is at present likely to be far greater than it is for unprotected sex between men and women. This largely reflects the fact that homosexual and bisexual males still account for the greatest number of reports of both HIV and AIDS. However, whilst the numbers of those infected heterosexually are smaller, the fastest rate of growth in HIV reports is now seen in this group.

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of known AIDS cases have been among homosexuals and drug users; and what percentage of such cases have come from within the heterosexual community over the past 10 years.

Mr. Sackville: A total of 7,331 cases of AIDS had been reported in the United Kingdom up to 31 March 1993. Seventy-five per cent. of cases are attributed to infection transmitted through sex between men; 5 per cent. of cases attributed to infection transmitted through injecting drug misuse; and 2 per cent. of cases have been reported in homosexual or bisexual men who were also drug misusers. Ten per cent. of cases are attributed to infection transmitted through sex between men and women.

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will provide details of the annual forecasts of the number of people likely to contract AIDS and the actual number of cases notified;

(2) how accurate the forecast made in 1986 by her Department as to the number of heterosexuals expected to contract AIDS over the next 10 years has so far proved to be; and what assessment has been made of the reasons for divergence of outturn figures from the forecast.

Mr. Sackville: The Government have consistently sought to minimise the uncertainty surrounding the HIV/AIDS epidemic by providing for high quality HIV surveillance which has informed forecasting work and enabled its accuracy to be monitored.

Two official reports have been published on projections for AIDS cases in England and Wales. The Cox report was published in 1988 on projections from 1987 up to the end of 1992. The projections were not subdivided by exposure categories. The Cox report was superseded, in January 1990, by the Day report which provided projections up to end of 1993. Copies of both reports are available in the Library.

The reports provide a range of estimates. Table 1 gives recommended planning estimates from each report for annual total number of AIDS diagnoses, without adjustment for under-reporting, plus the total numbers of AIDS cases reported in each year. However, there is a delay between diagnosis and report so that reporting figures for any one year are not directly comparable to figures for diagnosis. Table 2 gives the Day recommended estimates for total and heterosexual contact AIDS cases, allowing for under-reporting—outcome—plus a projection of the actual numbers of diagnoses allowing for reporting delay.

The uncertainty of the Cox projections was inevitable because of the lack of relevant data available in the very early stages of any new infectious disease epidemic. The shortfall of AIDS cases compared to Cox's estimates is also attributable to modification of high-risk behaviour among homosexual men in the mid-1980s.

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the available evidence on the effectiveness of research and awareness campaigns on AIDS; what plans she has to reduce expenditure by her Department on such campaigns; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Results from a range of surveys, including research and evaluation on the Health Education Authority's public education campaigns demonstrate significant and sustained levels of public awareness and knowledge about HIV and AIDS.

Expenditure on such campaigns is subject to careful scrutiny and funding will be made available as necessary to meet the Government's objectives. More information about public education and awareness is set out in the White Paper "The Health of the Nation: A Strategy for Health in England", Cm 1986, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Peto Institute

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what further progress has been made on the provision of United Kingdom public funds for an extension of the Peto Institute for Conductive Education.

Dr. Mawhinney: There has not yet been sufficient progress with construction of the International Peto Institute in Budapest to justify further payments by the United Kingdom Government under our agreement with the Hungarian Government.

EMPLOYMENT

Youth Training

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many youth training places are currently available; and if she will take steps to identify the total number of 16 and 17-year-olds currently eligible for youth training places.

Mr. McLoughlin: Information on the availability of youth training places is not collected. However, we are satisfied that there is sufficient YT provision available to meet demand. There are currently some 300,000 young people on youth training or participating in youth credits in Great Britain.

My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, announced to the House on 7 July 1992, Official Report, columns 171-72, measures establishing a national system for monitoring the numbers of young people who are registered with the careers service and seeking training.

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many youth training places she is providing (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in the Greater Manchester area.

Mr. McLoughlin: There are currently nearly 300,000 young people on youth training or participating in youth credits in Great Britain and just over 20,000 in Greater Manchester.

Business Start-up Allowance

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the extra 10,000 entrants to the business start-up allowance announced in the Chancellor's Budget speech will be in addition to the 48,000 entrants for 1993-94 identified in table 10 of her departmental report for the "Government's Expenditure Plans 1993-94 to 1995-96', Cm 2205; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The 10,000 starts will be in addition to the number included in 1993-94 plans submitted by training and enterprise councils in England and Wales and local enterprise companies in Scotland.

Training Schemes

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what formal rights of appeal exist for a participant in a Government training scheme if he or she has a grievance or feels that they have not received the quality of service they were promised; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Detailed grievance procedures are a matter for training and enterprise councils to devise and to arrange for participants to be informed. A contractual requirement placed on TECs is that alternative provision is offered to any participants who express reasonable dissatisfaction with the delivery of their training.

Citizens Charter

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what citizens charter provisions apply to the rights of youth training, training for work and learning for work participants; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The programmes cited by the hon. Member are delivered for the Government by the training and enterprise councils. TECs are encouraged to apply charter principles in all of their activities, and many are doing so.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what criteria she has laid down against which training and enterprise councils are expected to assess their providers and award and maintain approved training organisation status; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Relations between training and enterprise councils and the Employment Department are governed by the TEC operating agreement. Under the 1993-94 agreement, TECs are required to contract only with training providers that: obtain and maintain approved training organisation status under criteria published by my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, a copy of which is being placed in the Library; or have an alternative system approved by my right hon. Friend, as of equivalent or greater assurance and effectiveness.

From April 1994, the Employment Department will require TECs to operate new arrangements in the way they contract for, and manage services and products which the Department funds. The new requirements have been approved by my right hon. Friend and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Training

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the condition of 26 weeks unemployment needs to be fulfilled a second time if a person has to leave training for work because of (a) operational difficulties encountered by their provider, including inability to obtain a suitable work placement or (b) illness or an accident before qualifying for another place; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Where a provider is no longer in a position to provide training in accordance with a participants individual participation plan, there is a contractual requirement placed on TECs to offer participants the opportunity to transfer to another provider under the terms of a plan substantially similar to the existing plan.

TECs are required to agree their policy for dealing with periods of injury or illness with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. Where an individual is deemed as having left the programme requalification would be necessary. Time spent in receipt of sickness or invalidity benefit would count towards the 26-week qualifying period.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what effect the reduction of income support on the grounds of refusing suitable employment or for leaving work voluntarily has on the participation allowance paid to a person who then joins training for work or learning for work; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Reductions of income support due to a person being voluntarily unemployed are disregarded once they join either training for work or learning for work. Their participation allowance is based on the same amount as their overall assessment for income support.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in what circumstances time spent on an allowance-supported rehabilitation course counts towards the 26 week qualifying period of training for work; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Periods of attendance on an employment rehabilitation course count towards the qualifying period for training for work.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what provisions exist for training for work participants who were previously receiving their benefit by a Department of Social Security order book to be paid their participation allowance each week by girocheque; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Ms Clare Short, dated 28 April 1993:

As the Employment Service (ES) is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to her about what provisions exist for Training For Work (TFW) participants who were previously receiving their benefit by a DSS order book to be paid their participation allowance each week by Girocheque. This is something which falls within the responsibilities she has delegated me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

Where a client was previously receiving their benefit by order book, they are asked to present their order book at a Pre-entry Interview (PEI) which they should attend before entering TFW. At the PEI, clients are informed to cash their final order for the week ending which falls on, or after their TFW start date. Once the final order has been cashed, the order book must be returned immediately to the local Benefits Agency (BA) office.

Subsequent payments of participation allowance are then paid at a level equal to the benefit previously in payment but with the addition of £10 Premium. Where the client is in receipt of Income Support (IS), a form is issued by BA to the ES local office to confirm the weekly entitlement to IS. However, some order books include other BA benefits which cannot be changed to a TFW participation allowance, for example attendance allowance. In these cases, if a client is still eligible for the other benefit(s), a revised order book (or girocheques) covering these benefits only is issued by BA.

All clients who transfer from a BA order book are paid their participation allowance weekly and receive their payments on their normal pay day. For example, participants who would normally cash their order on a Monday receive their participation allowance girocheque in time for them to cash it on that day.

Revised guidance has recently been issued to our local offices to ensure that the people referred to in your question receive their participation allowances promptly.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in what circumstances people can participate on a part-time basis in training for work, learning for work and the community action programme; what participation allowance they are entitled to; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Non-employed participants on training for work who receive an allowance can attend part-time for a minimum of 15 hours per seven-day period, provided the TEC or provider accepts that personal or domestic circumstances are such that they could not reasonably be required to attend full-time. There is no abatement of allowance for part-time attendance. Non-employed participants not in receipt of an allowance just attend for more than 21 hours per seven-day period. For participants who are employed or self employed and who are not in receipt of an allowance, there is no minimum hours of attendance required. Learning for work will only offer support to attend full-time courses of 21 hours a week or more.

Temporary work on community action will be only part time, although there will, in addition, be structured job search assistance aimed at helping participants into work, training or other programmes. Participants will receive an allowance equivalent to their benefit entitlement plus £10 a week.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if people on disability benefits will be eligible to participate in (a) learning for work and (b) the community action programme; in what way the eligibility rules for these programmes differ from those which apply to training for work; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: People on disability benefits will be eligible for learning for work, as they are for training for work. But they will not be able to join community action, as that will be a programme of actual work and could not, therefore, be offered to those who receive a benefit on the basis of being unfit for work.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if participants on the community action programme and learning for work programme will be covered by her Department's analogous industrial injuries scheme; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: I can confirm that participants on both community action and learning for work will be covered by the analogous industrial injuries scheme.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans she has to make the learning for work and community action programmes available in the financial year 1994-95; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Learning for work will provide opportunities for more than 30,000 unemployed people to take vocational education courses in the 1993-94 academic year which spans the 1993-94 and 1994-95 financial years.

Community action will provide 60,000 voluntary work opportunities. The majority of these will be in 1994-95.

Sir Rhodes Boyson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will publish the total amount of support given by her Department to (a) training and enterprise councils and (b) all other initiatives in (i) England, (ii) Greater London and (iii) the south-east, excluding Greater London, for each year from 1982-83 to 1992-93, estimated, distinguishing between current and capital expenditure, though excluding local authority credit approvals and capital allocations.

Mr. McLoughlin: Information on the amount of support provided in England by the Employment Department is published annually in the departmental report, copies of which are available in the Library.

The expenditure on training and enterprise programmes delivered through training and enterprise councils in London and the south east for 1991-92 and 1992-93 is:

	London £ million	South East £ million
1991-92	105·1	167·5
[1]1992-93	131·4	[2]129·9

[1] Provisional

[2] This figure excludes expenditure on Hertfordshire and Essex TECs after 1 October 1992, which have now transferred to TEED Eastern Region.

Notes:

1. All figures exclude expenditure on adult trainee allowances and TEC management fees.
2. These figures exclude expenditure through Departmental Area Offices.

Barnsley and Doncaster TEC

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of the staff employed by Barnsley and Doncaster training and enterprise council are disabled; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: It has been the practice of successive Governments to treat information of this kind about individual employers as confidential and not to disclose it without their consent.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the number of staff employed by Barnsley and Doncaster training and enterprise council and the cost for each of the last three years; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: This is a matter for the TEC. However, I would refer the hon. Gentleman to the audited accounts of Barnsley and Doncaster TEC, which are in the Library.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many disabled young people are receiving training by the Barnsley and Doncaster training and enterprise council; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: In 1992-93 a total of 178 young people with disabilities were trained as part of Barnsley and Doncaster TEC's careership—youth training—programme. This figure, which is the most recent available, represented 4·7 per cent. of the total number of young people involved in that programme and compares favourably with the national average for youth training, which is around 3 per cent.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list by sex the number of young people accepted for each of the last three years by the Barnsley and Doncaster training and enterprise council; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Barnsley and Doncaster TEC became operational in January 1991. Information on the number of young people starting youth training since March 1991 is in the table.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the number of trainees obtaining a qualification through the Barnsley and Doncaster training and enterprise council, by sex, for each of the last three years; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Barnsley and Doncaster TEC did not become operational until January 1991, but it is possible to provide some earlier figures for the area covered by the TEC. The table gives proportions of leavers who gained a qualification.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when she last had a meeting with the chairman of the Barnsley and Doncaster training and enterprise council to discuss budgetary matters; what was the outcome of the discussions; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State last met Mr. Peter Wetzel, the chairman of Barnsley and Doncaster TEC, when she visited the TEC on 1 March. She had a wide-ranging and productive discussion. The detail of any discussion with TECs about budgetary matters cannot, however, be disclosed at this stage.

Assessment and Guidance Credits Initiative

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which TECs are participating in the assessment and guidance credits initiative; what are the objectives of the programme; what will happen to the schemes in 1994-95; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The assessment and guidance credits initiative, now known as skill choice, is starting in 15 training and enterprise councils or local enterprise companies. In England these are:

AZTEC (Kingston/Merton/Wandsworth)
Birmingham
CAMBSTEC (Central and South Cambridgeshire)
CEWTEC (Chester/Ellesmere Port/Wirral)
Coventry and Warwickshire
Dorset
Greater Nottingham
Hampshire
Hertfordshire
Northumberland
South and East Cheshire
Tyneside
Wiltshire.

In Wales, the initiative is operating in:

North West Wales TEC (TARGED)

and Scotland in:

Enterprise Ayrshire.

Skill choice aims to enable individuals, predominantly those in employment, to take greater control of decision making about their future careers by developing effective and comprehensive local information and guidance services, including the assessment and accreditation of prior learning; and putting individual people in the driving seat by offering credits, which they can use to buy the guidance and assessment services of their choice.

The 15 TECs or LECs are participating in the initiative over the two years 1993-94 and 1994-95. If guidance and assessment credits prove successful and cost effective, the Government intend to make them available across the country.

Gateway to Learning Schemes

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which TECs are participating in the gateway to learning pilot schemes; what are the objectives of the pilots; what will happen to the pilots in 1994-95; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The gateways to learning initiative aims to improve local adult occupational guidance provision and to increase the take up of quality assured guidance opportunities. This will help individuals take control of their own career development. The gateway to learning projects are also developing guidance voucher schemes for locally specified client groups. Experience with the initiative so far is very encouraging.

TECs selected for gateways receive part-funding for one year. A list of the 29 TECs chosen to participate in the initiative in 1993-94, together with the 12 TECs which took part in 1992-93 follows.

At the end of 1993-94, when Employment Department pump priming ceases, it is expected that the TECs involved will continue the provision with their own funds. This was achieved with the 1992-93 pilots.

TECs participating in gateways to learning:

1993-94:
Calderdale and Kirklees
County Durham
Greater Peterborough
Humberside
LAWTEC
Leicester
Merseyside
NORMID
Rochdale
Sandwell
SOLOTEC
Staffordshire
Suffolk
Teesside
West London
Central England
Gloucestershire
Heart of England
Kent
Leeds
Manchester
Milton Keynes
North West London
Rotherham
Sheffield
South Thames
Stockport and High Peak
Surrey
Walsall

1992-93:
Bedfordshire
Northumberland
South and East Cheshire
North London
Hertfordshire
Bolton and Bury
Coventry and Warwickshire
Greater Nottingham/North Nottinghamshire
Dudley
Dorset
Wiltshire
Birmingham

Unemployed People (Credits)

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which training and enterprise councils are participating in the open learning credits for unemployed people initiative; what are the objectives of the programme; what will happen to the scheme in 1994-95; and if she would make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The following TECs are piloting open learning credits during the financial year 1993-94: CENTEC; Coventry and Warwickshire TEC; Devon and Cornwall TEC; consortium of Essex TEC and Hertfordshire TEC; consortium of Greater Nottingham TEC and North Nottinghamshire TEC; Hampshire TEC; Humberside TEC; consortium of Manchester TEC, Stockport and High Peak TEC, and South and East Cheshire TEC; NORMID TEC; consortium of Northumberland TEC and Wearside TEC; Tyneside TEC; South Glamorgan TEC. In addition, two local enterprise companies in Scotland will be running pilots —Scottish Borders and Lochaber.

The objective of the pilots will be to test our open learning credits as a means of providing additional scope for training and enterprise councils and local enterprise companies in Scotland to widen the range of support offered to unemployed people to help themselves back to work by improving their vocational skills and knowledge.

The pilots will be thoroughly evaluated during the current financial year. Decisions about the future will be taken in the light of this evaluation.

The pilots demonstrate the Government's commitment to exploring different ways of helping unemployed people help themselves back to work. The response to the initiative so far from training and enterprise councils, local enterprise companies and the open learning industry has been very positive and open learning credits are already being issued to unemployed people in some of the pilot areas.

Unemployment

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current rate of unemployment in the Wentworth constituency; what level of economic inactivity in the constituency was revealed by the 1992 census; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 27 April 1993]: Official unemployment rates are not available for parliamentary constituencies. The smallest geographical areas for which unemployment rate are officially compiled are travel-to-work areas. The numbers of claimant unemployed in the Wentworth constituency in March 1993 stood at 4,824.

Figures from the 1991 census show that the number of economically inactive people aged 16-plus in the Wentworth constituency on 21 April 1991 was 28,213.

Unemployment figures from the census of population cannot be compared with those published by the Employment Department. The former are based on a much looser definition and, in particular, do not include an "actively seeking work" criterion in the definition. The Department's figures are available in the Library.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Sickness and Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people receiving (a) sickness benefit and (b) invalidity benefit in each month since January 1992 previously sought unemployment benefit.

Mr. Scott: This information is not available.

Benefits

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people receiving benefits other than unemployment benefit in each year since 1979 were unemployed and under retirement age.

Mr. Burt: The benefits payable to unemployed people under retirement age are income support, housing benefit, council tax benefit, and social fund grants and loans. The table shows the number of income support recipients who are unemployed and not in receipt of unemployment benefit for each year for which figures are available. Income support recipients may also be in receipt of housing benefit, community charge benefit and/or social fund grants or loans.

The number of unemployed people who were not in receipt of income support or unemployment benefit, but who received housing benefit, community charge benefit or social fund grants or loans is not available.

1988	1,377
1989	1,118
1990	1,019
1991	1,244

Notes:
Figures are rounded to the nearest thousand.
Due to industrial action there was no count in 1985.

Pensioners' Income

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the percentage of pensioners with an annual income of less than £5,000 for the latest year for which information is available; and if he will give a breakdown by age.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) on 14 April 1993 at columns 663-64.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consideration his Department is giving to the state of disability living allowance administration arising from reports of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration.

Mr. Scott: All reports received from the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration are fully and carefully considered by this Department. When an individual case report brings to light procedural weaknesses then appropriate remedial measures are put in hand. The Commissioner's annual report for 1992 refers to a significant number of complaints about the standards of service for disability living allowance which will be the subject of a later report.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many disability appeal tribunals have been held in each region on the subject of disability living allowance; and if he will list their outcome.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability appeal tribunals is the responsibility of the president of the independent tribunal service, his honour Judge Thorpe, and the hon. Member may wish to contact his office to obtain this information.

Claimants Abroad

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to review the actively seeking employment regulations in relation to claimants who travel to the United States of America.

Mr. Burt: We have no plans to do so. Benefits for unemployment are not generally payable abroad except under limited provisions within the European Community social security regulations. Claimants travelling to the United States of America have no entitlement to these benefits.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to review payment of benefits to people living abroad.

Mr. Burt: We are reviewing procedures to prevent payment to those living abroad who do not qualify for benefit.

Rent Allowances

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the latest estimate of expenditure on rent allowances for the financial year 1992-93; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The latest estimate of expenditure on rent allowances for the financial year 1992-93 is £2,903 million.

Notes: The source of this information is the 1993 Departmental report published in February 1993. A copy of the report has been placed in the Library.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would have been the cost of upgrading unemployment benefit to the same level as invalidity benefit, including increases for adult and child dependents, for each year since 1987; what would be the cost of doing so for the years up to 1995-96; and what would be the cost per year of paying unemployment benefit at such increased rate for the full duration of unemployment.

Mr. Burt [holding answer 19 April 1993]: Estimated costs for year prior to 1993-94 are not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The estimated net cost, at 1993-94 prices, of upgrading unemployment benefit to invalidity benefit levels is £740 million in 1993-94 and 1994-95, and £730 million in 1995-96.

The estimated cost of extending the increased unemployment benefit to cover the full duration of unemployment is an additional £750 million per annum at 1993-94 prices. This estimate is less certain as the characteristics of those people who currently exhaust their entitlement to unemployment benefit are not available and broad assumptions based upon the characteristics of unemployed people not in receipt of unemployment benefit have been used.

The estimates do not take account of any behavioural changes associated with such upgrading of unemployment benefit.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 29 April 1993

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what inquiries he undertook to determine the ability of those who will have to pay higher contributions to their legal fees as a result of the changes to legal aid regulations announced in the last autumn statement to afford these contributions; and what plans he has to monitor the new regulations to ensure that applicants are in fact able to pay the new contributions.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Contributions to legal aid are one third of disposable income above the free limit after a generous range of allowances has been made against gross income. When an offer of legal aid with a contribution is made, it is for the individual concerned to assess his priorities and to decide whether or not to accept it. The operation of the new financial eligibility regulations will be closely monitored.

TRANSPORT

Railway Rolling Stock

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the current progress of the design and funding of the new class 323 electric multiple units designated for Greater Manchester Passenger Transport Authority; and when he expects them to enter service.

Mr. Freeman: I understand that 45 class 323 vehicles are on order for services sponsored by Greater Manchester passenger transport authority. These will be funded by British Rail and the cost recovered over time through S20 payments. In addition, the PTE has ordered, through British Rail, a further six vehicles for services to Manchester airport. The PTE is to fund 45 per cent. of the cost of these and British Rail the remainder. The PTE's contribution to the airport link project has been funded through capital allocations.

The manufacturers of these vehicles are making good progress in overcoming the technical problems that they have incurred. British Rail hopes to have the first vehicles in revenue-earning service, initially in the west midlands, at the end of September. Further vehicles will then enter service on a regular basis over the course of the following year.

A650, Keighley

Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to make a further announcement about the A650 Hard Ings road, Keighley, improvement scheme.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The preferred route was announced for this scheme in March 1992. Design and related works are now being progressed with a view to publishing draft orders under the 1980 Highways Act during 1994.

M6 (Lane Closures)

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the occasions on which lane closures have taken place at junction 8 (Ray Hall) of the M6 motorway and associated link roads since the M5-M6 link was completed; what was the reason for the closures and the subsequent work carried out; what were the dates and length of time of the closures; what is the total estimated cost to public funds of the works carried out at this junction; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: It is not possible to list all the lane closures which have taken place on these sections of the midland links motorways since they opened to traffic in 1970. In addition to programmed major refurbishment works, there have been closures required for emergency works and for routine maintenance. Major refurbishment works in the period are as follows:

(i)) 1980 M6 Ray Hall—viaduct resurfacing and deckjoint repairs for six months.
(ii) 1981 M5 Eastern Arm—viaduct resurfacing and deckjoint repairs for three months.
(iii) 1982 M5 Western Arm—viaduct resurfacing and deckjoint repairs for three months.
(iv) 1991 M6 Ray Hall—viaduct deck repairs, waterproofing, drainage, carriageway strengthening and resurfacing, street lighting renewal for six months.
(v) 1993 M5 Eastern Arm—viaduct deck repairs, Waterproofing, drainage, carriageway strengthening and resurfacing, street lighting renewal for six months (contract commenced on 19 April)

By using temporary narrow lanes at times of peak traffic demand, the programmed closures have not materially restricted capacity below that otherwise available. At all other times, sufficient capacity has been maintained to accommodate the prevailing traffic flow with minimum delay.

The total estimated cost to public funds of all the works carried out at this junction cannot be separated from the costs of maintaining the midland links motorway network as a whole.

The midland links motorway network is subject to ongoing major and routine maintenance work and every effort will continue to be made to minimise disruption to traffic.

EDUCATION

Voluntary Aided Status

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many recent applications for voluntary aided status have been received; and which were (a) accepted and (b) rejected.

Mr. Forth: Since January 1990 the Secretary of State has decided 15 applications for new voluntary aided schools; of these five were approved and 10 were rejected. Four of these approvals were for new primary schools, including a Roman Catholic, Church of England/ Methodist, interchurch and a Jewish school. The fifth approval was for a Jewish secondary school. The 10 unsuccessful applications included three RC, three C of E, one Church of England/Methodist, two Jewish schools and one Muslim. The last decision is currently being reconsidered.

Higher Education Colleges

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps can be taken by students to appeal to an independent body against decisions of colleges of higher education in England.

Mr. Boswell: Arrangements for consideration of student appeals, including appeals to an independent body, are a matter for each college to determine individually.

ENVIRONMENT

Domestic Appliances

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to promote the reduction of energy consumption of domestic appliances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: My Department encourages consumers to purchase energy-efficient appliances through information and advice campaigns such as "Helping the Earth Begins at Home". In collaboration with the regional electricity companies, the Energy Efficiency Office within my Department operates a voluntary labelling scheme for household refrigerators and freezers to show their relative energy efficiency on a scale from 1—least efficient—to 10—most efficient.

The Government strongly support the development by the European Commission of measures to improve the energy efficiency of traded goods including domestic appliances. A framework directive for the mandatory energy labelling of domestic appliances was adopted in September 1992 and delegated to the Commission the responsibility to prepare and adopt detailed application directives for specific appliances. The first such directive, for refrigerators and freezers, is expected to be adopted by the Commission in the next two months.

We will support the proposed development and adoption by the Commission of a directive setting minimum energy efficiency standards in Europe for household refrigerators and freezers; and are in favour of the extension of such requirements to other domestic appliances provided that it is clear that market forces or voluntary measures will not produce the desired result and that other member states agree that this is the best way forward.

"Agenda 21"

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in the implementation of "Agenda 21" and the biodiversity and climate changes conventions at local and national levels.

Mr. Maclean: We are committed to ratifying the climate change convention by the end of this year and to establishing the basis for ratification of the convention on biological diversity in the same timescale.

An extensive consultation exercise is currently taking place on the United Kingdom's national programme for limiting emissions of carbon dioxide. Two thirds of the programme is already in place. The complete programme will be incorporated in the national plan under the climate change convention to be published by the end of the year. Wide consultation across all sectors is also under way on our national action plan on biodiversity which will be published later this year. This will bring together the Government's policies and programmes for wildlife and will cover the conservation and sustainable use of our natural heritage.

We intend to present a report on the United Kingdom's national sustainability strategy to the UN Commission on Sustainable Development, the main institutional mechanism for following up Agenda 21, before the end of 1993. We are conducting a national debate so that everyone with a concern for the environment has the opportunity to express views on how we can balance the need for economic development with protection of the environment. The local authority associations with our support are developing a "Local Agenda 21" initiative for local government. We are also hosting "Partnerships for Change '93", an international NGO conference to be held in Manchester in September. This will enable all parts of the international NGO community to exchange experience on the implementation of Agenda 21.

Fiddler's Ferry Power Station

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment has been made of whether the Fiddler's Ferry power station conforms to the Govenment's national plan's control on emissions of sulphur dioxide and oxides of nitrogen under the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Maclean: The requirement of the national plan is that National Power and PowerGen, who are the operators of Fiddler's Ferry power station, should each keep within a specified company quota for SO2 and NOx emissions from existing large combustion plant. This has been met in 1991 and 1992. Authorisations issued by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution aim to ensure that the sum of allocations for SO2 and NOx for a particular company do not exceed its overall quota. However, there is flexibility within the plan for the distribution of a company's allocations to change provided that they do not in total exceed the quota or conflict with any other conditions of the authoritisation, such as those designed to ensure that best available techniques not entailing excessive cost are used to minimise harmful emissions.

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the sulphur dioxide emissions from Fiddler's Ferry power station for 1991; what are the 1993 estimated figures; and what assessment he has made of the reason for the difference between those two figures.

Mr. Maclean: Reported emissions of SO2 for 1991 were 171,018 tonnes. It is estimated that total emissions will be broadly the same in 1993.

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated level of sulphur dioxide emissions from Fiddler's Ferry power station for 1993; what were the figures for 1987; and what effect the EC policy of securing a 50 per cent. reduction in emissions has had on reducing the level of emissions from that station.

Mr. Maclean: Estimated 1993 SO2 emissions from Fiddler's Ferry power station are 172,000 tonnes; 1987 figures are not held centrally. Current EC policy on reductions of SO2 emissions is primarily embodied in the large combustion plants directive of 1988. One of its requirements is that by the year 2003 total SO2 emissions from all power stations in the United Kingdom should be reduced by 60 per cent. from 1980 levels. The annual company quota for PowerGen, which operates the Fiddler's Ferry power station, reflects that requirement.

Sulphur Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration the Government have given to supporting the European Commission request that the deadline for the 50 per cent. reduction in sulphur dioxide emissions should be the year 2000.

Mr. Maclean: I am not aware of such a request, but the Government are already committed through the national plan to a 52 per cent. reduction, from 1980 levels, in SO2 emissions from existing large combustion plant by the year 2000.

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he will take to reduce emissions and conform to the 50 per cent. reductions of sulphur dioxide and oxides of nitrogen laid down by the European Commission.

Mr. Maclean: The United Kingdom is committed to meeting current EC legislation on reductions of SO2 and NOx.

Housing

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many new housing units were constructed by (a) the local authority and (b) housing associations in the Cannock Chase district council area and the Lichfield district council area in each year since 1979.

Mr. Baldry: Estimates of housebuilding completions by sector for each local authority area in England are shown in the publications "Local Housing Statistics" and "Housebuilding in England by Local Authority Areas 1980-1989" for some earlier years.

Figures for 1979 are in table 5 of the May 1980 edition, issue No. 53, of "Local Housing Statistics". Figures for 1980 to 1984 are in "Housebuilding in England by Local Authority Areas", tables 1.1 to 1.5. Figures for 1985 to 1991 are in tables 1(a) to 1(g) of the October 1992 edition, issue number 103, of "Local Housing Statistics". Figures for the first nine months of 1992 have been published in table 1 of issue No. 104 of "Local Housing Statistics".

Copies of these publications are in the Library.

South West Water

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress he is making in the examination of South West Water prices announced by the Prime Minister on 11 March, Official Report, column 1105.

Mr. Maclean: Responsibility for water charges rests with the Director General of Water Services. The Department is, however, now examining certain aspects of water authorities' overall programmes to see if there is any room for manoeuvre.

Open Spaces Society

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the grant from his Department for the Open Spaces Society for 1991-92, 1992-93, and 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on Wednesday, 24 March, Official Report, column 628.

Disused Mine Shafts

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to make available resources to make safe disused mine shafts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Resources to make safe disused mine shafts are available in England through derelict land grant and in Wales through the Welsh Development Agency's land reclamation programme. Normally these are provided where the treatment of the mineshaft forms part of the scheme for the reclamation of derelict land. However, resources are also available for the treatment of isolated mine shafts which threaten public safety or which endanger existing development.

Waste Management

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the latest position on the waste management licensing timetable.

Mr. Maclean: I am convinced that we must achieve our environmental objectives for waste management in a way which places the least possible burden on industry. In doing so, we have to take account of European Community measures dealing with waste management, as I explained in my announcement on 17 March.

Unfortunately further consideration of this important aspect and its impact on the relationship between waste management licensing under part II of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and other controls has produced a number of technical problems that have not yet been finally resolved. It is very important to get the position right and for all regulating authorities and handlers of controlled waste to know what they have to do to comply with obligations deriving from Community measures.

Regrettably, therefore, we cannot now meet our target for waste management licensing of 1 June. As soon as I am in a position to give a revised date, I shall do so. I should stress that we fully intend to bring in the Environmental Protection Act waste management licensing system and the EC revised waste framework directive. Moreover, this delay in no way affects the present requirement under the Control of Pollution Act 1974 for facilities handling waste to have licences.

Local Authorities (Complaints)

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to ensure that local authorities are not prevented by terms in insurance policies from providing explanations or issuing apologies in response to complaints from members of the public.

Mr. Robin Squire: The terms included in these policies are a matter for negotiation between local authorities and their insurers.

Council Tax, Newbury

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the current council tax levels in Newbury for each band; and what these levels would be if there was no budgeted recourse to the council's resources.

Mr. Howard: Assuming that the council had made no use of its resources and had chosen to set the budget requirement at the level of budgeted net revenue expenditure, the council taxes for each band would have been as follows in each case:

Current council tax levels
Band A	352·30
Band B	410·90
Band C	469·60
Band D	528·30
Band E	645·70
Band F	763·10
Band G	880·50
Band H	1,056·60
Tax levels assuming no use of council's own resources
Band A	423·08
Band B	493·59
Band C	564·11
Band D	634·62
Band E	775·65
Band F	916·67
Band G	1,057·70
Band H	1,269·24

NORTHERN IRELAND

Employment, Belfast

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many new firms have been established in the enterprise zone area of Belfast since the zone was first operational.

Mr. Atkins: The number of firms in the Belfast enterprise zone increased from 165 at designation on 21 October 1981 to 478 at expiry in October 1991, a net increase of 313 firms.

Schools (Expenditure)

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the expenditure per pupil in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools for each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Hanley: The information is as follows:

Year	Primary £	Secondary £
1989-90	1,026·60	1,845·72
1990-91	1,130·84	1,976·45
1991-92	1,226·91	2,091·93

Students

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the flow of third-level education students out of and into Northern Ireland each year since 1981.

Mr. Hanley: The information is available from 1985-86 to 1991-92 and is as follows:

Year	Northern Ireland domiciled students entering third level institutions outside Northern Ireland	Non-Northern Ireland domiciled students entering third level institutions in Northern Ireland
1985-86	2,190	625
1986-87	2,486	699
1987-88	2,690	866
1988-89	2,879	968
1989-90	3,286	990
1990-91	3,582	1,161
1991-92	4,004	1,209

Note:
Figures relate to full-time undergraduate new entrants only.

Unemployment

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to reduce long-term unemployment in the Province; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Reducing unemployment in Northern Ireland depends on the achievement of higher levels of economic growth and on Northern Ireland industry becoming internationally competitive. The Government's strategy to achieve this includes identifying and removing obstacles to growth; encouraging inward investment; promoting cross-border trade; building up management and work force skills; developing an enterprise culture; and supporting innovation and research and development.

Those who have been unemployed for long periods may need additional helpo to enable them to compete for the jobs that are available. The Training and Employment Agency provides practical help through the job training programme, Enterprise Uister, the Action for Community Employment scheme and the job clubs service. In addition guidance and counselling is available from each of the Training and Employment Agency's area offices and from the Social Security Agency through the Restart programme.

Non-fossil Fuel Obligation

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his oral answer of 21 January, Official Report, columns 488-89, when he now expects to announce the non-fossil fuel obligation quota for Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Subject to approval by the European Commission, I expect to announce details of a non-fossil fuel obligation for Northern Ireland in the early summer.

Training and Employment Agency

Sir James Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what targets have been set for the Training and Employment Agency for Northern Ireland for the period 1993 to 1996.

Mr. Atkins: The following targets have been set:

1. To increase the number of companies developing their management and workforce skills from 225 at April 1993 to 300 by March 1994 and 400 by March 1996.
2. To assess companies on the Company Development Programme against the national standard "Investor in People" with the aim of having 70 achieving recognition by March 1996.
3. To offer every company referred to the Agency by the Industrial Development Board relevant information, advice and customised training.
4. To increase the proportion of Youth Training Programme leavers who achieve a full qualification at National Vocational Qualifications level 2 or above from 13% at April 1993 to 45% by March 1996. This is in line with the National Education and Training Targets.
5. To increase the proportion of Job Training Programme leavers who achieve a full qualification at National Vocational Qualifications level 2 or above from 12% at April 1993 to 30% by March 1996.
6. In 1993/94 the Agency will seek to place 30,000 people into jobs.
7. To maintain the high levels of customer satisfaction and where possible increase them.
8. To reduce administration costs by more than 2% in 1993/94.
9. To meet, for the Agency, the national "Investors in People" standard by September 1995.

Electoral Areas

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will publish a table to show for (a) each parliamentary constituency in Northern Ireland, (b) each council area in Northern Ireland, (c) each district electoral area in each council area and (d) each ward, the number of electors currently qualified to vote at the local elections;

(2) if he will publish a table to show the area of each (a) parliamentary constituency, (b) council area, (c) district electoral area and (d) ward, in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer, 21 April 1993]: The information is set out in the tables. The electorates represent the number of local government electors included on the electoral register for 1993-94 on 19 March 1993, the enumeration date for the purpose of the current review of parliamentary constituency boundaries. The areas are approximate and include areas of inland water.

TRANSPORT

Safe Seas

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what response he has made to the European Commission on its proposal for setting up a committee on safe seas contained in the communication from commissioners on a common policy on safe seas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The United Kingdom has warmly welcomed the Commission's communication "A Common Policy for Safe Seas", which closely mirrors the Government's views on the need for action to improve the level of maritime safety in Community waters. Along with other member states, we approve in principle the Commission's proposal for a Committee on Safe Seas, and are currently considering what its terms of reference should be.

A614

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans there are to make the A614 in Nottinghamshire dual carriageway.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We do not have any proposals in the trunk road programme to upgrade the A614 in Nottinghamshire to dual carriageway standard.

Railway Rolling Stock

Mr. Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what conclusions he has reached following his Department's consultative exercise on the provision of rolling stock following the privatisation of British Rail.

Mr. Freeman: I intend to ask British Rail to establish rolling stock companies and to transfer its existing passenger rolling stock to these by 1 April 1994. Our provisional view is that there should be three rolling stock companies. Each should have a mixed portfolio of different types and ages of stock which they would lease to franchisees and BR's operating divisions pending franchising. Wherever reasonably practicable franchisees should have more than one potential source of supply for rolling stock in any particular market segment. More detailed work is in hand to determine how the fleet should be divided between the companies; what role the companies should take in the maintenance of their stock; and, whether, for example, individual BR maintenance depots should be associated with each rolling stock.

The companies will initially be publicly owned and will invest as necessary to renew their fleets. Our intention is to transfer the companies to the private sector as soon as practicable.

During the course of the consultative exercise a number of ideas have been put forward for the early involvement of private sector expertise and capital. I expect to reach conclusions shortly on the role which the private sector might take in working with the public sector in developing an operating lease market. I will then be inviting those interested to bring forward specific proposals.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

British Coal Pension Scheme

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) when British Coal last made normal contributions to mineworkers' pension funds; and if members are continuing to make contributions;

(2) what sum British Coal now owes to the industry's pension funds to cover the cost of making pension payments to the staff made redundant and retiring early between April 1983 and April 1992.

Mr. Eggar: These are matters for British Coal and the trustees of the pension schemes.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the latest valuation of the assets of the British Coal staff superannuation scheme.

Mr. Eggar: This is a matter for British Coal and the trustees of the staff superannuation scheme.

Riot Control Units

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many export licences his Department has granted for armoured anti-riot units since 1979.

Mr. Heseltine: This would require examination of all export licences for military goods to all destinations since 1979 which could be done only at disproportionate expense.

Plutonium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representation his Department's export control office had at the non-proliferation seminar on plutonium held at Rhodes House, Oxford, on 21 April.

Mr. Heseltine: Two officials from my Department's Export Control Organisation attended the seminar.

Nuclear Safety

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what response he has made to the Greenpeace report, "Vessel Head Penetration Cracking in Nuclear Reactors", published in March 1993, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Eggar: I have not received a copy of this report.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what visits to the Trawsfynydd nuclear plant have been made by International Atomic Energy safety inspectors on OSART safety assessment missions since the plant opened; and if he will make a statement on the current safety status of the plant.

Mr. Eggar: There have been no International Atomic Energy Agency operational safety and review team—OSART—missions to Trawsfynydd. Both reactors remain shut down while the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate completes its assessment of Nuclear Electric's safety case for restart.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps the chief nuclear inspector at Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate is taking to consider measures to prevent vessel head penetration cracking in Sizewell B.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Clydesdale (Mr. Hood) on 15 April 1993, Official Report, column 705.

Assisted Area Status

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when his proposals in respect of the assisted areas map were submitted to the European Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: After the review of the assisted areas map has been completed the Government's proposals will be put to the Commission for article 92 state aids clearance.

Dan-Air

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has had regarding the competition implications of the takeover of Dan-Air by British Airways.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: All representations received are treated in confidence. All relevant considerations were taken into account in the advice of the Director General of Fair Trading to my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade and in his decision not to refer the proposed acquisition to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Sodium Hexacyanoferrate

Mr. Gapes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what quantity of sodium hexacyanoferrate is (a) manufactured in the United Kingdom, (b) imported into the United Kingdom and (c) exported from the United Kingdom; and what are the locations where sodium hexacyanoferrate is produced in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sainsbury: Sodium hexacyanoferrate is not separately identified in the United Kingdom statistical classifications; therefore, the information is not available.

Offshore Oil and Gas Industry

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many obligations remain outstanding for drilling (a) firm and (b) contingent wells under the 11th and 12th United Kingdom offshore licensing rounds.

Mr. Eggar: There are 309 outstanding obligation wells from the 11th and 12th rounds of offshore licensing. Of these, 193 are firm obligations, and 116 conditional.

Shipbuilding Intervention Fund

Dr. Godman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Bury, South (Mr. Sumberg), of 21 April, Official Report, column 119, about the change of rules governing the shipbuilding intervention fund, which took effect from 1 April, if the grant to be paid at the maximum permitted level refers to vessels under construction on 1 April as well as those to be constructed after 1 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The concession applies only to those vessels for which offers of grant were made on or after 1 April.

Explosion, Liverpool

Mr. Parry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the recent explosion which occurred in Liverpool 8.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 20 April 1993]: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the gas explosion at 148 High Park street on 30 December 1992. This was dealt with by the police authorities and the Health and Safety Executive which, I understand, have decided to take no further action.

Economic Task Force

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will create an economic task force for the industrial areas of Hertfordshire and Bedfordshire.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 27 April 1993]: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so.

HEALTH

Myelograms

Mr. Godsiff: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many myelograms were conducted in the national health service in each year since 1989-90 and in the first six months of 1992-93.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally. The latest estimate of episodes involving myelogram procedures, held by the Department, for the year 1989-90 is 18,230. This figure includes radiculograms as well as myelograms.

Older Patients

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to monitor the NHS purchasing arrangements to identify whether there is discrimination against older patients.

Mr. Sackville: We have set in place mechanisms for monitoring purchasers' performance and ensuring that they are accountable to Ministers and to the public they serve. Health authorities as purchasers are expected to develop contracting arrangements which accurately reflect the needs of all of their resident population.

Contact Lenses

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received questioning the safety of contact lenses; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The College of Ophthalmologists wrote to the Chief Medical Officer to bring to his attention the increase in contact lens-induced microbial keratitis. The Department has met the representatives of the four eye care professional bodies: College of Ophthalmologists, British College of Optometrists, Association of Optometrists, and the Association of British Dispensing Opticians.

The working group chaired by the Department has drafted guidance for the eye care professions including a leaflet for patients. The Department has consulted the industry on the content of these drafts and a further meeting of the working party, together with representatives of the industry, will be held on 27 May with the aim of finalising the documents.

The Department will fund the publication of the guidance.

Nurses

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what guidance has been issued to health authorities and trusts on providing newly qualified nurses with information about national vacancies;

(2) what guidance has been issued to health authorities and trusts on the provision of careers counselling services for nursing students;

(3) what plans she has to establish schemes to enable newly qualified nurses who are unemployed to consolidate their education.

Mr. Sackville: Health authorities and trusts are aware that the Employment Service has details of national vacancies and that the English National Board runs a Resource and Careers Service Department.

Regional health authorities have chosen to manage the position of newly qualified nurses themselves by adopting a variety of approaches such as expansion of flexible working patterns, job sharing, short-term contracts and clearing house schemes.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the current state of discussions within the Nursing and Midwifery Staffs Negotiating Council regarding outstanding clinical grading appeals.

Mr. Sackville: The management side of the council awaits a response from the staff side to an offer on 31 March about a number of procedural changes aimed at significantly speeding up the appeals process. The management side made the proposals in support of the initiative requiring regional health authorities to draw up plans to clear outstanding appeals by 31 October 1993.

NHS Trusts

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many of the chairs and non-executive directors of NHS trusts had previous professional experience within the NHS before their appointment.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

Overseas Manufacturers (Inspection)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the annual cost of providing teams to inspect plants overseas which manufacture products for use in the NHS;

(2) how many people are employed by her Department to inspect plants overseas which manufacture medical products for use in the national health service.

Dr. Mawhinney: The equivalent of 6·7 full-time inspectors from the Department of Health and the Medicines Control Agency together were employed in the inspection of medical device and licensed medicinal product manufacturers overseas in 1992-93. The estimated cost—staff, travel and subsistence expenses—of providing these services was £595,000.

Dentistry

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many approvals were successfully processed by the Dental Estimates Board; and what was the value of that work approved for each month since April 1991;

(2) how many requests for prior approval were received by the Dental Estimates Board; and what was the value of that work which dentists wished to carry out, for each month since April 1991.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information in the table shows the number of applications for prior approval submitted by general dental practitioners in England and Wales to the Dental Practice Board for the period April 1991 to March 1993. We have no reason to believe that the DPB failed to process any applications made during this period. The value of the dental work for which these applications were made is not routinely collated by the DPB.

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total sum paid out to the general dental practitioners working within the national health service for each month since April 1991.

Respiratory Illness

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence is available to her Department on the rate of hospital admissions of people suffering from respiratory illness in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the north-west region.

Mr. Sackville: In 1989-90 the rate of hospital admissions of people suffering from respiratory illness in (a) England was 125 per 10,000 population and (b) in the north-west region was 153 per 10,000 population. Information relating to Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Proposed Hospital Mergers

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines or instructions she has given to the Guy's and St. Thomas's hospital trust on the subject of the proposal for merger of Guy's and St. Thomas's hospitals.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have asked the trust to carry out a thorough appraisal of the site options and to bring forward clear recommendations on future service configuration and siting by the autumn.

West Midlands Regional Health Authority

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the special circumstances under paragraph 9(3) of schedule 5 to the National Health Service Act 1977 which led her to make a compensation payment to the former chairman of the West Midlands regional health authority on the termination of his appointment.

Dr. Mawhinney: The decision to offer a compensation payment took account of the fact that Sir James Ackers resigned from the position of chairman of the West Midlands regional health authority 18 months before his term of office was due to expire; and that in his 10 years of service considerable progress was made, particularly in carrying out many major hospital developments; waiting lists have fallen dramatically and a record number of patients are now being treated.

Special Health Authority

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the revenue budget of each special health authority for 1992-93 and 1993-94; and what is the projected distribution of funds for those authorities for 1994-95.

Mr. Sackville: The revenue allocations for 1992-93 and 1993-94 are given in the table. Figures for 1994-95 cannot be projected at this early stage.

Special Health Authorities	1992-93 £ million	1993-94 £ million
Central Blood Laboratory Authority/ National Blood Authority (CBLA/ NBA)	3·718	6·152

Royal Marsden Hospital (Fulham and Sutton) (RMH)	35·685	37·234

Notes:

The figures for UKTSSA do not include money allocated for reimbursement of donor hospitals as the money does not contribute to the running costs of the organisation. The UKTSSA in effect manages the funds used to reimburse donor hospitals for maintaining cadavers prior to transplantation, for the Department.

The figures for 1992-93 are subject to validation by audit. The figures for 1993-94 are initial allocations, which will be added to by in-year adjustment, as appropriate.

The CBLA became the NBA with effect from 1 April 1993.

Junior Doctors (Working Hours)

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on progress towards reducing the hours worked by junior doctors.

Mr. Boyce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in achieving a reduction in junior doctors' hours.

Dr. Mawhinney: I will make an announcement shortly.

Listeria

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many deaths in the United Kingdom were caused by listeria in the last year for which figures are available; what comparable figures he has for other EC member states; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: In 1991, there were 10 certified deaths from listeriosis in the United Kingdom. There are no comparable figures available for other EC member states.

Medical Practitioners

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the implications of the European medical directive for the ability of British registered medical practitioners to practise elsewhere in the European Community; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Last year the European Commission expressed concern that the system in place in the United Kingdom for the mutual recognition of specialist qualifications might not comply with the 1975 European medical directives. A working group was established to review United Kingdom arrangements for specialist medical training in the light of these directives. The group has produced comprehensive recommendations and its report will be issued shortly for a period of consultation.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 9 March, Official Report, column 497, if she will place in the Library a copy of her Department's instructions on the valuation of assets for transfer to NHS trusts.

Mr. Sackville: This information is contained in the "Capital Charges and Trust Equivalent Manual", a copy of which will be placed in the Library.

St. Bartholomew's Hospital

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will consult the Lord Mayor of London and the City of London corporation about the future of the accident and emergency department at St. Bartholomew's hospital;

(2) If she will withdraw her proposal to close the accident and emergency department at St. Bartholomew's hospital following the bomb explosion in the City of London; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: North East Thames regional health authority has issued a consultation document on proposals for the closure of the accident and emergency department at St Bartholomew's hospital. The consultation process will proceed in the normal way and the North East Thames RHA would welcome comments on the proposals it contains.

Sight Tests

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what regulations govern access to free NHS sight tests for people who are deaf or hard of hearing.

Dr. Mawhinney: The same rules of entitlement to free national health service sight tests, as set out in section 38 of the NHS Act 1977, apply to people who are deaf or hard of hearing as to all other people.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Training

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to her answer of 3 March, Official Report, column 209, if she will give a breakdown of the cost per trainee of employment training.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 22 April 1993]: The breakdown is provided in the following table;

Breakdown of employment training unit costs £

Unit Cost elements	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92
Fees	2,576	2,399	2,929
Allowances	2,601	2,662	2,807
Head Office Costs	227	323	278
Total	5,404	5,384	6,014

Note: No comparable breakdown is available for the 1988-89 total.

DEFENCE

Absence Without Leave

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many serving members of (a) the Royal Navy, (b) the RAF and (c) the Army were discharged from the services, having gone absent without leave, in each year since 1986.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Personnel are not usually discharged from the services for going absent without leave. Records of any such discharges are not maintained centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Details of personnel dismissed following court martial or summary proceedings for offences involving absence without leave, however, are as follows:

Service	Year
	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991
Royal Navy/Royal Marines	18	18	21	16	20	14
Army	90	71	73	99	120	112
Royal Air Force	8	2	3	3	3	1

Notes:
1. More than one offence may have been committed in some cases and the sentence of dismissal may have been given because of the more serious offence; or perhaps as a result of numerous convictions at a trial, i.e., a totalling effect.
2. Figures for 1992 are not expected to be available until mid-June. My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member when the information is available.

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many serving members of (a) the Royal Navy, (b) the Royal Air Force and (c) the Army went absent without leave in each year since 1986.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Information in respect of reported cases of absence without leave is as follows:

Service	Year
	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991	1992	1993
Royal Navy/Royal Marines	28	64	77	90	71	74	76	14
Army	1,962	1,997	2,190	2,477	2,999	2,808	2,650	597
Royal Air Force	236	219	154	190	155	131	103	29

Notes:
1. The figures show the number of reported cases of absence without leave, which are not necessarily the same as the number of individuals who have gone absent without leave as some individuals may have gone absent more than once.
2. Figures for the Royal Navy/Royal Marines and Army show cases of personnel reported as absent for a period of seven days or more and for whom warrants for arrest have been issued.
3. Figures for the Royal Air Force show cases of personnel reported as absent for one day or more and may include instances where warrants for arrest have not yet been issued.
4. Figures for 1993 cover the period 1 January 1993 to 1 April 1993.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to ascertain the current location and deployment of military equipment and armaments exported under licence from the United Kingdom to the former republic of Yugoslavia since 1979.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is already United Kingdom policy to do so.

Nuclear Proliferation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representation his Department had at the seminar on nuclear proliferation held at Rhodes House, Oxford on 21 April.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My Department was represented at official level at the seminar "The plutonium legacy: nuclear proliferation out of control?" held in Oxford on 21 April 1993.

Aer Lingus Crash

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with representatives of the Irish Government concerning further information on the cause of the crash of the Aer Lingus Viscount in the Irish sea on 24 March 1968; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key performance targets have been set for 1993-94 for the chief executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

Mr. Aitken: The chief executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down is responsible for research to ensure that the United Kingdom armed forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical and biological weapons may be used against them. He has been set the following challenging key performance targets for 1993-94:

Improved delivery of the programme

1. In 1993-94 to achieve, within agreed timescales, 88 per cent. of the programme milestones agreed with customers.
2. In 1993-94 to complete 82 per cent. of the agreed programme assignments required by customers within the specified cost and to keep within CBDE's overall budget.
3. To sustain the CB research programme and the capability of CBDE to respond effectively to operational emergencies by maintaining scientific and technical staff to at least 70 per cent. of the total planned manpower.

More efficient use of resources

4. To increase the overall efficiency of CBDE by at least 2·5 per cent. of the net budget less capital works over the financial year 1993-94 with emphasis on improving output efficiency.
5. To continue the agreed Market Testing programme identified by the Feasibility/Scoping Study, including the preparation of the specification in 1993-94, to produce an in-house bid and to complete the process by 31 March 1995.

PRIME MINISTER

Gibraltar

Q9. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if he will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the status of Gibraltar in the EC.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to do so.

Local Authority Powers, Scotland

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Prime Minister (1) how many representations he has received proposing that some existing local authority powers be transferred away from Scottish local authorities to the Scottish Office;

(2) how many representations he has received to establish joint boards or non-elected bodies in Scotland to take over functions from directly elected Scottish local authorities.

The Prime Minister: I have received a number of representations on local government issues. I understand that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland has received some comments, in response to his consultation exercise on local government reform in Scotland, which advocate either the transfer of particular local authority functions to central Government, or the establishment of joint boards, or both.

Former Yugoslavia

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister how much food has been contributed by the United Kingdom to relieve humanitarian suffering in the former Yugoslavia; what proportion of food held in intervention under EC rules in the United Kingdom has been supplied; what action he is taking to persuade EC Heads of Government to ensure proper supplies of food to the former Yugoslavia are made; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom has provided £92·5 million for humanitarian relief in the former Yugoslavia. Of this some £48 million is our share of EC expenditure, the bulk of which has been spent on food aid. This is provided in cash to UN agencies and NGOs, which then purchase supplies that meet their operational requirements. Some EC intervention stocks have been used in the past, but none from the UK.

The UK has also contributed some £44·5 million in direct bilateral action, focusing on the supply of transport, equipment and expertise to central Bosnia where needs are greatest. We were the first country to respond to the United Nations inter-agency appeal of 25 March, donating a further £15 million, of which £8·5 million was in immediate cash contributions. We maintain a regular dialogue with other EC member states and have urged them to follow suit.

Former Soviet Union

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Prime Minister what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards securing international action to decommission nuclear power stations in the former Soviet Union where it is judged that their continued operation poses a hazard to the lives of the peoples of both eastern and western europe; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: At the Munich summit last July, the G7 countries gave their support to a multilateral programme of action designed to improve the safety of Soviet-designed reactors in the former Soviet Union and central and eastern Europe. The programme, subsequently endorsed by the G24 countries, included measures to bring about urgent operational and near-term technical improvements to the highest risk plants. The Government are playing a full part in supporting and implementing the programme both bilaterally and through the European Community's technical assistance programmes. We have contributed £8·25 million to the nuclear safety account recently set up at the European bank for reconstruction and development to finance urgent safety not covered by bilateral assistance programmes.

The longer-term future of the plants concerned is a matter for the Governments of the states concerned. However, the G7 programme also provided a basis for consideration of the future of these plants, within the framework of market-oriented energy strategies, by setting in train energy studies covering replacement sources of energy and their cost implications. The World bank, with the International Energy Agency, is in the process of completing these studies, in discussion with the countries concerned. The forthcoming Tokyo summit will review progress on the action programme as a whole, including how best to take forward the conclusions of these studies.

Water Charges

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Prime Minister, further to his statement in the House on 11 March, Official Report, column 1105, to the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Taylor), what is the timetable for the review of water charges in the south-west; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Responsibility for water charges rests with the Director General of Water Services. My right honourable and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment is now examining certain aspects of overall programmes to see if there is any room for manoeuvre. This requires analysis and it would be premature to say more at this stage.

Water Privatisation

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Prime Minister what implications the decision to abandon the privatisation of water in Northern Ireland has for the future of the water and sewerage services in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: None. The position in Northern Ireland is quite separate from that in Scotland. A decision for Scotland will be taken in the light of circumstances that apply to Scotland.

I refer the honourable Member to the reply I gave to the honourable Member for Dumbarton (Mr. McFall) on 27 April at column 848.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Television

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he will make provision for separate viewing facilities for right hon. and hon. Members to view Channel 4 and satellite television news.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I shall arrange for this matter to be considered by the Administration Committee.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Malawi

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations the Government have made under their good governance programme for the reform of Malawi's Bill of Rights, and the establishment of an independent judiciary and a fair judicial review process in Malawi.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 27 April at column 370 regarding the representations we have repeatedly made on human rights grounds. These included proposals to introduce habeas corpus legislation as well as urging a review of the powers of Malawi's traditional courts.

Somalia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the outcome of the recent conference held in Addis Ababa to discuss the future of Somalia; and if he will make available a full account of the proceedings of the conference.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The conference held in Addis Ababa on 15 to 27 March resulted in an agreement among the main Somali factions on the formation of a transitional Government. The factions also affirmed earlier agreements on a ceasefire and disarmament. We have not seen a full record of the proceedings, but I have placed in the Library of the House a copy of the text of the 27 March agreement signed by 15 faction representatives.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the systematic abuse of women in Somalia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have no information on any systematic abuse of women in Somalia. We received reports of the stoning to death of five women in Hargeisa, northern Somalia in January. My right hon. and noble friend Baroness Chalker of Wallasey, during a visit to Hargeisa on 7 February 1993, raised the issue with the authorities there, and was assured that action was being taken to arrest those responsible.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what visits have been made to Somalia in the last 12 months by representatives of the British Government; and if he will list the parts of Somalia visited.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) on 14 December 1992 at column 22. Since then, an FCO official visited Mogadishu, 16-17 January; an FCO official and an ODA official visited Mogadishu and Baidoa, 29-30 Janaury; my right hon. and noble friend Baroness Chalker of Wallasey visited Baidoa, Mogadishu and Hargeisa, 6-7 February; the British ambassador to Addis Ababa visited Hargeisa, 6-7 February; an FCO official and a member of the British high commission, Nairobi visited Mogadishu, Belet Huen and Baidoa, 2-4 March; and a member of the British high commission, Nairobi visited Mogadishu, 17-18 April.

China

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list (a) the total number and (b) the refusals for applications for entry clearance as students, in each of the last five years, from nationals of the People's Republic of China.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The total number of private student applications and the number of private student refusals, in each of the last five years, for nationals of the People's Republic of China is as follows:

	Applications	Refused	Appeals Received
1988	454	152	8
1989	1,357	466	136
1990	2,607	1,479	525
1991	2,894	2,346	760
1992	1,308	1,015	264

South Africa

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what aid has been given to each organisation directed to helping human rights groups in South Africa in each of the past three years.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: [holding answer 22 April 1993]: The information is as follows.

In addition, Britain has supplied experts to support Mr. Justice Goldstone's investigations into incidents of violence and we are providing £50,000 for a human rights colloquium to be held in South Africa in September to look at the role of the judiciary in upholding human rights and ensuring government under law. Our entire aid programme in South Africa of over £10 million in 1992-93 is aimed at assisting the country's non-white citizens to play their rightful role in the economy and future government of the country.

Cambodia

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the number of mine-clearing units operating under the UN mandate in Cambodia; and how many mines have been lifted as a result of those operations.

Mr. Goodlad [pursuant to his reply 22 April 1993]: We have received further information from our mission in Phnom Penh.

UNTAC has now redeployed its resources. As of 17 April, there were three international training teams and 20 supervisory teams operating in Cambodia. A total of 2,184 Khmer deminers, 51 Khmer supervisors, and 21 Khmer instructors had been trained. A further 32 deminers, 24 supervisors and 27 instructors were still undergoing training. Twenty-six platoons of trained Khmer deminers were operating under UN supervisory teams in Cambodia, while another six were operating under NGO auspices.

We continue to stress to UNTAC the importance of its mine clearance training activities to which we have contributed personnel.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Incomes

Ms Corston: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give Gini coefficients for the distribution of income at each stage of the tax benefit system 1977 to 1990, in the equivalised form adopted in Economic Trends No. 471, page 187 for (a) households with children only, (b) other households and (c) all households.

Mr. Nelson: The figures are given in the table.

Council Tax

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for each district council in Gloucestershire the number of appeals to the valuation officer by property owners against council tax banding; and how long he expects it to take for these appeals to be determined.

Mr. Nelson: As at 22 April, 6,125 proposals had been received by the listing officer responsible for district council areas in Gloucestershire. The division of this figure into individual district council areas is not yet available. As the number of appeals which will be made in Gloucestershire cannot yet be predicted it is not possible to determine the length of time it will take to deal with them.

Charities

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the amount in real terms that charities will gain from the changes announced in the Budget regarding payroll giving and gift aid in the years 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96.

Mr. Dorrell: The revenue cost of these measures will depend on take-up. But the cost of the Gift Aid change is estimated at £20 million in 1993-94, £30 million in 1994-95 and £30 million in 1995-96. The cost of the payroll giving change is estimated at £1 million each year.

Married Couples Allowances

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the additional revenue, at 1993 prices, resulting from leaving the married couples allowances unchanged in the financial years 1991-92 and 1992-93; and what estimate he has made of the additional revenue which will be generated in the financial years 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96.

Mr. Dorrel: The estimated direct revenue yield for each year compared with tax regimes in which the married couple's allowances had been increased in line with the statutory rules for indexation since 1990-91 are as follows:

Yield in a full year at 1993-94 prices

	£ million
1991-92	450
1992-93	600
1993-94	750

Equivalent estimates for 1994-95 and 1995-96 would depend on income levels, changes in the retail prices index, and other aspects of the tax regime for the future years.

European Bank for Reconstruction and Development

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the ways in which United Kingdom contributions to the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development have been spent to date.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Gentleman to my reply to the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown) on 19 April, Official Report, c. 249-50.

VAT (Fuel)

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the revenue from value added tax paid by charities on domestic fuel and power in real terms at 1993 prices, in the years 1994-95 and 1995-96.

Sir John Cope: In 1993 prices, we estimate that applying VAT to charities' non-business use of fuel and power will raise around £10 million in 1994-95 and around £25 million in 1995-96.

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received favouring his proposal to charge value added tax on supplies of fuel and power for domestic, residential and charity non-business use.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 26 April 1993]: My right hon. Friend has received a number of such representations. Among other things these support the need to use the tax system to help fulfil our Rio commitment, support the need to raise revenue to tackle the deficit and support the policy of doing this through indirect taxation rather than income tax.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 22 April, Official Report, column 180, what is his estimate of the annual revenue for value added tax on pensioners' payments of standing charges for gas and electricity when the rate is (a) 8 per cent. and (b) 17·5 per cent.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 27 April 1993]: Table 4.1 of the FSBR provides estimates of the total revenue effect of applying VAT to domestic fuel and power. Applying VAT to pensioners' payments of standing charges is estimated to raise around 3 per cent. of this total, or around £30 million in 1994-95 and £70 million in 1995-96. As my right hon. Friend the Chancellor made clear in his Budget speech, extra help will be given through benefits to those pensioners and others on low incomes who are dependent on income-related benefits.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Fire Services

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by each fire service actual expenditure for 1992-93 against standard spending assessments 1992-93 and planned spending for 1993-94 against standard spending assessments 1993-94.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Neither outturn expenditure for 1992-93 nor local authority service budgets for 1993-94 are yet available centrally. English authorities' latest budget estimates for fire and civil defence in 1992-93, and the fire and civil defence components of their standard spending assessments for that year, are given in the table.

Nuclear Materials

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what powers are available to the police to apprehend and arrest individuals attempting unlawfully to sell nuclear materials in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The police have the power to arrest without warrant in relation to an offence of dealing with nuclear material in contravention of subsection (2) of section 2 of the Nuclear Material (Offences) Act 1983. In certain circumstances, they may also be able to arrest for offences under the Theft Act 1968.

Crime, Greater Manchester

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many arrests there were in the Greater Manchester area during the past year for (a) burglaries and (b) crimes of violence.

Mr. Jack: The information is not collected centrally.

Police National Network

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 21 April, Official Report, column 109, what contract award procedures applied in the case of the short-listing for the police national network.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The procurement of the police national network follows the negotiated procedures set out in article 11(2)(c) of the EC services directive, which comes into force on 1 July.

Wheel Clamping

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many complaints he has received about wheel clamping in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the Greater Manchester area.

Mr. Jack: Since 1 April 1992, the Home Office has received 258 written complaints about wheel clamping on private land, both directly from members of the public and from hon. Members on behalf of constituents. Of this total, 15 can be identified as originating from the Greater Manchester area.

In the same period, the Home Office has received 20 written complaints about wheel clamping on the public highway, which currently takes place only in London. We are not aware of any complaints from the Greater Manchester area on this issue.

The Home Office issued a consultation document on wheel clamping on private land on 23 February. Comments should reach the Home Office by 30 May.

Primates

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in establishing a register of primates kept in member states in order to minimise the importation of primates for research from outside the Community.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Llwyd) on 16 March at col. 176.

HMP Blakenhurst

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what inquiries into the antecedents of Mr. T. Don Hutto were made before awarding the contract to manage Her Majesty's prison Blakenhurst to UKDS; in what way the present departmental inquiry into Mr. Hutto differs; and if the results of the inquiries will be made public.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Ian Dunbar to Mr. Tony Blair, dated April 1993:

In the temporary absence of Mr. Lewis, the Director General, from the office the Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about Mr. Hutto.

As is standard practice before awarding any prison managment contracts, a range of enquiries was made about the Corrections Corporation of America and to a limited extent about individuals within it; (those who are to be running a prision are subject to separate, more detailed checks). The purpose of the present inquiry is to look into specific allegations which have been made against Mr. Hutto and the conclusions of the exercise will be announced.

Police Statistics

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all the national and regional police bodies in England and Wales giving (a) the purpose of the body, (b) the date established, (c) the headquarters' location, (d) the name and rank of chief officer, (e) the body to whom the chief officer reports or is accountable, (f) the number of police officers employed, (g) the number of civilian staff employed and (h) the cost of the body in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I will write to my hon. Friend.

HMP Manchester

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will detail the procedures for firms to re-bid on cost, after all the original bids have been received, for the contract to manage Her Majesty's prison Manchester.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Ian Dunbar to Mr. Tony Blair, dated April 1993:

In the temporary absence of Mr. Lewis, the Director General, from the office the Home Secretary has asked me to write to you in reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the procedures for firms to re-bid on costs.

There are at present no such procedures in place; in the event that a re-tender is required, tenderers will be advised accordingly, and the procedures detailed.

Any unsolicited re-tenders received after the return date will be considered as late tenders, and may not be included in the evaluation.

Bogus Marriages

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his most recent estimate of the number of bogus marriages solemnised in the United Kingdom during the most recent 12-month period for which figures are available.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The number of bogus marriages identified in the course of enforcing the immigration law is not collected centrally. More generally, the incidence of bogus marriages is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now place in the Library full information arising from the 1992 British crime survey.

Mr. Jack: Analysis of the 1992 British crime survey is still in progress. Full results will be presented in a series of reports. The first two will be published in the summer and will cover: crime levels, the reporting of crime and the risks of crime; and contacts with and attitudes to the police. Copies will be placed in the Library in the usual way.

Young Offenders Centre, Feltham

Mr. Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the organisations which have placed a bid to run the educational service at Her Majesty's young offenders and remand centre, Feltham; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Ian Dunbar to Mr. Alan Keen, dated 29 April 1993:

In the temporary absence of Mr. Lewis, the Director General, from the office, the Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about those bidding to provide future education services at Her Majesty's Young Offender Institution and Remand Centre, Feltham.

I would refer you to the reply given to the hon. Member for Sherwood, Mr. Tipping, on 14 January, col 798, a copy of which is enclosed. The London Borough of Hounslow and Hounslow Borough College have agreed to continue to provide education services at HM Young Offender Institution and Remand Centre, Feltham until 31 August 1993. Following the recent judgment of Mr. Justice Ogden in the case of Kenny and Woodroffe v South Manchester College, the Prison Service expects to reach a decision shortly on how to proceed with tendering for those prison establishments, for which contracts for the future provision of education services have not yet been placed.

Mr. Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to the report into Her Majesty's young offenders and remand centre, Feltham, carried out by Anthony Scrivener QC and his team on behalf of the Howard League; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Ian Dunbar to Mr Alan Keen, dated 29 April 1993:

In the temporary absence of Mr. Lewis, the Director General, the Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the Howard League report on Feltham Remand Centre and Young Offender Institution.

The report covers a wide range of matters and makes many recommendations. The Howard League have identified several areas of concern and steps have already been taken to improve conditions at Feltham and to reduce the risk of suicide by the young offenders held there.

The Governor of Feltham is studying the Howard League's report in detail, along with other members of the Prison Service Working Group on Feltham. Its terms of reference are to support and facilitate the enhancement of the regime at Feltham Remand Centre; to consider the plan for its long-term future; and to make recommendations.

There will be a full response to the Howard League recommendations when the Feltham Working Group publishes its report later this year.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Public Bodies

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress has been made with the invitation contained in the guide issued jointly by the Office of Public Service and Science and Her Majesty's Treasury to consider making the interests of members of non-departmental public bodies a matter of public record; and if he will list all declarations already made.

Mr. Waldegrave: Such action is at the discretion of Departments, and information on declarations made is not collected centrally.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Indemnity Undertakings

Mr. Temple-Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many indemnity undertakings were given by Departments under section 16 of the National Heritage Act 1980 for the six months ending 31 March; and what was the value of contingent liabilities in respect of such undertakings given at any time and which remain outstanding as at 31 March.

Mr. Brooke: The information requested is as follows:

In the six months to 31 March 1993 the following undertakings to indemnify were given by the relevant departments for items on loan to national and non-national institutions:

	Number
Department of National Heritage	501
Scottish Office Education Department	45
Welsh Office Education Department	26
Department of Education for Northern Ireland	9

The value of contingent liabilities in respect of such undertakings given at any time and outstanding at 31 March 1993 are:

Department of National Heritage	1,187,879,848
Scottish Office Education Department	133,108,056
Welsh Office Education Department	32,937,662
Department of Education for Northern Ireland	2,994,719

Windsor Castle

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what progress has been made in deciding the reconstruction strategy for Windsor castle.

Mr. Brooke: A thorough examination has now been carried out of the area damaged by the fire on 20 November, which extends to nine principal rooms and 103 additional rooms. A large expanse of roof has been destroyed. However, almost all the walls, the structure of the windows, and much of the floors of the principal rooms are still sound. And damage to the interiors varies greatly from room to room. Some have been almost totally destroyed; others have suffered only limited damage to the interior decoration of the walls and ceilings. Virtually all the furniture and paintings were in store at the time of the fire and can be returned to the rooms, some of which were specifically designed to house them.

The reconstruction strategy must clearly take account of the extent of the damage in the various state apartments. In those rooms where significant internal decoration remains, it would not be right to complete the work of the fire by destroying what remains: restoration to the condition before the fire is clearly appropriate. But, where little or nothing of the former interior has survived, there is much more scope for considering modern redesign, for putting a late 20th century stamp in this area of the castle of which we and future generations can be proud.

It has therefore been agreed by Her Majesty that some rooms—the grand reception room, for example, and the crimson and green drawing rooms—will be restored to their former glory. Modern techniques may be used where they will not impinge on the visual impact of the rooms; and, where practicable, damaged elements will be repaired and significant fragments that have been saved will be reused. Throughout, we will be seeking to combine faithful restoration with value for money.

In other rooms, such as the private chapel where the fire began and the state dining room, there will be the opportunity to start anew and give expression to the best of modern design.

In arriving at this broad approach, the Government and the royal household have had the benefit of consultations with the chairman of the Royal Fine Art Commission, the president of the RIBA, and the chairman of English Heritage in their personal capacities. I am indebted to them for their assistance.

Her Majesty is very conscious of the potential cost to the taxpayer of that work. She has decided to open, to the public, parts of Buckingham palace, housing important items of the royal collection in August and September, starting this summer. The income from charges for entry, together with the proceeds from charges to be raised for entry to the precincts of Windsor castle from next year, will be devoted to the reconstruction of the fire-damaged areas.

Some decisions regarding design have yet to be taken and detailed specifications are still to be drawn up. And any recommendations in the report on fire prevention strategy which will be presented to me by Sir Alan Bailey next month will need to be considered. However, early estimates suggest that the reconstruction of the fire-damaged areas will cost £30 to £40 million over a five-year period. Some 70 per cent. of that cost is expected to be met by proceeds from visitor charges at Buckingham palace and Windsor. The remainder will be found from within the present level of funding provided by grant-in-aid from the Department of National Heritage to the royal household. The contribution from the Exchequer, therefore, is expected to average £2 to £2½ million annually at current prices over the five years.

The royal household will now proceed to prepare a detailed programme of work. Full consultation with relevant bodies will be carried out on the proposals once they have been worked up.

What is proposed represents an approach to the reconstruction of Windsor castle that blends restoration with redesign. The burden on the taxpayer is significantly reduced, due to Her Majesty's proposals to allow greater public access to Buckingham palace and to devote the proceeds from admission charges at Buckingham palace and Windsor to the reconstruction work.

I am in no doubt that this will be widely welcomed, both in this House and beyond. I believe the way now to be clear for that work to proceed with support throughout the nation.

Angling

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment his Department had made of the total number of anglers in Great Britain.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 27 April 1993]: The 1990 general household survey found that 6 per cent. of those surveyed in Great Britain, aged 16 or over, participated in angling in the 12 months before interview. This suggests that there are about 2,670,000 anglers.

WALES

Labour Statistics

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the latest estimates of the number of (a) full-time and (b) part-time (i) males and (ii) females in employment in (1) manufacturing, (2) metal goods, engineering and vehicles, (3) other manufacturing, (4) construction, (5) distribution, (6) transport and communications, (7) banking and financial and (8) other services, in 1991, 1989, 1987 and 1983 within the areas covered by the valleys initiative; and what percentage changes in each category level occurred in 1991 as compared with 1989, 1987 and 1983.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested on employees in employment within the areas covered by the valleys initiative is given in the following tables:

Home Improvements

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his oral statement on 1 April, Official Report, column 513, how many homes have been improved through enveloping and repairs in each of the last five years, and at what public cost within the area covered by the valleys initiative; and how many homes, and what public expenditure he estimates will be spent during each of the next five years.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The numbers and cost of homes improved through enveloping and block/group repairs over the last five years are set out in the following table:

Year	Numbers	Cost £ million
1988-89	2,656	14·343
1989-90	2,749	12·716
1990-91	1,622	14·117
1991-92	367	3·943
1992-93	478	4·788
Totals	7,872	49·907

For 1993-94 I have made almost £3·3 million available specifically for area renewal schemes in the valleys area. Activity beyond 1993-94 will depend on the priority which local authorities give to area based renewal within the resources available to them.

The figures shown are exclusive of mandatory home renovation grant activity for individual homes.

Pharmacies

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total number of pharmacies in Wales; and how many dispense fewer than 2,000 prescriptions per year.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In each month on average, for the 12 months ending 28 February 1993, there were 708 pharmacies in Wales, of which 124 dispensed fewer than 2,000 prescriptions.

Urban Programme

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 20 October 1992, Official Report, columns 283-84, what progress he had made in allocating the £2·5 million under the urban programme; what allocations have been announced and on what the money has been spent; and what proposals he has for the expenditure of the residual amount.

Mr. David Hunt: Local authorities were informed in January of the successful projects receiving assistance from the urban programme in 1992-93 under the special allocation of £2·5 million to help promote the development of the areas affected by the colliery review. A further £700,000 has also been made available in 1993-94 to continue the developments started in 1992-93.

Ambulance Services

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many ambulances have been operated by each health authority in Wales in each year since 1979.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is not available centrally.

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of emergency calls to the ambulance service in each country in Wales in each year since 1987 was answered within (a) eight minutes and (b) 14 minutes.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Until 31 March 1991 standard ambulance response times in Wales were 50 per cent. in eight minutes and 95 per cent. in 20 minutes. Revised classifications of ambulance service—tied to density of population served—came into effect on 1 April 1991:

	50 per cent.	95 per cent.
Urban	7 mins	14 mins	South Glamorgan
Rural	8 mins	18 mins	Clwyd, Gwent, Mid and West Glamorgan
Sparsely populated	8 mins	21 mins	East Dyfed, Gwynedd, Pembrokeshire and Powys

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 20 October 1992, Official Report, columns 283-84, what progress he has made in allocating to the Welsh Development Agency (a) £16 million for land reclamation and urban property development, (b) £5 million for business support services and (c) £10 million for urban renewal joint venture schemes; how much expenditure under each of these heads has been announced and for what purposes; and what proposals he has for the expenditure of the residue.

Mr. David Hunt: Provision for the Welsh Development Agency's 18-month programme in the coal review areas announced last October has been made within the overall budget totals set for the agency, the 1993-94 figures for which I announced on 10 December. The programme embraces a wide range of projects. I understand that the agency has made good progress in implementation of the programme and expects to achieve the target outturn by the end of the current financial year.

Local Government

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he had made of the effect on the populations of Coychurch Lower, Ewenny, Saint Bride's Major and Wick of a transfer of those communities into the South Glamorgan health authority in respect of access to the Princess of Wales hospital in Bridgend.

Mr. David Hunt: The function of health authorities is to purchase health care from providers on behalf of their resident populations. These providers need not necessarily be within the boundaries of the health authority, and often are outside those boundaries.

As a provider of health care, Bridgend and district NHS trust is well placed to offer services to a number of health authority purchasers, as well as fund-holding general practitioners. Purchasing decisions will be informed by GP, community health council and patient preference rather than administrative boundaries.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the distances between (a) Wick, (b) Saint Bride's Major, (c) Ewenny and (d) Coychurch and (i) Bridgend and (ii) Barry using the shortest route by A and/or B roads.

Mr. David Hunt: The approximate distances are as follows:

	Miles
	Bridgend	Barry
Wick to	6·0	13·6
St. Bride's Major to	3·4	16·2
Ewenny to	2·1	17·0
Coychurch Lower to	2·4	17·9

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the effect on children living and attending primary schools in Coychurch Lower, Ewenny, Saint Bride's Major and Wick of a transfer of those communities to the Vale of Glamorgan unitary authority in respect of access to comprehensive schools in the proposed Bridgend unitary authority.

Mr. David Hunt: Responsibility for the admission of pupils to local education authority maintained schools rests with local authorities, and that responsibility will be unchanged under any proposals for the reorganisation of local government. Admission authorities are required not to discriminate against pupils living outside their areas in implementing their admissions policies.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the distances, by A and/or B roads, from the place, closest by road, in (a) the community of Wick, (b) the community of Saint Bride's Major, (c) the community of Ewenny and (d) the community of Coychurch Lower to (i) Bridgend and (ii) Barry.

Mr. David Hunt: The approximate distances are as follows:

	Miles
	Bridgend	Barry
The community of Wick to	5·1	13·3
The community of St. Bride's Major to	2·3	15·3
The community of Ewenny to	1·0	15·4
The community of Coychurch Lower to	1·3	16·2

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what specific criteria he used to determine that the communities of Coychurch Lower, Ewenny, Saint Bride's Major and Wick should be transferred from the borough of Ogwr to the Vale of Glamorgan under his plans for unitary authorities.

Mr. David Hunt: In considering the boundaries of the proposed unitary authorities I took account of the principles set out in the consultation paper, "The Structure of Local Government in Wales" which I published in June 1991 and, in particular:

i. local authority boundaries should, as far as possible, reflect and strengthen existing community loyalties; and

ii. local public services should be of high quality, and delivered efficiently, economically and effectively.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the effect on the communities of Coychurch Lower, Ewenny, Saint Bride's Major and Wick of a transfer of those communities into the Vale of Glamorgan in respect of access to the library facilities in the town of Bridgend.

Mr. David Hunt: The education, leisure and culture sub-group of the structures group of the WCCLG considered the provision of library services under a structure of unitary authorities.

A copy of their report has been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the length of time it takes for a resident of the communities of (a) Coychurch Lower, (b) Ewenny, (c) Saint Bride's Major and (d) Wick to travel by public transport to (i) Bridgend and (ii) Barry.

Mr. David Hunt: These are matters which were put to me when I visited the area last Friday.

Farmers (EC Aid)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what provision he is making to improve the service to farmers requiring maps in order to make applications for European Community financial assistance before the 14 May deadline; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Farmers may obtain advice and maps from the Ordnance Survey and their agents. In addition, to ease congestion at these outlets, I have made special arrangements for farmers to have access to maps held by my Department to help them complete their applications. I have asked local authorities and other bodies to provide access to maps they hold. Special arrangements have also been made with the Ordnance Survey so that the Welsh Office and ADAS can sell maps to farmers.

In the past week I have also informed livestock producers that if accurate details of forage areas cannot be established accurately by 15 May they should submit this year an estimate in hectares on a field-by-field basis. Provided that estimate proves to be either accurate or an under-statement of the area, they will not be penalised subsequently. I have therefore recommended that they estimate conservatively should they need to do so.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what provision he has made to meet farmers and farming organisations to discuss the revised guidelines for European Community assistance, and to set up explanatory seminars with (a) a ministerial presence and (b) official presence only.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department has gone to considerable lengths to inform the farming industry of the changes to the various premium schemes, including the introduction of the integrated administration and control system (IACS), arising from the reforms of the common agricultural policy. Between January and March senior officials ran 10 seminars throughout Wales to explain the new rules and grant application procedures. They have also, upon invitation, addressed meetings of both local and national organisations with an interest in the industry.

Special additional arrangements have been made to advise farmers about the completion of their IACS returns. I have established free-phone helplines in the divisional offices of my Agricultural Department which have received over 10,000 calls. I also commissioned ADAS to undertake an awareness campaign and provide on the spot training at markets and places where farmers gather throughout Wales. By Friday 23 April, in conjunction with my officials they had held some 150 such events, attended by approximately 6,500 farmers. These will continue right up to the deadline of 15 May and concentrate more on form filling in working groups and clinics. I have participated in several of these clinics in various parts of Wales. I shall also be meeting representatives of farming unions next week.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensions

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what estimates he has made, on the basis of assumptions used in "Options for Equality in State Pension Age", assuming a unified pension age of 60 years, of the rate of increase in pension above price inflation which would be consistent with the combined national insurance contribution rate in 2035 being 19·4 per cent., and of the equivalent rate of single pension;

(2) what estimates he has made, on the basis of assumptions used in "Options for Equality in State Pension Age", assuming a unified state pension age of 65 years, of the rate of increase in pension above price inflation which would be consistent with the combined national insurance contribution rate 2035 being 19·4 per cent. and of the equivalent rate of single pension;

(3) what estimates he has made, on the basis of assumptions used in "Options for Equality in State Pension Age", assuming a unified pension age of 63 years, of the rate of increase in pension above price inflation which would be consistent with the combined national insurance contribution rate in 2035 being 19·4 per cent., and of the equivalent rate of single pension;

(4) what estimates he has made, on the basis of assumptions used in "Options for Equality in State Pension Age", assuming that current state pension ages are maintained, of the rate of increase in pension above price inflation which would be consistent with the combined national insurance contribution rate in 2035 being 19·4 per cent., and of the equivalent rate of single pension.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is in the table.

Pension Age	Rate of Basic Pension in 2035 consistent with a combined Class 1 NI contribution rate of 19·4 per cent. (1993-94 benefit rates) £	Required rate of annual increase in pension above price inflation Percentage

Unified age of 60	52·90	−0·1
Unified age of 63	61·10	0·2
Unified age of 65	68·15	0·5

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish estimates, on the basis of assumptions used in "Options for Equality in State Pension Age", on the effect on national insurance contribution rates in 2015, 2025, 2035 and 2045 of equalising state pension age at (a) 60 years, (b) 63 years and (c) 65 years, giving figures separately for (i) earnings-uprating of pensions and national insurance thresholds and (ii) price-uprating.

Miss Widdecombe: Available information is given in the tables. Figures for 2015 and 2045 are not available.

Invalidity Benefit

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in what ways the procedures have been changed for people who were receiving invalidity benefit and are found to be no longer eligible.

Mr. Scott: No changes have been made to the entitlement conditions or to the procedures which follow an adjudication officer's decision that someone is no longer entitled to invalidity benefit.

Voluntary Work

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the effect of voluntary work undertaken in excess of 24 hours a week by an unemployed person who can demonstrate that he or she is looking for work on the person's benefit entitlement.

Mr. Burt: There is no legislation limiting the amount of voluntary work an unemployed person may undertake. An unemployed person who is engaged in unpaid voluntary work may continue to receive benefits provided he continues to satisfy the conditions of entitlement. These are that a person must be available for work, and must actively seek work each week.

Current legislation allows volunteers 24 hours' notice in which to make the necessary arrangements to give up or rearrange voluntary responsibilities before taking up an offer of employment. In recognition of the value the Government place on voluntary work the Secretary of State announced on 28 April a proposal to extend this period of notice to 48 hours.

Fuel Bills

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what further proposals he has to lessen the effect on people on low incomes of the imposition of value added tax on gas and electricity bills.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures he is taking to ensure that those who are chronically ill receive additional payments to cover the cost of value added tax on fuel.

Mr. Burt: In his Budget statement the Chancellor said that there would be extra help for poorer pensioners and those on low incomes. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will be announcing the details of this extra help in the autumn.

Claimants Abroad

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he has as to the payment of social security benefits to individuals who died in the Waco fire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The administration of benefits is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Harry Greenway, dated 28 April 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State asking what information he has as to the payment of social security benefits to individuals who died in the Waco fire.

A check of the Departmental Central Index has shown that five people had current or recent claims to benefit whilst in the Waco Compound of the Davidian Cult. Of those five people four are feared to have died in the fire and the benefits involved were Income Support, Child Benefit and Retirement Pension.

The above information has emerged from our preliminary enquiries. I can assure you, however, that the individual circumstances of each case will be fully investigated to establish the correct entitlement in each case and we are reviewing procedures to prevent payment to those living abroad who do not qualify for benefit. I would also like to say that the payments of benefit to persons overseas are not made by girocheque or order book and that legitimate payments to such persons would be made by the Agency's Overseas Branch Directorate by payable order through a bank account or by automated credit transfer.

I hope that you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how long those in the Waco compound who were receiving social security benefits had been out of the United Kingdom;

(2) how many people in the Waco compound were in receipt of benefits from his Department; and what benefits they were receiving.

Mr. Burt: The administration of benefits is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Donald Dewar, dated 28 April 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking (i) how many people in the Waco compound were in receipt of benefits from his Department; and what benefits they were receiving and (ii) how long those in the Waco compound who were receiving Social Security benefits had been out of the United Kingdom.

A check of the Departmental Central Index has shown that five people had current or recent claims to benefit whilst in the Waco Compound of the Davidian Cult. The benefits involved were Income Support, Child Benefit, Invalidity Benefit, Disability Living Allowance, Industrial Injuries Benefit and Retirement Pension.

I am unable, until my investigations are complete, to say how long each individual had been outside the United Kingdom as none of the absences from this country had been reported to the Department's Overseas Benefits Directorate (OBD), who are responsible for considering benefit entitlement for most people who leave the United Kingdom. I can, however, say that of the five people mentioned, one ceased to receive benefit in February 1993 and another ceased to receive benefit in March 1993. I can also say that the payments of benefit to persons overseas are not made by girocheque or order book and that legitimate payments to such persons would be made by OBD by payable order through a bank account, or by automated credit transfer.

The above information has emerged from our preliminary enquiries. I can assure you, however, that the individual circumstances of each case will be fully investigated to establish the correct entitlement in each case and we are reviewing procedures to prevent payment to those living abroad who do not qualify for benefit.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Visually Impaired Claimants

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action he has taken, or will be taking, to improve access to the benefits system for people who are visually impaired by providing more official information in large print, Braille, or on tape; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The provision of benefit information is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Alfred Morris, dated 28 April 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security regarding the provision of benefit information in large print, Braille, or on tape.

The Benefits Agency has a contract with RNIB to provide information for visually impaired people in Braille. Last year 28 different leaflets were translated, and 450 eye hospitals were mailed with the Braille version of FB19 Social Security benefits—A guide for blind and partially sighted people. This year we are working to extend the distribution of material further and translate yet more leaflets.

The Agency also produces the publication FB19 in both large print and as an audio tape. In the year 1992-93, 80,000 booklets and 40,000 tapes of this publication were mailed to visually impaired people. A similar level of activity is planned for this current year.

A number of services are available from the Benefit Enquiry Line for visually impaired customers. These include a forms completion service in Braille and large print.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this letter will be placed in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Sickness and Invalidity Benefit

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many individuals are currently claiming invalidity benefit in (a) the county of Cleveland and (b) in the boroughs of Middlesbrough, Stockton, Hartlepool and Langbaurgh.

Mr. Scott: The administration of invalidity benefit is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Ms Marjorie Mowlam, dated 28 April 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many individuals are currently claiming Invalidity Benefit in (a) the County of Cleveland and (b) in the Boroughs of Middlesbrough, Stockton, Hartlepool and Langbaurgh.

The information requested is not readily available and can be obtained only at disproportinate cost. However, the latest statistics available from the Agency's North Tees District and South Tees District Offices, which include the areas concerned in the question, show a total of 27,777 customers in receipt of Invalidity Benefit. As Agency District boundaries do not correspond with county or borough boundaries this figure includes some customers living in areas other than those listed in the question.

Listed below are the figures available for each Office within the North Tees District and South Tees District.

Number of recipients currently in receipt of Invalidity Benefit

	Number
North Tees District
Stockton-on-Tees District Office	7,545
Hartlepool Branch Office	5,368
South Tees District
Middlesbrough District Office (including Tees South Branch Office)	7,108
Easton Branch Office	3,355
Redcar Branch Office	4,401

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to his letter of 15 March to the Minister of State regarding retirement age for receiving invalidity benefit.

Mr. Scott: My noble Friend Lord Henley wrote to the hon. Member on 26 April. He apologised for the delay.

Benefits

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the data used in the construction of figure 7 in the 1993 Social Security departmental report on percentages of different types of benefits paid in the broad groups of beneficiaries in 1992-93; and what were the equivalent figures for each year since 1976.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is in the table.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Commonwealth Development Corporation

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in which year the additional resources for the Commonwealth Development Corporation announced in November 1992 will be made available; whether the money will be drawn on the existing Overseas Development Administration's budget; and whether it will be classified as official development assistance.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In November 1992 we announced that certain changes in the financing arrangements for CDC would result in up to £50 million of additional resources being made available to the overseas aid effort as a whole. Part of this arises from the decision to waive interest due on outstanding aid loans from 1 April 1994, which would otherwise accrue to the Consolidated Fund. This will increase the amount of self-generated funds retained within CDC.

We also agreed that CDC should seek to borrow from funds available for some Caribbean basin initiative countries, known as "936" funds, provided the borrowing terms meet the Government's normal criteria.

Decisions about the level of new loans from the aid budget for the CDC are made annually. CDC loans to borrowers overseas are not sufficiently concessional to qualify as offical development assistance. Equity investments in developing countries under existing definitions do count as official development assistance.

Aid

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of British aid was spent on primary health care, nutrition, basic education, family planning, safe water and sanitation in 1990, 1991 and 1992; and how much in cash terms would need to have been spent in those years in order to increase the amount spent on those basic needs to 20 per cent. of official development assistance.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information for 1990 and 1991 is in the table. Figures for 1992 are not yet available. More detailed information on spending within individual sectors is not readily available. Individual projects may be targeted at more than one sector and area. Equally, projects not covered in the sectors listed may have an impact on basic needs.

Sector	1990 £000	1991 £000
Education	103,098	114,141
Health and Population (including Nutrition and family planning)	39,066	45,319
Water and Sanitation	22,099	24,966

As percentage of bilateral aid allocable by sector[1]	29	30

[1] Bilateral aid which is not allocable by sector includes programme aid, debt relief, humanitarian assistance, and loans to the Commonwealth Development Corporation.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of its official development assistance the United Kingdom spent in Sub-Saharan Africa in 1990; and what was the increase each year in percentage terms, giving the figures for (a) bilateral aid, (b) multilateral aid and (c) in total.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information requested for 1990 and 1991 is set out in the tables. Figures for 1992 are not yet available.

	(i) Total Net oda	(ii) Allocable Bilateral oda to Sub-Sahara Africa	(ii) as a per cent. of (i)	(iii) Multilateral Aid to [1] Africa	(iii) as a per cent. of (i)	(ii) plus (iii) as a per cent. of (i)
	£ million	£ million	Per cent.	£ million	Per cent.	Per cent.

1991	1,814	428	23·6	n/a	—	—

n/a = Not yet available.

[1] The figures given are estimated by ODA Statistics Department using data provided by the Development Assistance Committee of the OECD on the spending patterns of multilateral agencies, and United Kingdom contributions to multilateral organisations. They refer to all Africa; it is not possible to dis-aggregate Sub-Saharan Africa.

Allocable net bilateral oda to Sub-Saharan Africa increased by over 42 per cent. between 1990 and 1991. As a percentage of total net oda the figure for allocable bilateral oda to Sub-Saharan Africa for 1991 represented an incrase of some 18 per cent. over that for 1990.

Somalia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what British assistance is being given to the formation of police forces in Somalia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have informed the UN, EC and other bilateral donors that we are ready to help in the re-establishment of an indigenous police force in Somalia. The UN is currently developing a plan. As soon as it is available we shall consider what form our assistance might take. Meanwhile, we have appointed a consultant to undertake an assessment of emergency rehabilitation needs in the north-west, including the requirements for the development of police forces in the region.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what efforts have been made to involve women's groups in the reconstruction of Somalia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. and noble Friend Baroness Chalker of Wallasey met representatives of women's groups when she visited Somalia last September and again in February. She encouraged them to play a full role in Somalia's rehabilitation and reconstruction. Since, then, women's groups have played an active role in the political reconciliation process. The Addis reconciliation conference of 12 to 27 March 1993 agreed that women should be represented on the proposed interim national council. The UN's relief and rehabilitation plan for 1993 gives priority to activities designed to involve and assist women.

Sudan

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what specific assistance has been given by (a) the Government and (b) the EC to Sudan since January 1992.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Since January 1992, we have committed over £13 million in bilateral humanitarian assistance to Sudan. In the same period, we have provided almost £0.8 million in residual payments following the termination of the bilateral development aid programme in January 1991. In addition, since April 1991, almost £0.7 million has been disbursed through the joint funding scheme to support the work of British NGOs in Sudan.

Since January 1992, the EC has committed over £61 million—United Kingdom share about £10 million—in food and other emergency assistance to Sudan. Figures are not available for EC disbursement on development projects, but no new development projects have been approved since 1990.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment the Government have made of the adequacy of medical supplies to Sudan; and what obstacles there are to the adequacy of supplies to that country.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Our bilateral development assistance programme to Sudan was terminated in 1991. We are not therefore now involved in considering the regular provision of medical supplies to the Government of Sudan and we have made no assessment of the national availability of such supplies.

Since January 1992, we have committed about £563,000 in humanitarian assistance funds and, in 1992-93, almost £52,000 from the joint funding scheme, in support of health care activities run by British NGOs in Sudan.

Least-developed Countries

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government have signed the Paris declaration and the United Nations programme of action for the least-developed countries; and what is the Government's policy towards recommendations on the amounts donors should spend on aid to the least-developed countries.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Government joined the international consensus in adopting the Paris declaration and the United Nations programme of action for the least developed countries. There are a number of different aid targets set out in the programme of action. We reaffirmed our commitment to the target of 0·15 per cent. of GNP for aid to the least developed, but we did not subscribe to any timetable for reaching it.

Forestry Aid

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will undertake a review of the United Kingdom's assistance to forestry aid projects in developing countries.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We routinely monitor and review all our projects. We have recently completed an evaluation of six forestry projects, the lessons from which are being applied to our current programmes.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Potato Marketing Board

4. Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from potato growers in Lancashire about the effects of the abolition of the Potato Marketing Board.

Mr. Curry: We have received representations through three hon. Members expressing support for the continuation of the PMB and one directly from a potato grower who favours abolition.

Agricultural Wages Board

6. Mr. McFall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the future of the Agricultural Wages Board.

Mr. Gummer: The board is due to be reviewed this year as part of the periodic review of all non-departmental public bodies.

Surplus Food

16. Mr. Williams O'Brien: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what changes he has considered to the distribution of surplus EC food; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I am reviewing all aspects of the scheme and will make an announcement soon.

Hill Farms

19. Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of hill farms generated a net farm income below the annual average for industrial earnings in 1991-92.

Mr. Curry: Net farm income is not a measure of farmers' cash earnings and is not comparable with the average earnings of industrial workers.

Set-aside

20. Mr. Gallie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give a progress report on non-rotational set-aside.

Mr. Gummer: We are pressing the European Commission for Proposals.

In the meantime, we are consulting on our proposals for national management rules for non-rotational set-aside.

Farmland (Public Access)

21. Ms Quin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received from farmers in the northern region about public access to farmed land.

Mr. Curry: None.

Common Agricultural Policy

22. Mr. Purchase: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to make representations to the EC in order to reduce United Kingdom net contribution to the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Gummer: As a result of the reform of the common agriculture policy agreed last year, UK receipts under the CAP are likely to increase from 7 per cent. to around 9 per cent. of total expenditure.

Integrated Administration and Control System

23. Mr. Olner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received on an extension of the 15 May deadline for the return of details appertaining to the integrated administration and control system.

Mr. Gummer: We have received a number of representations suggesting an extension of the 15 May deadline.

25. Mr. Sykes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the integrated administration control scheme.

Mr. Gummer: The integrated administration and control system is an important and necessary measure to make sure that taxpayers' money is properly accounted for in every part of the Community.

27. Mr. Wilson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has had on the complexity of IACS questionnaires.

Mr. Gummer: We have received a number of representations about IACS documents.

Fishing Organisations

24. Mr. Enright: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent consultations he has held with fishing organisations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The industry and the Fisheries Departments began a major review of fisheries conservation three days ago. On 8 May I expect to attend the annual general meeting of the NFFO.

French Agriculture Minister

26. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the French Minister for Agriculture to discuss implementation of CAP reforms; and if he will make a statement.

28. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met his French opposite number to discuss the export of British farm produce; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall).

Set-aside Land

Dame Peggy Fenner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to seek a review of the criteria for rotational set-aside in the EC.

Mr. Curry: We are continuing to discuss various detailed aspects of the rotational set-aside arrangements with our Community partners. We have no plans to seek a fundamental review of the arable area payments scheme at this stage.

Clenbuterol

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has as to which countries in the European Community have incorporated into their domestic legislation a ban on the use of clenbuterol as a growth promoting substance.

Mr. Soames: I am not aware of any member state which has introduced a specific ban on the use of Clenbuterol as a growth-promoting substance. It is, however, contrary to EC legislation for a veterinary medicinal product to be used for a purpose other than that for which it is licensed, unless under the direction and authority of a veterinary practitioner. No member state has licensed the use of Clenbuterol other than for therapeutic purposes.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the health risk to citizens of the United Kingdom from beef produced in countries which have ineffective controls over the misuse of clenbuterol.

Mr. Soames: All member states are required to submit to the Commission annually details of their national plans for the examination for residues, including clenbuterol, in live animals and fresh meat. Similar arrangements apply in respect of third countries importing meat into the Community.

Ongoing surveillance in the UK for clenbuterol in imported meat is carried out under a scheme, co-ordinated by the working party on veterinary residues in animal products, which is directed at retail and wholesale premises and extends to both imported and domestic supplies. Because of the evidence of abuse of clenbuterol outside Great Britain, surveillance is being increased this year. A new sampling programme for imported meat will also commence shortly under which samples of imported bovine tissues will be collected and analysed for clenbuterol residues.

The consumption of meat containing excessive residues of clenbuterol can result in increased pulse rate and palpitations. There is no evidence of any such cases of illness arising in the United Kingdom.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Conway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the occasions on which his Department authorised the establishment of an additional personal secretary post responsible to the marketing development manager—principal grade—since January 1986.

Mr. Curry: No personal secretary posts have been appointed to report to principal grade officers.

Cashmere

Sir David Steel: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has for placing cashmere production on an equitable base with other supported livestock enterprises in the United Kingdom.

Mr Curry: I have no plans to introduce support measures for cashmere production.

Vegetables

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all those vegetables of which he is aware which contain alkaloids; if he will indicate in each case the number of cases of harm to humans which have been recorded in the United Kingdom as a result of the consumption of those vegetables; if he will indicate in each case whether sales of products made from those vegetables have been banned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Potatoes, aubergines, green and red peppers and green tomatoes contain glyco alkaloids. Figures are not collected centrally in the form requested. Local authorities have powers under the Food Safety Act 1990 to ensure that foodstuffs containing unacceptable levels of alkaloids do not enter the food supply.

Comfrey Products

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received from the Action Group for the Promotion of Nutritional Therapy about the decision to ban the sale of comfrey products; what reply he has given; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: I have received representations from both groups about the recent decision to seek the withdrawal from sale of certain comfrey products containing the highest level of toxic alkaloids. In reply, I have reiterated that this action was taken on the basis of clear and unequivocal recommendations from the independent expert scientific committees that advise Ministers on food safety issues.

Farm Woodland Premium Scheme

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to suspend payment of the farm woodland premium scheme in England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: None.

Fishery Protection Vessels

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent successes have been achieved by the fishery protection vessels operated on behalf of his Department.

Mr. Curry: From 1 January to 15 April this year the Royal Navy fisheries protection vessels have carried out 465 inspections at sea; serious infringements of fisheries rules have been identified on 27 vessels.

Agricultural Training Board

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what decisions have been taken about the future status, funding and operation of the Agricultural Training Board following the consultation exercise that took place last month.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, Official Report, 1 April, col. 329]: The Government can now confirm their intention to replace the Agricultural Training Board with a non-statutory independent organisation. The target date for completing the change is 1 April next year.

The new arrangements will free the successor body to the board from the constraints that statutory control imposes and allow it to expand commercially, so that it can offer training services on a fully commercial basis to a wider range of land-based and rural businesses. The new body will work closely with the other agencies and organisations operating in rural areas, particularly the Rural Development Commission and training and enterprise councils in England and Wales and the local enterprise companies in Scotland. The successor body will continue to service the agricultural and horticultural industries, but this change will also allow it to develop and provide services to organisations operating in areas such as the countryside and environmental management.

As I have already announced, the Government will continue to make a substantial contribution to the new organisation's finances, through a contract with the ATB successor body for the provision of specific services, initially covering the period to March 1996. Government objectives will be reviewed before the end of this first contract period and any changes will be reflected in any succeeding contract. Subsequent changes to funding levels will also have regard to the commercial revenue generated by the successor body.

I have asked Mr. Andy Stewart, the ATB's current chairman, to lead the development of the successor body. He will be supported by a group of senior industry representatives from Scotland, England and Wales who have agreed to act as directors of the successor bodyy and to work closely with the existing board members during the changeover period.

I have every confidence in the ATB successor body's ability to make the most of the opportunities that this new freedom presents to respond to the needs of the industries that it will serve.

Veterinary Surgeons

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many qualified veterinary surgeons were employed by the Central Veterinary Laboratory on 1 January 1991, 1 January 1992 and 1 January 1993, respectively.

Mr. Gummer: Responsibility for this matter is delegated to the Central Veterinary Laboratory and I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Gentleman direct.

Letter from T. W. A. Little to Mr. Gavin Strang, dated 29 April 1993.

As you know the Minister has asked that I write to you direct with the answer to your question. The information requested is as follows:

	Veterinary surgeons employed
1 January 1991	44
1 January 1992	46
1 January 1993	38

These figures include veterinary surgeons employed at the Laboratory's Lasswade laboratory near Edinburgh.

Bovine Somatotropin

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what dates the Veterinary Products Committee considered the paper "Bovine Somatotropin and Animal Health: The effect of recombinant BST on somatic cell counts", by E. J. Brunner, E. P. Millstone, I. R. White, R. J. Barrell and O. N. N. Al-Muderis.

Mr. Gummer: The Veterinary Products Committee considered a pre-publication copy of this paper at its meeting on 23 July 1992.

SCOTLAND

Bail Appeals

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many appeals against refusal of bail were granted in each of the past five years on legal aid; and what proportion of the total these appeals constituted;

(2) how many appeals against refusal of bail in each of the past five years in (a) district court and (b) sheriff court were forwarded to the High Court; and how many were granted;

(3) what was the total cost to his Department in dealing with appeals against refusal of bail for each of the past five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not available. Records do not distinguish between appeals against grant or refusal of bail, nor between appeals from the district and sheriff courts. Bail appeals are not recorded as a separate category of grants of legal aid.

The total number of appeals against grant or refusal of bail considered by the High Court over the past five years is as follows:

Year	Number
1988	2,679
1989	2,820
1990	3,031
1991	3,301
1992	4,149

The estimated average court costs of hearing a bail appeal, including judicial, staff and accommodation costs, are £10·80 at 1992 prices.

Ferry Piers

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the cost of adapting the piers at Kennacraig, Port Ellen and Port Askaig to accommodate the Caledonian MacBrayne ferry, Isle of Arran; and which agencies are responsible for funding the project.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The total cost of adapting the piers at Kennacraig, Port Ellen and Port Askaig including dredging and other associated works to accommodate MV Isle of Arran is estimated to be in the region of £700,000. The project is being funded by Caledonian MacBrayne, the Scottish Office and the European regional development fund.

National Epilepsy Centre

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has concerning the future of the National Epilepsy Centre.

Mr. Stewart: Decisions on the future of residents of the national epilespy centre are matters for Quarrier's Homes, which runs the centre in conjunction with those local authorities and health boards which have responsibility for the residents. Proposals for the future should be set out in the relevant local authority and health board community care plans.

Junior Doctors

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many actual hours are currently worked by junior doctors in each hospital.

Mr. Stewart: Information on actual hours worked by junior doctors is not held centrally. Junior doctors contract for a standard working week of 40 hours and such further agreed additional duty hours to be spent on-call or on shift work as are required to meet the needs of the service. As at 30 September 1992—the latest available figures—the average number of contracted hours for junior doctors was 79 per week. Provisional half-yearly returns from health authorities indicate that as at 31 March 1993 only 130 junior doctors, 3·9 per cent., were contracted for more than 83 hours of duty per week.

Huntington's Disease

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what financial contribution will be required from sufferers from Huntington's disease or other long-term illness living in private sector homes.

Mr. Stewart: None.

Sufferers from long-term illnesses, living in private sector nursing homes, who require medical or other treatment are not required to contribute towards the cost of that treatment provided it is available under the NHS and is prescribed or recommended by their general practitioners.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what provision there is within the national health service for long-term care for sufferers of Huntington's disease.

Mr. Stewart: The level of provision for sufferers of Huntington's disease will vary for each patient. In all cases the aim will be to secure the most effective package of care to meet the needs of the patients and carers alike. This can range from community health service care and support for those able to live at home to long-term hospital care.

Care in the Community

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of whether appropriate residential care will be available, for all who require it, under the care in the community legislation.

Mr. Stewart: Since April 1992, all social work authorities have been required to produce community care plans for their areas based on a local assessment of need. These plans have been examined by the Scottish Office community care implementation unit which then discusses the plans with the local authority and the health board jointly. All plans include information about the availability of residential care.

Acute Beds

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the impact of deprivation on the demand for acute beds in each health board area.

Mr. Stewart: There is no conclusive information available on the impact of deprivation on the demand for acute beds in Scotland.

Ambulances

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made on speeding up response of emergency ambulances.

Mr. Stewart: In 1991-92, 49 per cent. of emergency calls were responded to within eight minutes and 95 per cent. within 20 minutes. In 1992-93 the percentage of calls responded to within eight minutes increased to 51 per cent. and the performance within 20 minutes was maintained. This was achieved despite a 6·9 per cent. increase in the number of calls received.

Residential Care

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether elderly home owners who enter residential care are expected to sell their property to pay part of their care costs.

Mr. Stewart: All client groups who require public support are expected to contribute towards the cost of residential care they receive. The National Assistance (Assessment of Resources) Regulations 1992 require that the value of a permanent resident's former dwelling should be taken into account in assessing ability to pay unless it is occupied by the resident's spouse, or a relative who is aged 60 or over, or who is incapacitated. Local authorities do, however, have discretion to disregard property from the financial assessment in other circumstances where they consider it reasonable to do so.

Women Consultants

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he is taking to increase the number of women medical graduates who take specialist training to become consultants.

Mr. Stewart: On 2 April the NHS in Scotland management executive announced the introduction in 1993-94 of a national scheme for part-time training and working at registrar and senior registrar level which will be available to men and women doctors and dentists. We have allocated additional funding of £350,000 to meet the cost of 25 part-time registrar and 10 part-time senior registrar posts. The scheme will be run by the Scottish Council for Postgraduate Medical and Dental Education.

NHS Employees

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action has been taken concerning NHS employees' continuity of employment with local authority-run community care services.

Mr. Stewart: Consideration is presently being given to responses received as a result of a consultation exercise on draft care staff transfer enabling regulations.

Crossroad Schemes

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many crossroad schemes funded by his Department have reported that they expect to run out of funds by 31 December.

Mr. Stewart: My Department does not fund local crossroads schemes directly and I have had no reports of any that expect to run out of funds by 31 December. Local schemes, of which there are about 50 in Scotland, are eligible for grants from local authorities and health boards. It is for these authorities to decide whether to fund crossroads schemes or make other provision for care attendant schemes.

Unemployment

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to reduce long-term unemployment in Glasgow; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: The key to increased employment is a prosperous and productive economy. The Government are firmly committed to removing the barriers to economic growth and to the stimulation of economic development, through various measures including the activities of Scottish Enterprise and its network of local enterprise companies, among which is the Glasgow Development Agency.

In relation to long-term unemployed individuals, we have introduced the most comprehensive range of measures there has ever been in this country to help people back to work. The Employment Service already provides a wide range of services which contribute to two thirds of people who become unemployed leaving unemployment within six months. From the summer it will also provide community action, a new programme of voluntary work for people unemployed for more than a year. The new training for work programme operated by local enterprise companies, which began on 1 April, has the principal purpose of helping unemployed people to get jobs and is targeted on those unemployed for six months or more. This programme will be delivered in Glasgow by the Glasgow Development Agency, along with further measures announced on 16 March by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer which will give long-term unemployed people a new way to gain qualifications and provide more opportunities for those seeking to start their own business.

The rate of increase in long-term unemployment in Glasgow between January 1992 and January 1993 was less than a third of that for Great Britain as a whole. The measures which I have described will further improve performance in responding to the needs of the unemployed.

Young Chronically Sick

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to build a hospital unit for the young chronic sick.

Mr. Stewart: None. It is for health boards as purchasers of health care to determine how best to provide for the health needs of all residents in their area.

Accident Waiting Times

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average length of waiting time at accident and emergency departments within each health board area for the latest available period.

Mr. Stewart: This information is not held centrally.

Forestry Commission

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 30 March, Official Report, column 150, when he expects the inter-departmental committee of civil servants to report on the future organisation, management and ownership of the Forestry Commission.

Sir Hector Monro: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on 20 April 1993, column 89.

Farm Woodland Premium Scheme

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what reasons underlie his decision to suspend payment of the farm woodland premium scheme in Scotland until October; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: The farm woodland premium scheme has been highly successful in Scotland in its first full year of operation. Although there have been more planting proposals submitted than originally expected, my Department is continuing to process new applications and the resulting payments in the normal way.

Central European Time

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to hold consultations with people resident in the north of Scotland about the possibility of Britain moving into the central European time zone.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government have no proposals at present for changing the existing arrangements for summertime. No changes will be made without fully taking into account the views of the public and sectoral opinion throughout Scotland.

Breast Screening

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a progress report on the Scottish breast screening programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I have today approved the publication of a report covering the background, introduction and structure of the Scottish breast screening programme together with the 1991-92 results and a copy has been placed in the Library of the House. The report shows that:

The Scottish Breast Screening Programme is based on 3 key issues: quality, patient acceptability and continual monitoring and evaluation of the programme;

The primary target of the Programme is to reduce mortality in the screened population in Scotland by 30 per cent. overall;

Each year in Scotland approximately 2,600 new cases of breast cancer are diagnosed and a total of 1,300 women of all ages die from the disease;

Mammographic screening is but one strategy in the fight to defeat breast cancer and, by the year 2000, the Screening Programme is expected to result in about 1,650 extra years of life gained annually in Scotland; on average, each of the women in whom death from breast cancer is prevented will have an additional 15 years of life;

In 1991-92, 126,867 Scottish women were invited for screening;

The United Kingdom target for uptake of invitation is 70 per cent. and Scotland is above this with an average uptake of 72 per cent. of all women invited for screening;

0·9 per cent. of all women screened went on to have a biopsy, and 72 per cent. of these women were diagnosed with cancer; this level of diagnosis is well above the 50 per cent. target set by the United Kingdom standards;

In 1991-92, 578 cancers were detected, equalling 6·3 per 1,000 women screened; this again is well above the United Kingdom detection standard of 5 per 1,000 women screened.

The Scottish breast screening programme is an example of the increased emphasis on improving health structures set out as a goal in the patients charter. It also accords with the patients charter in seeking to provide a high-quality service and stanrdards and value for money.

Junior Doctors

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the average and maximum weekly number of hours on duty and on call of junior hospital doctors in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 27 April 1993]: Information on actual hours worked by junior doctors is not held centrally. As at 30 September 1992, the latest available figures, the average number of contracted hours for junior doctors and the maximum hours contracted by any doctor were as shown in the table:

Junior hospital doctors: contracted average weekly hours of work; as at 30 September 1992[1]

Type of contract	Number of doctors	Average hours contracted			Maximum hours contracted total
		Basic	Additional duty	Total
Whole time:
Full shift	142	40	21	61	108
Partial shift	138	40	30	70	78
Rota (on call)	2,631	40	40	80	116
All whole time contracts	2,911	40	39	[3]79	116
Part time:
Rota (on call)	28	20	26	46	n/a

Notes:
Doctors contracted for full or partial shift patterns of working are not contracted for on call work.
[1] Data are provisional.
Excludes staff with honorary contracts and staff in dental specialities.
Excludes data for the Dundee Teaching Hospitals NHS Trust.
Grades included in the table are: senior registrar; registrar; senior house officer; and house officer.
[3] Includes both shift and on call additional duty hours.

Provisional information collected for the half-year to 31 March 1993 shows that only 130 junior doctors—3.9 per cent.—were contracted for more than 83 hours of duty per week.

Violence

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to increase the levels of resources provided towards the reduction of murder and violence in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 26 April 1993]: My right hon. Friend has a number of bids for additional resources under consideration.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the extent to which the proposed changes in the legal aid system will affect disabled people on low income.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No separate assessment has been made of the effect of the changes on disabled people. The financial eligibility of any applicant for legal aid depends on his or her income and the expenses which may be allowed against it. Following the changes, disability living allowance, attendance allowance and constant attendance allowance paid as an increase to a disablement pension are disregarded when calculating disposable income for legal advice and assistance, as they are for legal aid. Applicants who are in receipt of disability working allowance qualify automatically for free advice and assistance and criminal legal aid.

Crown Courts

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will give, in table form, for each Crown court in England and Wales in 1971, 1981 and 1991 (a) the number of defendants tried (b) the number of defendants found guilty, (c) the number of defendants acquitted and (d) the number of defendants discharged after the trial has been halted on the orders of the judge.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Figures for individual Crown court centres are not held prior to 1986. The only figures available are those set out in tables 1 to 4. Tables 1 to 3 provide the information by circuit for the years 1976, 1981 and 1991 respectively, and table 4 for each Crown court centre in 1991.

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will give for each Crown court in England and Wales in 1971, 1981 and 1991, the average time and number of court appearances for defendants sent for trial from charge to completion of proceedings.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Information on waiting times for individual Crown court centres is not available prior to 1986. The only data available are set out in tables 1 and 2. Table 1 shows, by circuit, the average waiting time in weeks between committal to the Crown court for trial and start of hearing for the years 1972, 1981 and 1991. Table 2 shows the equivalent figures for each Crown court centre in 1991. Information on the number of court appearances is not collected.

HEALTH

Older People (Health)

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research her Department funds into the various aspects of health and well-being in the third age.

Mr. Yeo: The Department funds a wide range of research relating to the health and social welfare of older people. In the current year, about £450,000 will be committed from the centrally commissioned programme. "Community Care—Findings from Department of Health Funded Research 1988-1992" and "Department of Health Listings of Research and Development 1991" are available in the Library.

NHS Supplies Authority

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will require the National Health Service Supplies Authority to set out in its annual report covering 1992 full information on its revenues, cost structures and operating margins.

Dr. Mawhinney: The National Health Service Supplies Authority was not fully operational until October 1992 when the process of transferring staff and assets from the 14 regional supplies organisations was completed. Some operations will therefore have been covered in regional health authority accounts.

NHS supplies will publish as much financial information as possible in its annual review in June.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the work of the National Health Service Supplies Authority since its inception.

Mr. Boyce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the work of the NHS Supplies Authority.

Dr. Mawhinney: The National Health Service Supplies Authority was set up to make sure the NHS gets best value for money in the goods and services it needs, and has already achieved savings in purchasing of £25 million.

NHS Supplies will publish its annual review at the end of June setting out its work and achievements since its inception.

Exempt Prescriptions

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total number of prescriptions in each of the last five years which were exempt by reason of being for (a) women aged 60 years or over, (b) men aged 65 years or over and (c) a pregnant woman or a woman in the first year after birth of a child.

Dr. Mawhinney: Not all the information is available centrally. Available data are in the table.

Numbers [millions] of prescribed items dispensed by community pharmacists and appliance contractors to men aged 65 and over and women aged 60 and over, and to people holding exemption certificates issued by family health services authorities in each year 1988 to 1992.

Year	Men aged 65 and over and women aged 60 and over	FHSA exempt
1988	142·6	21·0
1989	147·3	22·4
1990	153·5	23·5
1991	159·7	24·4
1992	167·8	25·5

Notes:
1. The analysis is based on a 1 in 20 sample of all prescriptions submitted to the PPA by community pharmacists and appliance contractors. Dispensing doctor and personal administration prescriptions are not analysed into exempt, charge remitted and charge paid categories.
2. 1987 to 1990 data are based on number of dispensing fees. From 1991, data are based on numbers of items.
3. People covered by FHSA exemption certificates are pregnant women, women in the first year after the birth of a child and men and women with one or more of the medical conditions which confer entitlement to free prescriptions.

Sodium Hexacyanoferrate

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the toxicity of sodium hexacyanoferrate; and what regulations govern its use.

Mr. Sackville: The use of sodium hexacyanoferrate as a food additive is permitted under the Miscellaneous Additives in Food Regulations 1980 (as amended). It is used as an anti-caking agent in table salt. The Government are advised on the safety-in-use of food additives by the Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment. It reviewed the food additive use of sodium hexacyanoferrate in 1988. The committee confirmed that sodium hexacyanoferrate was provisionally acceptable for use in food but requested that data be provided from further specified studies. These studies will be reviewed by the committee as soon as all data are submitted.

Care Homes

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what financial arrangements have been put in place by Her Department to purchase alternative provision for elderly clients with reserved rights in care homes which cease trading.

Mr. Yeo: People with reserved rights continue to be eligible for income support after a care home in which they are living ceases trading.

Supraregional Services Advisory Group

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she will list the members of the supraregional services advisory group.

Mr. Sackville: The members of the supraregional services advisory group are:

Chairman
Sir Michael Carlisle, RHA chairman, Trent RHA

Dr. W. J. Appleyard, consultant paediatrician (representative of the joint consultative committee)
Professor N. Browse, president, Royal College of Surgeons

Professor J. B. L. Howell, district health authority chairman, Southampton and South West Hampshire health authority
Dr. N. F. Jones, joint consultants committee and the Royal College of Physicians
Dr. W. E. Kearns, chief medical officer, North East Thames RHA
Mr. P. Kemp, director of resources, East Anglian RHA
Mrs. H. Kent, regional nursing officer, Northern RHA
Mr. A. P. J. Ross, chairman of the joint consultants committee
Professor D. A. Shaw, CBE, formerly dean of medicine, Newcastle-upon-Tyne (representing medical academic interests)
Mr. C. Spry, regional general manager, South West Thames RHA
Mr. L. Wright, director of finance, Yorkshire RHA

Wessex RHA

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, what reports were submitted to her Department by Department of Health auditors, by auditors appointed by the Department, by the district auditor or by auditors appointed by the Audit Commission, regarding Wessex regional health authority, in each year since 1984; and, in each case, what was the subject of the report, the date received, and whether it was a public or confidential report.

Mr. Sackville [pursuant to his reply 30 March 1993, columns 185-88]: I regret that there was an error in my previous reply.

The report by the Department of Health statutory auditor entitled "Report in Confidence to the Secretary of State on the audit of the accounts of Wessex regional health authority for the year ended 31 March 1988" was sent to the Department on 2 November 1988, and not in November 1987.

Research and Development

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the total running costs of her Department's research and development division for each of the past five years.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 23 April 1993]: The estimated costs, at 1992-93 pay and price levels, were:

Research and development division total running costs—Manpower and Non-Manpower

EDUCATION

National Curriculum Testing

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what action he is taking to ensure that the programme of testing at all stages, seven, 11 and 14 years and in all subjects, will be implemented; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has made it clear that the test for seven-year-olds and for 14-year-olds will be going ahead this year as planned. It is the statutory duty of head teachers to implement them and the contractual duty of school teachers to carry them out.

In response to the genuine concerns of some teachers, my right hon. Friend has asked Sir Ron Dearing to review the national curriculum and assessment framework with the aim of simplifying it while retaining the key features of clear teaching objectives and regular tests. Early results from that review will inform the arrangements for testing in 1994. I look to all teachers to carry out the tests this year for the benefit of their pupils and in order to provide evidence for the review which Sir Ron Dearing is conducting.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to meet the National Association of Schoolmasters/Union of Women Teachers to discuss proposals for national curriculum testing and assessment arrangements.

Mr. Forth: None. The NASUWT should make its views known to Sir Ron Dearing, the chairman designate of the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority, who is conducting a review of the national curriculum and assessment.

School Places

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the number of surplus school places for each borough in (a) Greater Manchester and (b) London.

Mr. Forth: The following figures derive from a survey of school capacity carried out by the Department in 1991. They were calculated by comparing the capacity derived from the more open enrolment formula with the number of pupils on roll at each school.

Rising and shifting populations and changes in school capacity mean that the surplus place levels in individual LEAs may have changed since the survey was done. We are currently consulting LEAs on the scope for surplus place removal in their areas. In the case of some LEAs the 1991 figures are subject to revision in the light of amendments subsequently provided by the LEA.

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment he has made of the effect of the Greenwich judgment on the limitation of places for pupils from Marston Green who wish to study in the Heart of England school at Balsall Common, in Solihull, caused by pressure from pupils living in Birmingham and Coventry.

Mr. Forth: The effect of the Greenwich judgment is to enhance parental choice by removing restrictions on school admissions based on LEA administrative boundaries. The Government have no plans to introduce legislation to reverse the judgment.

New Universities

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the numbers of postgraduate students (a) studying for taught courses and (b) studying for research degrees in each of the new universities.

Teachers' Pensions Agency

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what key performance targets he has set the Teachers' Pensions Agency for 1993-94.

Mr. Patten: I have set the following key performance targets for the Teachers' Pensions Agency for 1993-94 which cover its main activities and focus on the principles of improving the quality of public services:

(a) To take the necessary steps to enable the agency to publish audited, commercial-style accounts for 1993-94;
(b) To achieve an improvement in efficiency in the use of running costs resources directly administered by the agency of at least 2 per cent.;
(c) To review the existing systems for verification of contributions received from employers and to produce an action plan for implementing improved arrangements;
(d) To provide a substantive answer to 95 per cent. of written enquiries within 15 working days;
(e) To process 96 per cent. of the applications for retirement awards by the payable date or, if later, then within 30 days of receipt of the application; and
(f) To meet agreed accuracy targets for pensions-related calculations.

ENVIRONMENT

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the 1993-94 budget for urban development corporations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Squire: The 1993-94 budget for UDCs has now been finalised at £291·8 million. The table shows the allocation between UDCs.

Carbon Dioxide Programme

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how he has updated the discussion document on the United Kingdom's carbon dioxide programme, in the light of recent announcements made in the Budget.

Mr. Howard: I have today placed copies in the Library of an addendum summarising developments relevant to the carbon dioxide programme since the publication of the discussion document in December 1992.

TRANSPORT

Bus Services

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what procedure he will follow to consult passengers' representatives on bus services after privatisation and deregulation.

Mr. Norris: Current procedures for consulting the London regional passengers' committee (LRPC) will continue after the privatisation of the subsidiaries of London Buses Ltd. and until bus services in London are deregulated. Deregulation will enable bus operators to respond more flexibly to meet passengers' requirements, with competition safeguarding passengers' interests. It is therefore intended that on deregulation LRPC's statutory involvement with bus services in London will cease, in line with the position of other transport consumer groups outside London.

London Taxis

Mr. Bendall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement outlining the meaning of two-tier licensing for London's taxis as referred to in the oral statement by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Epping Forest (Mr. Norris), on 26 March, Official Report, column 1410.

Mr. Norris: By "two-tier licensing" (Official Report, 26 March, column 1410) was meant the system which currently exists outside London whereby hackney carriage vehicles and drivers are licensed to ply for hire in the streets and at ranks; and private hire vehicles, drivers and operators are licensed to undertake pre-booked hirings only.

Executive Agencies

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what targets he has set for the executive agencies in his Department.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: My right hon. Friend has set the following key targets for 1993-94 for the six Department of Transport executive agencies. Management objectives and performance indicators, where appropriate to the agency's business, are contained in the agencies' business plans; copies of which will be placed in the Library, with the following exceptions: the vehicle inspectorate (whose plan has been held over during work on the future status of the inspectorate, but which will be available shortly); DVOIT, and the Transport Research Laboratory, both of whose plans are commercial in confidence and will not be published.

The Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency's key targets are to meet, or better, an overall efficiency improvement of 2·5 per cent.; deliver 95 per cent. of ordinary driver licence cases to customers within 13 working days of receipt, not to exceed 15 working days in any month, and deliver medical cases within 25 working days of receipt; deliver 95 per cent. of vocational licence cases within 11 working days of receipt, not to exceed 13 working days in any month, and deliver medical cases within 35 working days of receipt; deliver 95 per cent. of first provisional licence cases within 12 working days of receipt, not to exceed 14 working days in any month; deliver 95 per cent. of changes to vehicle registration documents to customers within 13 working days of receipt, not to exceed 15 working days in any month; deliver 95 per cent. of registration documents for new vehicles to customers within 15 working days of receipt, not to exceed 20 working days in any month; answer 80 per cent. of telephone inquiries within 30 seconds; deliver answers to 90 per cent. of written inquiries within eight working days of receipt; complete successfully 445,000 VED enforcement cases by imposition of penalties.

DVOIT's key targets are to fulfil service level agreements with its customers; achieve, across the customer base, an average assessment by customers which is at least satisfactory as measured in the customer satisfaction survey; balance business costs with income; constrain prices for existing tariffed services within an RPI minus 5 per cent. ceiling; achieve a return on investment of 6 per cent. for business with Government customers and 8 per cent. for others; provide the necessary inputs to the privatisation process within the timetable approved by the privatisation project group.

The Transport Research Laboratory's key targets are to cover full costs with income from customers while meeting the net control total in supply estimates; achieve a minimum net revenue per person year of £45,000; ensure direct fee earning costs as a percentage of total operating costs are greater than 55 per cent.; achieve average staff utilisation in research resource centres of at least 1,300 hours per year on direct fee-earning work; and 90 per cent. of project outputs to be assessed by customers as good or very good.

Research Spending

Mr. Day: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the United Kingdom's research spending from 1980 to 1990 as a percentage of gross domestic product; and what were the corresponding figures for the EC average and for the USA and Japan.

Mr. Leigh: The available data are as follows:

Vehicle Imports

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what tariff or other barriers are imposed upon imports of four-wheel drive motor vehicles from the United States of America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: Imports into the United Kingdom of four-wheel drive motor vehicles from the United States of America are subject only to the European Community's common external tariff.

"The Observer"

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the proposed sale of The Observer.

Mr. Heseltine: Lonrho announced on 29 April that it has received an offer from The Guardian and Manchester Evening News (GMEN) for The Observer which it found acceptable and upon which it had undertaken to consult the board of The Observer. A transfer of The Observer to GMEN would require my consent under provisions of the Fair Trading Act relating to newspaper mergers. I have not so far received any application for consent. Under the newspaper merger provisions of the Fair Trading Act I would need to refer a transfer to GMEN to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission unless I was satisfied that the paper was not economic as a going concern and, if the paper was to continue, the case was one of urgency. I could not reach a view on this until I had been able to study the terms of any application.

Scotland-Ireland Gas Interconnector

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress has been made by Her Majesty's Government in negotiating a treaty to cover the intended gas interconnector linking Scotland with Ireland.

Mr. Heseltine: I am pleased to inform the House that my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has today signed in Dublin a treaty with the Irish Government to cover the gas interconnector. The treaty will ensure the effective regulation of a pipeline which crosses international boundaries. It will set out matters of jurisdiction and provide for consultation and the exchange of information between the two Governments including a forum in which issues over the pipeline can be discussed. It will also provide for guaranteed access for links to Northern Ireland and the Isle of Man.

This is good news for both our countries. By facilitating a link in the European infrastructure, the treaty takes us further down the road to a single market in energy. The United Kingdom has been in the forefront of liberalising energy markets and I shall continue to press hard in that direction. This is also good news for Northern Ireland and the Isle of Man since the treaty provides specific guarantees on access which they can take up.

Construction of the pipeline has also brought more immediate benefit to the United Kingdom with contracts worth over £100 million being awarded to United Kingdom firms. The existence of an interconnector has the potential to create trading opportunities from which both countries can benefit. We have already seen National Power stepping in to strike an innovative deal to provide standby supplies to the Republic over the next five years.

In due course, the treaty will be laid before the House. But in the meantime I will place a copy of the treaty in the Library.

Shipbuilding Intervention Fund

Dr. Godman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much money has been paid to United Kingdom shipyards by way of the European Community directive on the shipbuilding intervention fund, in respect of the construction of merchant vessels, in each of the past five years.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 29 April 1993]: Payment from the shipbuilding intervention fund in each of the past five years was as follows. The figures exclude payment made to shipbuilders in Northern Ireland.

Year	£ million
1988-89	38·7
1989-90	37·5
1990-91	28·7
1991-92	31·1
1992-93	20·4

Hazardous Waste Shipments

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place in the Library a copy of his letter of 31 March to the hon. Member for Linlithgow on the subject of hazardous waste shipments from industrialised countries to developing countries.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 15 April 1993]: I have today instructed my officials to place a copy of the letter identified by the hon. Member in the Library as requested.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many and what percentage of officers in each grade from 1 to 7 and overall in the Duchy of Lancaster and in the Office of Public Service and Science are (a) women, (b) from ethnic minorities and (c) disabled people.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply 14 April 1993, columns 535-36]: Some of the figures quoted in the answer have been found to be incorrect. The correct information is as follows:

Grade (and equivalents)	Women	Total	Percentage Women
1	0	3	0
2	2	17	12
3	2	24	8
4	0	3	0
5	16	62	26
6	21	64	33
7	61	265	23
Overall	1,287	2,495	52

The ethnic monitoring programme was carried out on a voluntary basis and did not extend to the Cabinet Office's agencies. Of those who responded, 62 people chose to register as non-white. One of these people is at grade 7 level.

The Cabinet Office's figures on staff with disabilities include only those who have chosen to register as disabled. Twenty-eight people are so registered. None is at grade 7 level or above. The Cabinet Office employs other staff with disabilities who have chosen not to register.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Explosives

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what arms or explosive finds have been made on Church property in Northern Ireland during the past three years.

Mr. Mates: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Terrorism

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has referred his consultative paper "Terrorist Exploitation of the Construction Industry in Northern Ireland", to the Fair Employment Commission and the Equal Opportunities Commission for their observations.

Mr. Mates: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 26 April at col 271.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Listed Buildings

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proposals are being considered in public consultations on English Heritage's forward strategy which would involve a change in current responsibilities for grade 2 buildings outside London.

Mr. Brooke: No change is proposed in current responsibilities for grade II listed building casework outside London.

Television Licences (Pensioners)

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to meet representatives from pensioners' groups to discuss the cost of television licences for old age pensioners.

Mr. Brooke: I have no plans to meet representations from pensioners' groups, though we have sent a copy of the consultaton document about the future of the BBC, which asks questions about the television licence fee, to four organisations representing the elderly. I am well aware of the view amongst many pensioners that they should be entitled to free or reduced rate television licences. The Government have made clear on many occasions that it is wholly opposed to this idea: not only would giving free licences to pensioners impose an extra cost of at least £500 million a year on other licence payers, but it would also be wrong in principle, benefiting many people of pensionable age who are well able to pay the full fee.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisons (Sexual Assaults)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what specialist counselling services are available to prisoners who have been the victims of sexual assaults; and how many prisoners have been counselled for these matters in each of the last five years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from I. Dunbar to Mr. Jeremy Corbyn, dated 30 April 1993:

In the absence of Mr. Lewis, the director general, from the office, the Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about specialist counselling services to prisoners who have been the victim of a sexual assault.

Governors are able to call upon relevant specialists, including health care staff, psychologists, probation officers and chaplains, to assist in providing treatment, care and support to the victims of violent and traumatic incidents, including those involving sexual assault.

I regret that the statistical information requested is not collected.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the number of sexual assaults reported by prisoners (a) by other prisoners and (b) by police or prison staff in each of the last five years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not collected centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Prison Escort Services

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria were used to assess the suitability of the tenderers for the performance of prison escort services.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter had been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from I. Dunbar to Ms Marjorie Mowlam, dated 30 April 1993:

Court Escort Service

In the temporary absence of Mr. Lewis, the Director General, from the office, the Home Secretary has asked me to write to you in reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the criteria used to assesss the suitability of the tenderers for the performance of prison escort services.

When awarding the contract for court escorting in the East Midlands and Humberside the main criteria considered by the tender panel were:

- The company track record and the support of the parent company or group for the contract;
- The company's grasp of the task being tendered;
- Ability to recruit, train and retain staff of suitable calibre;
- The adequacy of staffing levels and efficient use of staff;
- The number, capacity and configuration of vehicles the company proposed to use;
- Proposed routes;
- Management information systems;
- Price.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what penalty clauses form part of the contract with Group 4 for the court escort service in the east midlands area; and whether these penalty clauses have been activated as a result of recent events.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from I. Dunbar to Mr. John McAllion, dated 30 April 1993:

In the temporary absence of Mr. Lewis, the Director General, from the office, the Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about penalty clauses in the contract with Group 4 Court Services Ltd for the provision of the court escort service in the East Midlands and Humberside.

The contract with Group 4 contains mechanisms which allow adjustments to payments to be made in the event of circumstances occurring which fall outside the terms of the contract. Where a material failure is caused by circumstances within the contractor's control and is not corrected within 20 days of it being brought to his attention, the Prison Service may terminate the contract.

We are continuing to monitor Group 4's performance and have yet to decide whether it would be appropriate to apply any of the available contractual remedies.

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many bids were considered for the contract for the prison escort service awarded to Group 4 Security Services; and if he will publish (a) the names of the companies that bid for the prison escort service contract awarded to Group 4 Securities and (b) the cost level of each company's bid.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from I. Dunbar to Ms Marjorie Mowlam, dated 30 April 1993:

Prison Escort Service

In the temporary absence of Mr. Lewis, the Director General, from the office, the Home Secretary has asked me to write to you in reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about bids for the contract for the prison escort service awarded to Group 4 Security Services.

Six tenders were received for the court escort contract for the East Midlands and Humberside. The tenderers were: Reliance; Burns; Group 4 Court Escort Service Limited; Wackenhut; Securiguard and Securicor. It is normal commercial practice not to reveal tender prices.

Her Majesty's Prison Manchester

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what steps are being taken to ensure that Mr. C. D. Sherwood will be unable to use information relating to bids for the contract to manage Her Majesty's prison Manchester when advising Mancare regarding rebidding on costs;

(2) when Mr. C. D. Sherwood's immediate superiors became aware that he had been approached by Mancare regarding possible employment; and when Mr. Sherwood was recruited by Mancare;

(3) what role Mr. C. D. Sherwood had in assessing bids for the contract to manage Her Majesty's prison Manchester.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. I. Dunbar to Mr. Tony Blair, dated 30 April 1993:

In the temporary absence of Mr. Lewis, the Director General, from the office, the Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about a member of staff who has reported an offer of outside employment by one of the companies involved in the bidding for the management of HM Prison Manchester.

Mr. Sherwood informed his immediate manager in the Remands Contracts Unit on 7 April that he had been sounded out about the possibility of employment in the private sector and that he wished to hold open the possibility of seeking approval for such a move at a later stage. Given the circumstances, he left the Unit that day. His departure took place 6 days before the tenders for the management of HM Prison Manchester were opened, which took place after 12 noon on 13 April under the sealed bid procedure. Mr. Sherwood has therefore had no access to our role in assessing bids for the contract.

Mr. Sherwood is still employed by the Prison Service. Were he to submit a formal application for permission to take up an outside posting with the company in question or any other organisation, it would be considered in the normal way under the Business Appointment Rules. This includes seeking the views of competitors, with a view to determining what conditions might need to be imposed on the taking up of the appointment.

Minicabs

Mr. Bendall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many incidents of assault, or attempted assault, on minicab passengers by their drivers in (a) London and (b) other metropolitan areas have been reported since 1985;

(2) how many incidents of assault, or attempted assault, on minicab drivers by their passengers in (a) London and (b) other metropolitan areas have been reported since 1985;

(3) how many minicab drivers were found guilty of assaulting their passengers in (a) London and (b) other metropolitan areas in 1991-92.

Mr. Jack: I am sorry not to be able to respond to the hon. Member's request as the information required is not collected centrally.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money, and from which departmental budgets, has been allocated to support those from the former Yugoslavia in the United Kingdom; what support services are being provided and funded by his Department; and if he will list the names of voluntary organisations who are supporting those from the former Yugoslavia in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Department of the Environment has set aside £80,000 for those local authorities worst affected by the influx of displaced persons from the former Yugoslavia in 1992-93.

The Home Office is funding the Refugee Council, the Scottish Refugee Council and the British Red Cross. No specific sums have been allocated because the rate of arrival in this country cannot be predicted, but about £550,000 has been paid to date in grant aid.

The following organisations are funded by the Home Office to provide support to all refugees and asylum seekers including those from former Yugoslavia:

Refugee Council
Refugee Arrivals Project
Scottish Refugee Council
Northern Refugee Centre
Midlands Refugee Council

Information is not available on those organisations which on their own initiative brought groups of former Yugoslavs to the United Kingdom during last year.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many ex-detainees and their dependants from Yugoslavia have, to date, arrived in the United Kingdom under the terms of his statements to the House of 5 November 1992, Official Report, column 424, and 30 November 1992, Official Report, column 30.

Mr. Charles Wardle: As at 28 April 1993, a total of 209 ex-detainees and 313 dependants had arrived. A further group, due to include about 100 people in all, arrived on 29 April.

Bangladeshi Population

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps have been taken to implement the recommendations of the first report from the Home Affairs Select Committee of Session 1986-87 (HC 96), to help improve living and working conditions for the Bangladeshi population in Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 19 April 1993]: The Government's initial response to the Select Committee report was contained in a 1987 White Paper which detailed the work that was being done by various Government Departments to implement the report's recommendations. Since then further progress has been made and I am writing to the hon. Member with further details. A copy will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Nuclear Materials

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what facilities his Department has to assist police forces to make forensic analysis of substances believed to be nuclear materials, apprehended by British police investigators.

Mr. Aitken: I have been asked to reply. My Department has facilities for identification of the nuclear materials present in suspect packages and also for measurement of their radioactive content. These facilities are made available to the Home Department and police forces where appropriate.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Sustainable Development

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what additional resources and additional appointments he plans to make available to support the Overseas Development Administration's involvement with the United Nations Sustainable Development Commission; which resolution of the United Nations General Assembly established the Commission; how the United Kingdom voted on the resolution; and if he will make a statement on its implementation to date.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Overseas Development Administration works closely with the diplomatic wing of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and with the Department of the Environment on the United Nations Commission on Sustainable Development (CSD). The additional work involved for ODA has been absorbed within existing resources.

The CSD was formally established by the United Nations Economic and Social Council at its organisational session in February this year, as requested by the United Nations General Assembly in its resolution 47/191 of 22 December 1992. This resolution was adopted by consensus. The CSD held its first organisational session in February. Its first substantive session will be held from 14 to 25 June 1993 in New York.

Tuberculosis

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contribution his Department is making to the World Health Organisation tuberculosis prevention programme.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Overseas Development Administration does not currently fund the World Health Organisation tuberculosis programme.

PRIME MINISTER

Exchange Rate Mechanism

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister what research studies he has commissioned into how fault lines in the ERM can be corrected; and what action he has initiated since September 1992 to correct them.

The Prime Minister: The European Council in Birmingham endorsed the view of Economic and Finance Ministers that the financial turbulence of last September called for reflection and analysis in the light of developments in capital markets and in the European and world monetary systems. This work is currently being carried forward.

Jabal Hamrayn, Iraq

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what information Her Majesty's Government have concerning military activities at the Jabal Hamrayn site in Iraq.

The Prime Minister: Jabal Hamrin was the site where Iraq built one of its "superguns". The gun was destroyed under United Nations supervision in 1991. There is currently no military activity at the site.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Prime Minister how many and what percentage of officers in each grade from 1 to 7 and overall in the Cabinet Office are (a) women, (b) from ethnic minorities and (c) disabled people.

The Prime Minister [pursuant to his reply 29 March 1993, column 45]: I regret that some of the figures quoted have been found to be incorrect. The correct information is as follows.

The figures for women employed in the Cabinet Office, including its executive agencies, are as follows:

Grade (and equivalents)	Women	Total	Per cent. Women
1	0	3	0
2	2	17	12
3	2	24	8
4	0	3	0
5	16	62	26
6	21	64	33
7	61	265	23
Overall	1,287	2,495	52

The ethnic monitoring programme was carried out on a voluntary basis and did not extend to the Cabinet Office's agencies. Of those who responded, 62 people chose to register as non-white. One of these is at grade 7 level.

The Cabinet Office's figures on staff with disabilities include only those who have chosen to register as disabled. Twenty-eight people are so registered. None is at grade 7 or above. The Cabinet Office employs other staff with disabilities who have chosen not to register.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if she will show for 1992 the percentage and number of part-time women employees earning less than £3 per hour, £3·50 per hour, £3·80 per hour, £4 per hour, £5·20 per hour and £5·40 per hour for (a) manual, (b) non-manual and (c) all women in each of (i) Scotland, (ii) each region of Scotland, (iii) Great Britain and (iv) the standard regions;

(2) if she will list for part-time women employees (a) average gross weekly earnings, (b) average weekly hours total and overtime hours and (c) average gross hourly earnings for (i) manual, (ii) non-manual and (iii) all part-time women workers in Great Britain and the standard regions, Scotland and the regions of Scotland in 1992;

(3) if she will give for male employees (a) average gross weekly earnings, (b) average weekly hours total and overtime hours and (c) average gross hourly earnings for (i) manual, (ii) non-manual and (iii) all male employees in Great Britain and the standard regions, Scotland and the regions of Scotland in 1992;

(4) if she will give for women employees (a) average gross weekly earnings, (b) average weekly hours total and overtime hours and (c) average gross hourly earnings for (i) manual, (ii) non-manual and (iii) all women employees in each of Great Britain and the standard regions, Scotland and the regions of Scotland in 1992;

(5) if she will give for 1992 the percentage and number of female employees, part time and full time, earning less than (a) £3 per hour, (b) £3·50 per hour, (c) £3·80 per hour, (d) £4 per hour, (e) £5·20 per hour and (f) £5·40 per hour for (i) manual, (ii) non-manual and (iii) all females in each of Scotland as a whole, each of the regions of Scotland, Great Britain as a whole and each of the standard regions of Great Britain;

(6) if she will give for 1992 the percentage and number of employees part-time and full-time, earning less than £3 per hour, £3·50 per hour, £3·80 per hour, £4 per hour, £5·20 per hour and £5·40 per hour for (a) manual, (b) non-manual and (c) all employees in each of Scotland, each of the regions of Scotland, Great Britain as a whole and each of the standard regions;

(7) if she will give for 1992 the percentage and number of male employees earning less than £3 per hour, £3·50 per hour, £4 per hour, £5·20 per hour and £5·40 per hour for (a) manual, (b) non-manual and (c) all males in each of (i) Scotland, (ii) the regions of Scotland and (iii) Great Britain and the standard regions;

(8) if she will give for all employees (a) average gross weekly earnings, (b) average weekly hours total and overtime hours and (c) average gross hourly earnings for (i) manual, (ii) non-manual and (iii) all employees in each of Great Britain and the standard regions, Scotland and the regions of Scotland in 1992.

Mr. McLoughlin: In view of the considerable amount of information requested I will write to the hon. Member.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Incomes

Ms Corston: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average equivalised disposable income per adult at 1990 prices for 1979, 1987 and 1990 of (a) single-parent households, (i) with one child and (ii) with two or more children, (b) two-parent households with (1) one child, (2) two children and (3) three or more children and (c) other households with children by quintile and decile groups of households.

Mr. Nelson: The information is not available in the precise form requested because the equivalence scale used is based on households rather than adults. In addition, the figures are only available at current prices.

Other households with children	2,624	4,241	6,021	8,796	14,761	7,142

Average incomes by decile groups within household types are not published because of the small sample sizes and the consequent large sampling errors. The one adult with children household type is not subdivided further for the same reason.
Any difference between the average equivalised disposable income of household types within a quintile group is likely to result from sampling errors.
These figures are not strictly comparable over time because of changes in classification of both income and taxation and because of changes in the "Family Expenditure Survey".

Training

Ms Short: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the allowances paid to participants on (a) non-employed status training for work and youth training, (b) employed status training for work and youth training, (c) learning for work and (d) the community action programme are subject to taxation and/or national insurance contribution; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The treatment for tax and national insurance contribution (NICs) purposes of allowances paid to participants on the programmes mentioned is as follows:

Programme	Chargeable to: Tax?	NICs?
Youth Training—not employed	No	No
Youth Training—employed	Yes	Yes
Training for Work—not employed	[1]—	No
Training for Work—employed	[1]—	Yes
Learning for Work	[1]—	No
Community Action Programme	[1]—	No

[1] Currently under consideration.

Post Office

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue would have been raised in each financial year since 1990-91 by the imposition of full rate VAT on Post Office services.

Sir John Cope: Separate estimates have not been made for each financial year. It is estimated that had the VAT exemption of postal services been abolished, the full year revenue yield to the Exchequer would have been around £180 million in 1991-92.

Oil Exploration

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total amount of exploration and appraisal relief claimed by oil companies for each of the last five years; and what percentage of total exploration and appraisal expenditure this represents for each of the last five years.

Mr. Dorrell: The amounts of exploration and appraisal relief claimed against profits for petroleum revenue tax since 1988 have been as follows:

Year	Amount, £ million	As a percentage of exploration and appraisal expenditure in the year[1] Per cent.
1988	790	70
1989	900	76
1990	1,290	79
1991	1,200	62
1992[2,3]	(540)	(74)

[1] Oil companies commonly do not claim expenditure incurred until a tax liability is imminent. Figures cover the United Kingdom and its territorial waters and continental shelf.
[2] Figures for the second half of 1992 are not available yet.
[3] January to June.

VAT

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue the Exchequer has received in penalties arising from misdeclaration of value added tax (a) in real terms and (b) as a percentage of the total tax take for value added tax in each year since 1987-88; and what is his estimate of such receipts for the years 1993-94 and 1994-95.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 29 April 1993]: The following figures are based on serious misdeclaration penalties assessed by Customs and Excise and start in 1990-91 when the serious misdeclaration penalty was introduced. The figures for 1992-93 are provisional; figures for 1990-91 include default interest.

	£ million	Per cent. of net VAT receipts
1990-91	45	0·14
1991-92	28	0·08
1992-93	15	0·04

No figures are available on penalties for 1993-94 and 1994-95.

Purchasing Initiative

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made in implementing the Government's purchasing initiative since 1990-91.

Mr. Portillo: A report by the central unit on purchasing (CUP) on progress in Government procurement during 1991-92 is published today. A copy is being placed in the Library. CUP offers advice and guidance to Departments on best purchasing practice and the achievement of best value for money in purchasing and supply and management of works projects.

The report notes that significant progress was made in 1991-92 but the initiatives need to be maintained if they are to become standard practice. CUP will continue to encourage and advise departments so that change is maintained and properly monitored.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits Agency

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what discussions have taken place between the Benefits Agency and local authorities over the past year with regard to the preparation of a national service level agreement; and what effects contacts have had in speeding up the payment of housing benefits.

Mr. Burt: Following consultations involving this Department, the Benefits Agency and the local authority associations, a national model liaison service level agreement was signed on 12 November 1992. The national model is now being used by Benefit Agency district managers and local authorities as the framework for formulating local agreements throughout the country. A copy of the relevant circular to local authorities is in the Library.

It is too early to say what effect agreements are having on speeding up the payment of housing benefit. Many local agreements were only finalised in March this year. I understand that negotiations are continuing in a few cases. A joint exercise involving the Benefits Agency and the local authority associations to assess the effectiveness of the agreements is planned for late 1993.

Benefit Deductions

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many deductions were made from income support payments in Wales to cover repayment of social fund loans, poll tax arrears and fuel debts in (a) 1990, (b) 1991 and (c) 1992.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 30 November 1992 at column 72.

Figures for the numbers of beneficiaries with deductions in May 1992 will be published shortly in the "Social Security Income Support Statistics Annual Statistical Inquiry, May 1992", a copy of which will be placed in the Library.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security why ME is not listed in the disability living allowance handbook under the chapter heading certain neurological illnesses.

Mr. Scott: Although the Department recognises ME as a distinct clinical entity, it is also aware that the disabling effects of ME and chronic fatigue syndromes may be very similar. Entitlement to benefit is based on how a person's disability affects their daily life, in respect of care and mobility needs rather than the diagnosis, illness or disease giving rise to such needs.

However the classification of benign myalgic encephalomyelitis—post-viral fatigue syndrome—under "Diseases of Nervous System" in the international classification of diseases will be taken into account in subsequent revisions of the disability handbook.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total number of recipients of housing benefit for each English local authority in (a) 1990-91, (b) 1991-92, (c) 1992-93; and what is the number in (i) local authority, (ii) housing association and (iii) private rented accommodation.

Mr. Burt [holding answer 14 April 1993]: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the average processing time for mobility allowance claims in each region;

(2) what was the backlog for mobility allowance claims in each region as at 31 March 1993 and 31 October 1992.

Mr. Scott: The administration of mobility allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Jim Cousins, dated 29 April 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking (i) what is the average processing time for mobility allowance claims in each region as at 31 March 1993 and 31 October 1992.

Firstly, I should explain that on 6 April 1992 Disability Living Allowance (DLA) consisting of a mobility component and care component, replaced and extended Attendance Allowance for the under 65s and Mobility Allowance (MobA).

Prior to 6 April 1992 Mobility Allowance claims were processed centrally at the North Fylde Central Office. The average clearance time for MobA claims in March 1992 was 28·8 days. Performance on DLA is measured in terms of x % of cases cleared in y days and it is therefore not possible to state an average Processing time for claims on the new benefit. However, the majority of DLA new claims have been cleared within the primary target of 60 % in 30 days. The new claims performance for March 1993 was 71 % of cases cleared within 30 days.

The information on the number of MobA claims that remain uncleared for each region at 31 October 1992 and 31 March 1993 is not available for the reasons stated above. However, in the region of 1900 claims made to MobA are being rechecked to confirm that all necessary action has been taken. These will be acted upon as soon as possible and any which require payment will be considered for compensation under the appropriate scheme.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Offical Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many requests for reviews of disability living allowance have been received in each region to date; how many have been cleared; and how many are outstanding;

(2) what was the average clearance time for claims and for review requests, at each of the regional disability benefit centres; and if he will list the various outcomes of disability living allowance reviews;

(3) how many claims for disability living allowance have been made at each regional disability benefit centre to date; how many of these have resulted in an award, a refusal, or have still to be adjudicated on; and if he will break down the figures for awards according to the component and rate awarded.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Nigel Griffiths, dated 29 April 1993:

Claims

New Disability Living Allowance claims are dealt with by the 11 Regional Disability Benefit Centres.

The number of new claims (including special rules) received, awarded, refused and on hand to month end March 1993, per Regional Disability Benefit Centre are shown in Table 1.

Total number of decisions does not equal the total number of clearances due to the fact that decisons does not take account of claims withdrawn or defective.

The outstanding figure includes claims that have been to an adjudication officer who has asked for further evidence before a decision can be made and also includes claims where the adjudication officer has made a decision but the decision has not as yet been recorded on the DLA computer system.

A breakdown of awards by rate is in Table 2.

Reviews

Disability Living Allowance reviews are dealt with by the Disability Living Allowance Unit at Blackpool.

It is only possible to provide the number of review requests received picking up the Disability Benefit Centre where the 1st tier decision was taken at disproportionate cost. This information is available once a decision is given on the request for a review.

Reviews can be made within three months of the decision on the claim on any grounds, these are shown at (a).

Reviews made outwith the three month period can only be accepted where there are particular grounds for review, these are shown at (b).

As at Month end March 1993 the total number of requests for review of a Disability Living Allowance 1st tier decisions, cleared and outstanding were as follows:

	Received	Cleared	Outstanding
(a) Review within three months	79,088	40,404	38,684
(b) Review outwith three months	17,714	6,275	11,439
TOTAL	96,802	46,679	50,123

List of various outcomes of DLA reviews, relating to 1st tier decision made at each of the DBCs are shown in Table 3.

Performance for month of March 1993

Performance on DLA is measured in terms of x per cent. of cases cleared in y days and it is therefore not possible to state an average processing time for claims and reviews on the new Benefit.

The majority (71 per cent.) of New DLA claims were cleared in 30 days (against a Secretary of State target of 60 per cent. in 30 days).

The majority (85 per cent.) of Special Rules claims were cleared in 10 days.

29 per cent. of reviews (within 3 months) were cleared in 75 days.

51 per cent. of reviews (outwith 3 months) were cleared in 75 days.

Reviews are being actively targeted with additional resources being deployed and clearing rates are increasing.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Social Fund

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) in how many cases in each Benefit Agency district in Scotland in the most recent period for which data are available, an application for (a) community care grant and (b) social fund loan, met the criteria but was refused because of budgetary constraints;

(2) how many applications for help from the social fund for budgetary loans and crisis loans were refused on the grounds of inability to pay; and what that was as a proportion of the total number of (a) loan applications and (b) loan refusals for each year since April 1988 for each of the Benefit Agency districts in Scotland.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Henry McLeish, dated 29 April 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsiblity to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your two recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking (i) in how many cases in each Benefit Agency District in Scotland in the most recent period for which data is available, an application for (a) community care grant and (b) social fund loan, met the criteria but was refused because of budgetary constraints and (ii) how many applications for help from the Social Fund for budgetary loans and crisis loans were refused on the grounds of inability to pay; and what that was as a proportion of the total number of (a) loan applications and (b) loan refusals for each year since April 1988 for each of the Benefit Agency Districts in Scotland.

Numbers of applications refused on the grounds of insufficient priority by each of the Scottish Districts in the period 1 April 1992 to 31 March 1993 are given in Annex A.

In your second question, you seek information for each year since April 1988 for each of the BA Districts in Scotland. This information, which is attached at Annex B, is only available in this form from April 1991 when the Benefits Agency was created and local offices grouped into Districts. For the previous financial year 1990-1991 the information is available on the basis of the then existing DSS local office network. I regret that this information is not available for the previous financial years.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this letter will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Income Support

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many people were claiming income support in Scotland for the most recent date for which figures are available; and what estimate he has made of the total number of partners and dependants of those claimants;

(2) if he will give the most recently available figure for the income support live load in each of his Department's offices, and by each Benefit Agency district, in Scotland.

Mr. Burt: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Henry McLeish, dated 29 April 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking, how many people were claiming Income Support in Scotland for the most recent date for which figures are available; and what estimate he has made of the total number of partners and dependants of those claimants.

You also ask, if he will give the most recently available figure for the Income Support live load in each of his Department's offices, and by each Benefits Agency district, in Scotland.

The information is not available in the format you requested and some of it is only available at a disproportionate cost. This is because statistics relate to the number of Income Support recipients rather than the number of claims.

Information about the numbers of partners and dependants of people claiming Income Support is not routinely collected. However, estimates of the numbers of partners and dependants of Income Support recipients are available from the Income Support Annual Statistical Enquiry (ASE). This is a point in time survey based on a one per cent sample of all people in receipt of Income Support.

The latest information from the ASE relates to May 1991. The estimates from this were 487,000 recipients, 69,000 partners and 249,000 dependants in Scotland.

I have appended the information relating to the Income Support live load per office and district as requested. This information is based on the Management Information Statistics as at 28 February 1993.

I hope this reply is helpful. A copy of this letter will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

WALES

European Community Funding

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the estimated total of European regional development fund grants allocated to Wales for the financial year 1993-94, analysed by county; and if he will make it his policy that funding from this source will be treated as additional money by his Department, in line with his additionality agreement between Her Majesty's Government and the EC Commission.

Mr. David Hunt: ERDF is allocated to individual structural fund programmes on a calendar year basis. In 1992 and 1993 the following allocations were made to Wales:

£ million

	1992	1993
Industrial South Wales	21·88	32·82
Dyfed, Gwynedd, Powys	11·90	11·08
Clwyd	7·82	11·66
RECHAR	13·46	6·39
LEADER	0·543	0·543

Figures are based on an exchange rate of £1 = 1·435 ecu

Negotiations about the European Commission's ERDF allocation to Wales for 1994 onwards are underway.

The former Secretary of State for Trade and Industry announced in February 1992 the new public expenditure arrangements to ensure that additionality of ERDF grants would be fully transparent. With effect from 1 April 1993 onwards full additional expenditure cover is being provided for all ERDF capital receipts and for all projects approved under the RECHAR programme from 1 April 1992.

Ogwr and Vale of Glamorgan

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the electorate of each community council in the boroughs of Ogwr and the Vale of Glamorgan;

(2) how many community councils in (a) Ogwr and (b) the Vale of Glamorgan have electorates with fewer than 1,700 voters;

(3) how many community councils in (a) Ogwr and (b) the Vale of Glamorgan have electorates of (i) fewer than 4,000, (ii) fewer than 3,500, (iii) fewer than 3,000, (iv) fewer than 2,500, (v) fewer than 2,000, (vi) fewer than 1,500 and (vii) fewer than 1,000.

Mr. David Hunt: This information is not held centrally.

Water Disconnections

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number of water disconnections in Wales in (a) 1990-91 and (b) 1991-92.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information required cannot be given in the form requested.

The number of disconnections—domestic and non-domestic—in the water supply areas of Dwr Cymru Cyf, Chester Waterworks Company and Wrexham and East Denbighshire Water Company in 1990-91 and 1991-92 were 1,397 and 3,034 respectively.

Cancer Treatment

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to establish a cancer treatment centre for north Wales patients; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The provision of a cancer treatment centre in north Wales is the subject of an appraisal by Touche Ross. My right hon. Friend will make an announcement in due course.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment has been made of the adequacy of the number of medical house doctors and senior house officers in hospital trusts to cope with seriously ill patients under treatment by chemotherapy and requiring hospital admission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This is a matter for the national health service trust concerned to assess.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cancer patients from north Wales travel (a) to the Christie hospital, Manchester and (b) to Clatterbridge hospital, Wirral for treatment in each year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on the number of cancer patients who travel from north Wales to English hospitals for treatment is not held centrally. However, the Christie hospital NHS trust and Clatterbridge centre for oncology report the following number of episodes (where an episode is the necessary sequence of treatment for one patient):

Christie NHS Trust[1]	Clatterbridge[2]
417	771

[1] Actual completed episodes 1991-92
[2] Projected 1992-93 episodes

Hospital Medical Units

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidance is given to general practitioners as to where to refer patients in the event of the temporary closure of hospital medical units; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In such circumstances the decision to refer is a matter for the judgment of individual general practitioners, who should be informed of closures by the local family health services authority. If a bed bureau is in operation, GPs would normally contact the bureau who in turn would arrange admission to an appropriate alternative unit. In the absence of a bed bureau arrangement, GPs would contact the nearest alternative local unit; and in the event of difficulties in admission the commissioning health authority would advise.

Housing

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many dwellings were (a) started, (b) under construction and (c) completed in (i) 1974, (ii) 1979, (iii) 1984, (iv) 1989 and (v) 1990, distinguishing between private sector, housing association, local authority and total dwellings.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is given in the table.

House building activity by tenure

(a) Dwellings started
Private sector	5,948	7,586	5,608	9,938	7,654

Source: As supplied on local authority returns.
[1] Excluding acquisitions, rehabilitations and hostel bedspaces.
[2] Including new towns' and Government Departments' dwellings not elsewhere listed.

Trust Hospitals

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those trust hospitals in Wales where the hospital medical unit has been closed to general practitioner admission.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: All hospitals, whether NHS trust or directly managed units, may need to implement temporary closures for a variety of reasons. In Wales, four NHS trusts have had to do this:

Llandough Hospital NHS Trust
(3 April, 12 hours; 19 April, 6 hours; 20 April, 6 hours)
Llanelli Dinefwr NHS Trust
(7 April, 24 hours; 25 April, 24 hours)
Wrexham Maelor NHS Trust
(17/18 April, 48 hours)
Carmarthen and District NHS Trust
(19 April)

On each occasion arrangements were made to admit emergency patients to the nearest alternative appropriate hospital.

Surgery Deaths

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish statistics of surgery death rates in hospitals in Wales in the latest available year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Health authorities and general practitioner fund holders contract with provider units for health services to meet the health needs of their resident populations and patients.

In deciding their choice of provider units, health authorities and general practitioner fund holders will consider the quality of services provided, their cost and their volume.

Commissioners will consider a range of quality indicators, including outcome measures where they are available. Crude death rates by hospital are extremely misleading when taken in isolation. Even when the rates are standardised by age, sex and case mix, there may be other factors which make direct comparison inappropriate. Information on death rates by social condition is not generally available and standardisation by age alone would lead to misleading comparisons.

However, there are a number of activities taking place which critically examine death rates following surgery within a hospital, including the procedures for post-mortems, medical audit and the national confidential inquiry into perioperative deaths.

No specific guidance to health authorities and national health service trusts has been issued, or is proposed, on variations in death rates. I have not held discussions with health authorities and national health service trusts on the matter.

Health authorities and national health service trusts are encouraged to develop and make the maximum use of quality indicators and other information available.

League tables on hospital performance, based around patients charter standards, will be published in 1994. I have not received any representations on the inclusion of death rates in hospital league tables.

SCOTLAND

Non-emergency Hospital Treatment

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken to ensure that, for non-emergency hospital treatments, patients of general practitioner fund holders and non-fund holders will have equally speedy access.

Mr. Stewart: The Government's framework for the GP fund holding scheme seeks to maintain a proper balance between providing GP fund holders with an appropriate degree of flexibility in the use of their fund to provide benefits for their patients, and preserving the principle of equality of access to health care for all NHS patients. GP fund holders, in providing care themselves or in setting contracts with other providers, will be able to develop improved stndards in the quality of care for their patients provided as a consequence they do not directly disadvantage NHS patients from other practices.

Water Privatisation

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretry of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the technical feasibility study of the privatisation of water and sewage services in Scotland.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 26 April 1993]: A study of possible new structures for the water and sewerage services was commissioned from Quayle Munro Ltd. last summer. The study informed the consultation paper "Investing For Our Future", which made it clear that in the light of the advice available to them the Government were satisfied that privatisation and the other options outlined could be successfully achieved.

DEFENCE

European Fighter Aircraft

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on developments in the EFA programme.

Mr. Aitken: Technical development of Eurofighter 2000 is proceeding and the first flight is expected this year. Reorientation of the project, in line with the agreement reached in Brussels on 10 December last year by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence and his German, Italian and Spanish counterparts, is also well advanced.

Equipment Exhibition

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who will be opening the Royal Navy and British Army equipment exhibition in September.

Mr. Aitken: My right hon. and learned Friend hopes to open the exhibition himself.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what categories of guests will be invited to the Royal Navy and British Army equipment exhibition.

Mr. Aitken: Invitations to attend RN and BAEE are extended to appropriate overseas Government officials and industrialists, and members of the United Kingdom national and technical press.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated cost of the Royal Navy and British Army equipment exhibition at Aldershot from 5 to 10 September.

Mr. Aitken: The cost of the exhibition will not be known until the list of participants has been finalised. All direct costs will, however, be recovered from participating companies.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many visitors are expected at the Royal Navy and British Army equipment exhibition in Aldershot between 5 and 10 September.

Mr. Aitken: Based on previous years' attendance at the separate Royal Navy and British Army equipment exhibitions, 20,000 visitors are expected to attend between 5 and 10 September.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what reports he has received from the Cheshire Regiment detailing Croatian Army attacks on Muslim civilians in Vitez, Jadlenica and surrounding villages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Information reported by United Nations protection force troops is passed through the United Nations chain of command, ultimately to the Security Council. As a member of the Security Council the United Kingdom receives information reported by all contributors to UNPROFOR, not only the United Kingdom battalion group.

Washington Visit

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what matters he discussed with the United States Administration, and what decisions were made, during his recent visit to Washington.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: During his recent visit to the United States, my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence discussed a wide range of issues including the crisis in the former Yugoslavia.

Devonport Dockyard

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what advice was given to his Department by Coopers and Lybrand concerning the future of Devonport dockyard should it fail to win the refitting work for the Trident submarines.

Mr. Aitken: Advice provided to my Department by Coopers and Lybrand on future warship refitting arrangements is commercially confidential.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made of Devonport Management Ltd.'s business plan as either a nuclear or non-nuclear dockyard which was submitted to his Department on 9 March.

Mr. Aitken: Both dockyard contractors have, at my Department's request, submitted outline business plans against the possibility that the dockyard each manages was to be the designated nuclear dockyard or a non-nuclear dockyard. These plans have been discussed at clarification meetings with the respective contractors, and are being taken into account in my Department's consideration of future warship refitting arrangements. The plans are commercially confidential, but, as I told the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown) on 2 April (Official Report, column 507), we will release as much information as possible, subject to the constraints of commercial confidentiality and security once we have announced our proposals to the House.

Vessels (Running Costs)

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the annual running costs to the Royal Navy of (a) an Invincible class carrier, (b) a type 42 destroyer, (c) a type 21 frigate, (d) a type 22 frigate (batch 1), (e) a type 22 frigate (batch 2 and batch 3), (f) a type 23 frigate, (g) an S Clan submarine, (h) a T Class submarine, (i) an Upholder class submarine, (j) a Hunt class MCMV and (k) a Sandown class MCMV.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The annual running costs for individual vessels within a class will vary according to the vessel's operating and maintenance programme. Average annual running costs however, for each of the classes of ship listed for 1991-92, the latest year for which information is available, based on ships' activities over the past six years, are as follows:

Vessel	[1] £ million
(a) Invincible class carrier	26·0
(b) Type 42 destroyer	16·5
(c) Type 21 frigate	10·0
(d) Type 22 frigate (batch 1)	12·5
(e) Type 22 frigate (batch 2 and batch 3)	17·0
(f) Type 23 frigate	[2]—
(g) 'S' Class submarine	19·5
(h) 'T' Class submarine	10·5
(i) Upholder class submarine	2·0
(j) Hunt class MCMV	2·5
(k) Sandown class MCMV	[2]—

[1] Figures rounded to the nearest half million.
[2] Not available.

Royal Logistics Corps

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many men and women were transferred to the new Royal Logistics Corps on its formation from each of the other corps involved in the amalgamation.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: With the formation of the Royal Logistics Corps on 5 April 1993, a total of 20,642 military personnel were transferred to the new corps from the corps involved in the amalgamation. The total figure can be broken down as follows:

	Officers		Other ranks
	Men	Women	Men	Women
Royal Corps of Transport	880	42	7,362	661
Royal Army Ordnance Corps	935	39	4,204	360
Royal Pioneer Corps	100	(nil)	1,151	(nil)
Army Catering Corps	151	11	3,577	458
Postal and Courier Service of the Corps of Royal Engineers	56	2	469	184
Sub-total	2,122	94	16,763	1,663

Long-term Costings

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has approved his Department's long-term costings for the financial year 1993-94.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My Department's spending plans for the financial year 1993-94 were published in the class I supply estimates (HC495-I), presented to Parliament on 9 March 1993. Further details will be contained in the 1993 "Statement on the Defence Estimates".

Telecommunications Aerials

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what applications he has received from private telecommunications companies to erect aerials on Templeton airfield, Pembrokeshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: There have been no applications from private telecommunications companies to erect aerials on Templeton airfield.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many telecommunications aerials have been erected on MOD property by private telecommunications companies primarily for their own use.

Mr. Aitken: The information is not held centrally and cannot be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what planning procedures are required of private telecommunications companies wishing to erect aerials on MOD property.

Mr. Aitken: A planning application should proceed in accordance with the Town and Country Planning Act 1990.

Defence Operational Analysis Centre

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the chief executive of the Defence Operational Analysis Centre in 1993-94.

Mr. Aitken: The chief executive of the Defence Operational Analysis Centre at West Byfleet is responsible for providing the Ministry of Defence with advice on formulation of defence policy, military operational capability and future equipment requirements, this advice being derived from operational analysis studies and field trials. He has been set the following challenging key performance targets for 1993-94:

Service to Customers

(a) To complete 85 per cent. of the planned studies for customers within agreed timescales, and to seek progressive improvements in future years.

(b) To complete 80 per cent. of the planned studies for customers within planned cost, and to seek progressive improvements in future years.

(c) To complete 75 per cent. of studies within agreed time and cost.

(d) To subject 100 per cent. of new major studies to a formal quality process, which will require peer review and measures of customer satisfaction, and to evalute a "total quality target" for studies for implementation in future years.

(e) To respond to 85 per cent. of request from customers for unplanned urgent advice within timescales negotiated at the outset, and to seek progressive improvements in future years.

Managment Systems

(f) To implement a full cost accounting system and publish auditable accruals based accounts.

Efficiency

(g) In 1993-94 and 1994-95, to increase overall efficiency by 2 per cent. and 3 per cent. respectively. A programme of market testing declared in the 1993-94 business plan is included.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the number of brains of calves aged under six months which are entering the food chain; and what steps are taken to ensure that these animals have not been fed contaminated offal.

Mr. Soames: The feeding of ruminant derived protein to all cattle and other ruminants has been banned since July 1988.

There is no scientific justification for banning the use of brains from calves under six months of age because of BSE; this judgment has been supported by the spongiform encephalopathy advisory committee and by international bodies such as the European Commission and the Office International Dee Epizooties. Nevertheless, under the meat products and spreadable fish products regulations 1984, brain may not be used in uncooked meat products nor may it be counted as meat in cooked products. Its use in practice, therefore, is thought to be minimal.

ADAS

Mr. Marland: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what performance targets he has set for the ADAS in 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I have decided that the financial and efficiency targets for ADAS for 1993-94 will be:

Recovery of its full economic costs, through charges to its customers, including the Departments (MAFF and the Welsh Office). In the case of certain charged advisory services, ADAS will recover 52 per cent. of its costs from charges to the ultimate beneficiaries and the remainder will be met by the Departments. In other cases ADAS will recover the full costs from the customer;

An overall efficiency improvement of at least 2 per cent. measured by the average cost in real terms per direct hour charged to contracts;

A reduction of at least 3 per cent. in the average time taken to collect debts due to ADAS from non-Departmental customers;

The targets for the delivery and quality of service by ADAS will be:

90 per cent. of research and development project milestones to be met;

Achieving improvements in customer satisfaction, as evidenced in ADAS surveys.

Wool Guarantee

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has for the operation of the wool guarantee in the 1993 clip year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Clause 48 of the Agriculture Bill will terminate the wool guarantee—by removing "wool" from the schedule to the Agriculture Act 1957 which lists those products which qualify for a guarantee—with effect from enactment of that Bill. The Government have, however, consistently made clear their intention that the guarantee should end on 30 April 1993—the last day of the 1992 wool clip year. To ensure that this timetable is met, Agriculture Ministers have today laid an affirmative resolution order in both Houses of Parliament to revoke the British Wool (Guaranteed Prices) Order 1955, SI 1955/487 as amended by SI 1976/602. This order has been the subject of consultation with producers' representatives.

The order removes the requirement on Ministers annually to fix a guaranteed price for wool. By avoiding the substantial disruption which could have occurred had Ministers been required to fix a guarantee for the interim period between 1 May and subsequent enactment of the Bill, this action will ensure greater order and certainty both for producers and the industry. Retention of the guarantee for merely part of a clip year would not have been consistent with the objective of the mechanism, which was to stabilise the return from wool over time rather than to provide short-term producer support.

The order does not override the need for primary legislation to amend the Agriculture Act 1957 to terminate the operation of the guarantee definitively. This remains the function of clause 48 of the Agriculture Bill.

The Government's commitment to sheep producers and the wool industry remains firm. I am convinced that, having achieved financial responsibility for its own affairs, the industry will respond positively to this new situation and will take advantage of the opportunities which it will provide.

Grants and Subsidies

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what sums were paid out by each of his divisional offices for each (a) agricultural subsidy scheme and (b) grant scheme available to farmers in 1992; how many agreements were entered into for each grant scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry [pursuant to his reply 8 March 1993, columns 466-67]: The available information requested is set out in the table, based on the new structure of regional service centres which came into effect on 1 April 1992. The further information requested could only be obtained at disproportionate cost:

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

China

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 26 April, Official Report, column 289-90, on Lord Howe's visit to China, whether he met representatives of (a) the Chinese Family Planning Association and (b) the Chinese State Family Planning Commission; what questions were raised; and what response was received.

Mr. Goodlad: A wide range of issues including questions related to reducing China's population growth were raised with various organisations during Lord Howe's visit. In the time available it was not practicable to call on the specific bodies to which the hon. Gentleman refers.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the latest situation concerning human rights in Tibet; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: We are aware through our contacts with Amnesty International and other non-governmental organisations, of reports of human rights abuses in Tibet and elsewhere in China. We deplore such abuses and have made our concerns clear to the Chinese authorities on a number of recent occasions. EC ambassadors in Peking are considering a visit to Tibet in May, in the course of which they can be expected to raise a number of issues of concern.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government raised the issue of Chinese coercive population control at the UN Commission on Human Rights earlier this year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: Although we did not raise this specific issue at the recent session of the UN Commission of Human Rights in Geneva, we and our EC partners did introduce a resolution calling on the Chinese authorities to guarantee full respect for human rights throughout China in keeping with their international obligations under the UN charter. Unfortunately, this was defeated by a narrow majority by a procedural "no-action" motion.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps were taken to raise the issue of Chinese coercive population control at the meeting with Chinese embassy officials in London on 4 March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: A number of issues of concern, including that of forced abortion, were raised by officials with a member of the Chinese embassy on 4 March. We shall continue to raise such issues with the Chinese authorities at every appropriate opportunity.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 26 April, Official Report, column 289-90 on Lord Howe's visit to China, when questions relating to reducing China's population growth were raised with the Chinese authorities during the visit; what response was received; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: This issue was raised by my right hon. noble and learned Friend Lord Howe's delegation with Fu Hao of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress on 4 December. An explanation of China's family planning policies was given by the Chinese side. When the report of the visit is completed, copies will be laid in the Library of the House.

Angola

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the United Kingdom is taking to influence South African policy with regard to her nationals funding and fighting with UNITA in Angola.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We were actively involved in the preparation of UN Security Council Resolution 804 of 29 January 1993 which inter alia urges all member states to take all necessary steps to stop any direct or indirent military or para-military interference from their territories in Angola. There are no restrictions in international law on the supply of finance to UNITA. We have seen no evidence of such funding from South Africa.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken by the British ambassador to the United Nations to ensure that the United Nations mandate in Angola is successfully completed.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The mandate of the United Nations Angola verification mission (UNAVEM) was to monitor the pre-election ceasefire in Angola and verify the conduct of the country's first ever democratic elections in September 1992. Since UNITA's rejection of the results of the elections and the subsequent return to civil war in Angola, UNAVEM has, with the support of the Security Council, found itself in the role of mediator between the two sides. Talks between them under United Nations auspices are currently taking place in Abidjan.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to encourage recognition of the Government of Angola (a) by the United States of America and (b) by other Governments.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Recognition of the Government of Angola is a matter for independent decision by sovereign states, including the United States of America. The question has been discussed during routine bilateral exchanges between the United Kingdom and the United States.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to ensure that the ban on supplying arms to Angola is being observed, with particular reference to the supply of South African arms to UNITA.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Under the Bicesse peace accords of May 1991 the United States and former Soviet Union undertook to end supplies of lethal material to any Angolan party and to encourage other countries to do likewise.

We fully support United Nations Security Council resolution 804 of 29 January 1993 which calls on member states to respect this article of the accords. We accept South African Government assurances that it is not supplying UNITA and will seek to prevent any illegal arms supplies to Angola.

South Africa

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 27 April, for how long the senior police officer is likely to be in South Africa to assist with the investigation into the assassination of Chris Hani; what is the rank of the officer in question; and if he will also be reporting to the United Kingdom authorities on his investigations.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Commander George Churchill-Coleman is expected to be in South African for approximately six weeks, but the ultimate duration of his stay will depend on how long the investigation into the murder of Chris Hani lasts. He will report directly to the Attorney-General of the Transvaal.

Turkey

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations the British Government have made concerning human rights violations against Kurdish people in Turkey.

Mr. Garel-Jones: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon) on 28 April at column 440.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the work undertaken to date and the achievements of the United Nations inter-agency committee on sustainable development since its establishment.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The inter-agency committee on sustainable development held its first meeting in New York from 23 to 25 March. The committee agreed an approach for the allocation and sharing of responsibilities and for improved co-ordination in the implementation of Agenda 21 by the UN system; reviewed subsidiary bodies; discussed the financing needs of the UN system for activities mandated under Agenda 21; assessed new and existing reporting requirements related to Agenda 21 and made recommendations for their streamlining; and discussed the current policy issues in the follow-up to Agenda 21 which would need to be addressed by the administrative committee on co-ordination.

Economic and Social Committee

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how the United Kingdom is represented on the Economic and Social Committee of the United Nations; and what environmental initiatives have been taken by ECOSOC since 1990.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom has been a member of the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations (ECOSOC) since 1946. We were re-elected to serve a further four-year term at the 1992 General Assembly.

In February 1993 ECOSOC established the Commission for Sustainable Development which will review progress in implementing the agreements reached at the United Nations conference on environment and development in Rio in June 1992. Since 1990 ECOSOC has passed a number of resolutions on environmental issues which are listed in the following official UN documents:

Report of the Economic and Social Council for the year 1990;

Report of the Economic and Social Council for the year 1991;

Report of the Economic and Social Council (preliminary version A/47/3 of 21 September 1992)

Resolutions and decisions adopted by the Economic and Social Council at its Organisational Session for 1993 E/1993/INF/2.

These can be found in the Library of the House.

Adriatic Ship Diversions

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a table showing the countries of registration and ownership, and the nature of the cargo, of the vessels diverted to date by North Atlantic Treaty Organisation and Western European Union ships in the Adriatic.

Mr. Garel-Jones: From 22 November 1992 to 21 April 1993 NATO and Western European Union ships in the Adriatic challenged a total of 9,396 vessels, of which 599 were boarded and 137 diverted for closer inspection. We are investigating with the relevant authorities whether a list of the countries of registration and ownership of the diverted vessels, and of the cargoes carried by them, is available for publication.

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the Government's policy as regards the forthcoming non-proliferation treaty preparatory committee meeting.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The first preparatory committee will chiefly be concerned with procedural and administrative matters relating to the 1995 non-proliferation treaty extension and review conference. Our policy is to secure the indefinite extension of the treaty in 1995.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 223

SESSION 1992–93

19th April, 1993—30th April, 1993

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
